The Government have tried to muzzle Parliament using a disgraceful guillotine motion, which denies the House the right to vote individually on Government amendments. We are not allowed to take issue with Government amendments, to select between them or to move our own amendments. If the many countries around the world that so admire British democracy were to learn of the way in which we conduct our proceedings in this place—a Government with a substantial majority have forced through an obnoxious measure affecting disabled people by the use of a guillotine—they would be quite shocked. They would wonder what kind of Parliament we have.

Nevertheless, the voice of Parliament has been heard. It is clear that there is grave concern on both sides of the House about the damage the Government are doing to our welfare system, our national insurance system and to the interests of some very vulnerable people in this country. We have the good fortune to have a two-Chamber legislature in this country, and we all hope that the business that this House has so unfortunately and dramatically left unfinished this afternoon will be taken up in another place and that the right decisions will be made.

It now falls to me to speak to new clause 13 and amendments Nos. 83, 80 and 81 in my name and those of my hon. Friends. New clause 13 is in some ways a summation of the Conservative Opposition's views on the Government's stakeholder pension proposals, so it might be sensible if I were to address that last, and proceed to it by dealing first with the other amendments.

Amendment No. 80 deals with the vital matter of the advice that people need when they make the decision, which is crucial to their future, as to whether they should invest in a pension, and if so, what kind of pension. The Government have clearly effected an amusing U-turn on that matter.

Mr. John Bercow (Buckingham): Does my hon. Friend agree that it is unfortunate that, as he begins to address a series of important matters, the Secretary of State has left the Chamber? Does my hon. Friend think that the right hon. Gentleman has done so in something of a huff?

Mr. Davies: If the right hon. Gentleman has any human feelings—I am sure that he has—he must be feeling intensely embarrassed. As my hon. Friend knows, when one feels intensely embarrassed and one has got oneself and one's party into a terrible mess, one tends to avoid other human company, particularly in places as public as the Chamber. [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We cannot have all this arguing and shouting across the Floor of the Chamber.

Mr. Davies: We can all feel some sympathy for the Secretary of State's wish to hide his face at this juncture.

Kali Mountford: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish) rose—

Mr. Davies: I shall be happy to give way to the hon. Gentleman in a moment, but the hon. Lady, who played such a charming part in our Committee proceedings, caught my eye first.

Kali Mountford: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way—he is always courteous. Will he describe to the House the embarrassment that the hon. Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith), the shadow Secretary of State, must also be suffering?

Mr. Davies: I have no idea to what the hon. Lady is referring. No Conservative Member is suffering embarrassment about this afternoon's proceedings; far from it. There is no gloating, because this is an important matter and we have not succeeded in securing the necessary protection for the interests of disabled people, but our attitude is clearly far from being one of embarrassment. I will now give way to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) if he still wants to intervene.

Mr. Bennett: It seems odd that Conservative Members are making a fuss about my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State leaving the Chamber when the hon. Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith) did exactly the same. Obviously, he had decided that this is not a key issue.

Mr. Davies: The hon. Gentleman not only gives me the opportunity but almost obliges me to make a point that I did not intend to make because I do not want to add to the Secretary of State's discomfort at a difficult moment for him. However, in the light of the hon. Gentleman's intervention, I must remind the House—we were all here and witnessed it—that my hon. Friend the Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith) was here throughout the proceedings that lasted from Monday night until Tuesday morning. He may have left, as I did, for a few minutes at a time for particular reasons, but he was here for almost 14 hours, as many of us were. The Secretary of State managed four minutes in the Chamber, so embarrassed was he already at the growing storm created by his clumsy and insensitive handling of the matter.

I must return to the important issue of advice. Labour Members sprung up to try to intervene on my speech and divert me from my course because, as I said, the Government have performed a hilarious U-turn on the matter. I would be the last person to try to take advantage of someone who had honestly changed their mind, provided they had the straightforwardness and honesty to say so and, if carrying out public responsibilities—as the Government self-evidently are—to explain to the House and the public why they have changed their mind. Instead, we have had a 180 deg U-turn on advice, with the Government pretending that it has not been a U-turn.

I shall read one or two quotations to make it absolutely plain how the Government's position on advice has changed so much. I shall start with the Green Paper, "A New Contract for Welfare: Partnership in Pensions", which the Government produced as recently as December 1998—the document that we have had occasion to refer to in our proceedings several times, and which I do not doubt that we shall have to refer to again. On page 56, at paragraph 48, it says:

"We intend to reduce, as far as possible, the need for individuals to seek financial advice when they consider joining a stakeholder pension scheme."

That was very plain, and it is clear that the Minister of State continued in that frame of mind for at least another few months because, on 30 January, he was quoted in The Daily Telegraph as saying:

"we can enable more people to make a reasonable decision about joining a pension scheme without the need for detailed individual advice."

Once we got into Committee, I made it plain to the Minister that it was thoroughly irresponsible to think of people taking a decision on a matter as important as their pension without detailed individual financial advice. I also made it plain to him that the Government, by their ham-handedness and incompetence, had introduced into pensions a degree of gratuitous complexity, fragmentation and detail, which made it even more necessary for people to seek advice.

The Minister obviously took notice of those points, because he started subtly to nuance his position and then began to do a complete volte-face. For example, in Committee he said exactly the opposite of what he had told The Daily Telegraph only two months before. He said:

"It is vital that people can seek financial advice when they consider joining a pension scheme and that they will receive good and accurate advice."—[Official Report, Standing Committee D, 9 March 1999; c. 113.]

I quite agree with him about that. By 27 April, his boss, the Secretary of State, whom I mentioned just now in a different context, said:

"Certainly on something like a pension, which is more important than buying a house,"— he is right about that—

"there has got to be some provision for advice".

Recently, the Minister of State gave a written answer to my hon. Friend the shadow Secretary of State for Social Security, in which he said:

"Appropriate information and advice for those who need it will be an important part of the decision-making process for individuals considering a stakeholder pension scheme."—[Official Report, 10 May 1999; Vol. 331, c. 53.]

Therefore it is absolutely plain that the Government have fundamentally changed their mind. I am glad that they have changed their mind, but I wish that they had had the straightforwardness, and perhaps the modesty—not a quality that has been pre-eminent in the present Government—to admit that they were wrong in the first place, and that they have come round.

[Mr. Davies]

I emphasise, as I did in Committee—causing the Government to change their mind—that it is now much more problematic than it ever has been for people on modest or small earnings to decide whether they should save for a pension at all. I have previously set out in the House, my calculation that one needs to save at least £80,000 in one's pension scheme before the annuity that one would get at the age of 60 will equal the minimum income guarantee that the Government have introduced for pensioners—which is means-tested—plus the other means-tested benefits: housing benefit, council tax relief and so on. If one did have £80,000, one would have an annuity exactly equal to what one would have got if one had never saved at all, and one would have lost £80,000 of consumption in the course of one's life. That means that one's family and oneself would have gone without a lot of things that everyone might have enjoyed.

The threshold is much higher than £80,000 and is growing all the time as it is bound to, not least because of the Government's foolish decision to promise that the minimum income guarantee will be indexed to earnings and will rise with them. The state retirement pension rises in line with prices. That is another thoroughly irresponsible decision and one which is deeply destructive of the principle of national insurance. The Government are basically saying that they will review and revalue a means-tested payment for which no one has contributed at a higher rate than payments for which people have contributed through the national insurance system.

Mr. Webb: I bring the hon. Gentleman back to amendment No. 80, which he started to describe. I accept that it is desirable for advice to be available and that the giving of advice should be encouraged, but, as I read it, amendment No. 80 makes it compulsory to take advice. Is that his intention and should people be forced to take advice, even if they are well informed and do not need it?

Mr. Davies: Amendment No. 80 makes taking advice compulsory in the sense that, as at present, anyone who is selling a pension must make sure that the sale is appropriate, that the purchaser has received advice and that someone has taken a view on whether the pension is appropriate. People can simply walk into a life office and buy a pension, as long as the office is convinced that they have taken independent advice. However, it is up to those who are selling pensions to know their customers and to determine that what they are selling is appropriate. That is the basis of the rules applied by the financial regulators.

The Minister of State, Department of Social Security (Mr. Stephen Timms): The hon. Gentleman is making an interesting case, and I look forward to responding to it. Does he take the view that people joining occupational pension schemes should also take advice?

Mr. Davies: I take the view that trustees of occupational pension schemes must get it quite clear in their own minds, as part of their fiduciary responsibility to their pensioners, that the product that is being sold is appropriate. By definition, an employer-only contribution scheme is a good deal for the pensioner because it involves him receiving something that he would not otherwise receive. If an employee is also making contributions, the trustees clearly have a fundamental duty to make sure that the scheme is a good deal for the pensioners involved.

There is protection, and we want to make sure that exactly the same kind of protection exists in stakeholder pension schemes. We want to make sure that that fundamental principle is safeguarded when employers provide a pension facility or when the pensions industry provides a pension, in the stakeholder context or in any other context.

Mrs. Browning: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Davies: Yes, but we have little time at our disposal. This is the last intervention that I will take.

Mrs. Browning: People on lower incomes, who the Government say are their targets for such pensions, could have earnings from more than one part-time job. Is not it crucial that they receive the right advice about their pension input?

Mr. Davies: It is indeed important that those people receive advice about pension input. Even if the earnings from their individual jobs are below the lower earnings limit, the sum of their earnings may be such that it would not make sense, in the light of this extension of means-testing, for them to make any provision for themselves at all. That position is sad and ironic—it is not one that we would have wanted to get into, but, unfortunately, it is one into which the Government are putting an ever-wider range of our citizens. That is the great problem—they still have not seen that one, even though they appear to have accepted the arguments about advice in principle.

I set out a number of other specific cases in our pensions debate last week. People obviously need complex, individual, targeted and tailored advice. For example, someone earning £9,000, who would be on the borderline for the proposed state second pension, would need advice on whether to stay in that scheme. People earning slightly more than £9,000 would also need advice on whether to stay with that scheme and on where the cut-off point comes. They would need advice on whether to join an occupational pension scheme or whether to take a personal or a stakeholder pension. These are complicated issues and the specifics of the individual must be taken into account. Generalised answers cannot be given. A young person expecting to change jobs or to become self-employed might well do much better to opt for a money purchase scheme rather than a final salary scheme, while someone expecting to stay for a long time might do better to opt for a final salary scheme.

Higher up the income scale—the scale from, say, £9,000 to £20,000, £25,000 or £30,000, which has been targeted for the purpose of stakeholder pensions—complicated individual decisions must still be made. People must ask themselves whether they should take out a personal pension or a stakeholder pension. They may already have a personal pension with costs that are apparently higher—but those costs may have been paid at the outset. In terms of the marginal, or incremental, costs, a personal pension may be a much better option than a stakeholder pension.

All those decisions require professional advice—actuarial advice. It is monstrous of the Government to suggest, as they have in a number of recent statements, that it is satisfactory for people to be left to pay for that advice themselves. It is cruel and cynical to tell someone with an income of £9,000 a year to consult an actuary or accountant: the cost of such professional advice would almost certainly enter into the equation, and influence the decision about whether the person should save for a pension at all.

If the advice is not given, however, two things will happen. The person concerned may well be wasting his or her money—and it is particularly sad if someone with low earnings is led by the Government into wasting his or her hard-earned money. Moreover, employers who, if the Bill ever becomes law, may be forced to designate a pension scheme, and the pension companies that might provide the schemes, may be open to a charge of mis-selling unless the advice is provided.

Amendment No.80 proposes that, before a pension is sold, the employer must ensure that the person concerned has been properly advised. Employers may sometimes be able to discharge the responsibility themselves by ensuring that independent advice is available, but such a responsibility would impose an unreasonable burden and an unreasonable cost on smaller employers. Trade unions and similar bodies might be able to help, and we would welcome that; but we insist that advice should be given, and that the principle currently applying in the pensions market should apply in this instance.

The purpose of those rules in the pensions market is to prevent further mis-selling. As we all recognise, we had a bad mis-selling scandal in the 1980s, and I hope that we have learned some lessons from it. Until a couple of months ago, the Government did not appear to have learned any lessons, but they have learned one lesson now: they know that there will be terrible mis-selling—mis-selling on an unprecedented scale—unless the issue of advice is dealt with properly. They say that they now accept the need for advice, but they still have not told anyone how they will pay for it.

Let me now deal with amendment No.81, which concerns tax. One of the stupidest things that the Government have done has been to introduce, unnecessarily and gratuitously, a second tax regime for pensions—a second set of rules determining tax deductibility in the case of those who join stakeholder schemes. The Government say that those who join such schemes will be able to deduct £3,600 from their income by way of a tax credit, whereas the existing Inland Revenue sliding scale—involving a percentage of earnings increasing with age—will continue to apply to those who opt for personal pension schemes.

The Government are so incompetent that they do not seem to have taken into account what will result from the mere fact of having two different tax regimes. I shall say more shortly about the merits or otherwise of their proposed regimes, but the existence of two regimes in itself will increase the uncertainty and the complexity of the calculations that will need to be made, and will make it even more difficult for people to decide whether to opt for particular pension schemes.

I trust that the Minister has finally understood the point about advice. Perhaps he will now understand the point about tax. He is certainly not a foolish individual, and he has a good business record himself. Perhaps his hands are tied—and his feet, and his mouth—by his bosses, or by the Treasury. In that case, I hope that he will be a bit more vigorous in persuading them to be more sensible.

Let us look at the case of someone who is considering going into a pension scheme and is thinking of a stakeholder or a personal pension. If his income is £20,000 or less, he has decided that he needs a funded individual pension and he never expects to earn more than that in real terms, no doubt, the £3,600 is totally adequate. However, he may hope to get promotion, a pay increase or bonuses for good performance. We want a society and economy where people have a chance to increase their earnings, particularly through higher performance. We want people to be able to use their bonuses to fund a pension, savings and so forth. At least I think we do; Conservative Members certainly do. In that case, clearly, he should not go into a scheme where the tax deductibility of pension contributions is limited to £3,600 a year. He might want to make contributions that will give him greater tax deductibility and tax relief on the Inland Revenue sliding scale. That would be a reason to take out not a stakeholder, but a personal pension.

The worse scenario would be to take out a stakeholder pension, to meet the costs of setting up that scheme and, a few years later, to have to close that, to move into a personal pension and to pay a whole lot of new transactional costs to set up a new scheme. That would not make any sense. Again, it is deplorable that the Government have not been able to work that one out themselves.

Amendment No. 83 deals with group personal pensions. [Interruption.] Someone took away my copy of the Green Paper. That took my breath away, at least for a moment or two. On group personal pensions, another wonderful U-turn is in process; at least I hope it is because the Government's initial proposals were deeply damaging.

Page 53, paragraph 29 of the Green Paper makes it plain—it could not be plainer in the English language:

> "Existing personal pensions will not therefore be able to describe themselves as stakeholder pension schemes."

Personal pensions will not be able to be passported into, in the modern jargon, the stakeholder system. People who have a personal pension of any type could not treat that as their stakeholder pension. Employers who had set up a group personal pension scheme could not treat that as the discharge of the obligation, which is placed on them in clause 3, to set up a stakeholder scheme.

That is extremely regrettable because it will mean that many good pension schemes, including group personal pensions, which invariably, in every example known to me, involve an employer contribution, will have to be wound down. Employers would then have to set up another stakeholder scheme, which does not require an employer contribution at all.

Therefore, if employers are feeling slightly less generous, or are simply exasperated by the Government forcing them to run down one good pension scheme for their employees and to set up another, they might take the opportunity either to reduce, or to eliminate their contribution altogether. That would be terrible for the employees concerned and a great blow to pensions.

That is thoughtlessness at best. At worst, it would have been a deliberate attempt to destroy at a stroke a valuable part of our pension structure, but I think that the Government are guilty more of ignorance and incompetence than deliberate destructiveness. You will note, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that I am capable of being very kind to the Government.

Mr. Eric Pickles (Brentwood and Ongar): My hon. Friend is a generous man.

Mr. Davies: As my hon. Friend kindly says, I am a generous man. I hope that that characterisation is always justified by my conduct in the House and, indeed, elsewhere.

The U-turn, which is perhaps now taking place, has not been announced to the House. Such things are announced in the press or the media, but never to the House. On 28 April, the Secretary of State gave an interview to the Financial Times and said:

"Some group personal pensions may be allowed to label themselves as stakeholder pensions. Alistair Darling, the Social Security Secretary has said. That could remove the need for employers to separate stakeholder pensions to their employees".

In a written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Chingford and Woodford Green, the Minister of State said:

"Group personal pensions will be able to register as stakeholder pension schemes provided they meet the required conditions for such schemes."—[Official Report, 10 May 1999; Vol. 331, c. 53.]

That is an even stronger move in the direction of allowing personal pensions to count as stakeholder pensions. That is a 180 deg contrast with the statement in the Green Paper.

We have tabled our amendments because of all the U-turns by the Government. There has been no explicit acknowledgement by the Government that they have got it wrong. I do not want to labour that because, if they are not big enough to admit that they occasionally make mistakes, that is too bad for them. They should at least come to the House to make these announcements plainly and unambiguously because they are creating great uncertainty outside.

People in the pensions industry look at the Green Paper, which they are entitled to believe represents Government policy until it is changed, and they then see newspaper articles and remarks attributed to Ministers, and they do not know where they are. It is contributing to an unfortunate crisis which is paralysing our pensions market. Employers and pension funds are frightened to move forward and sell stakeholder pensions because of the danger of mis-selling, to which I have already referred, and the absence of any assurance that there will be independent advice. They do not know what the rules of the scheme will be because they do not know what the Government mean with their confusing proposals such as stakeholders, LISAs—lifelong individual savings accounts—and so on. Also, individuals are rightly and reasonably confused and hesitate to make decisions in the absence of advice.

We are tabling our amendment to remove the uncertainty, at least in relation to group personal pensions, to give companies the confidence to continue with these schemes and, I hope, to encourage companies who do not have existing provisions for their employees to start them. The amendment would make the regime clear within the Bill. If we achieve some clarity after six months of debate that will be an achievement of some kind.

I described new clause 13 as a summation of our views on stakeholder pensions. It incorporates many of the lessons learned from the Government's extraordinarily shambolic treatment of the matter over the past few months. We do not start on a completely blank sheet of paper, nor should we. However regrettable and unfortunate it may be for many people from the pensions industry right through to the disabled, the Labour Government are in power. They have a democratic mandate and have produced a Bill to set up a stakeholder pension system. We are looking positively to see whether there is something that we can save from the wreck or on which we can build a constructive and worthwhile structure. We are perfectly happy with the idea of employer obligations to set up a payroll deduction facility.

In the pensions debate last week, the Government asked my hon. Friends and myself, perfectly reasonably, about the Conservative party's policy on pensions. They now have it in black and white in new clause 13 and I hope that they will accept it. It is a stakeholder pension scheme based on the employer obligation to provide a free payroll deduction facility for payments into any approved pension vehicle.

6.30 pm

Hon. Members should note that the new clause would oblige employers to establish a specific payment facility on a payroll-deduction basis, as they currently administer the pay-as-you-earn and national insurance systems. It would not replicate the obligation, imposed in clause 3 of the Bill, on employers to designate a scheme. As I said, that would be an unreasonably onerous task to impose on small employers—or on any employer. I do not believe that it is an employer's function to take charge of his or her employee's private life or financial affairs.

We therefore do not propose designation, but simply to establish the facility, which will be available for payment into any approved pension scheme—as defined by the Inland Revenue under chapter 14 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 and by the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority.

In our new clause, we get away entirely from fragmentation. We are not saying, for example, that people may pay only into schemes established on the basis of trust law. We should be equally happy with personal and other pensions that are set up on a deed-poll basis. The facility could be used to invest in a personal pension; a stakeholder pension, as the Government are suggesting; or in a lifetime individual savings account—the rival Treasury product—which we think has considerable merit and attraction.

Mr. Webb: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Davies: I cannot give way now, as I am trying to bring my remarks to a close. I have already taken a number of interventions, including one from the hon. Gentleman, as he will remember.

The essence of our proposal is that it would avoid all gratuitous fragmentation and include a unified tax regime. The regime would be unified in that employees benefiting from the facility would be able to take an annual deduction of £5,000—we are a little more generous than the Government, and choose a round figure—without any questions being asked about how it might relate to his or her income or, if he or she prefers, to apply the current Inland Revenue sliding scale of income percentage rising with age.

Clearly, employees will choose whatever suits them best in any one year, and there will be no difficulty about employees whose circumstance might change in future, when they will be able to make higher contributions. We want them to be able to do that, and therefore to receive the corresponding tax deductions. However, to achieve that goal, we shall have to avoid the creation of unnecessary barriers and fragmentation.

In a few words, we are offering a single, unified and coherent structure that really will advance the cause of United Kingdom pensions—to which we have been, and always will be, most sincerely committed.

Mr. Flight: I should like to stress two specific points, on the necessity of advice. The first point—to which my hon. Friend the Member for Grantham and Stamford (Mr. Davies) alluded—is that 8 million people currently have personal pension schemes and have already paid for the up-front marketing costs, whatever those might have been. As Ministers will know—with the introduction of the Green Paper and the great white hope of the new stakeholder schemes—the number of people dropping out of personal pension schemes is increasing substantially, probably very much to their detriment. It is, therefore, crucial that people should receive very clear quantitative advice when deciding whether to participate in a new stakeholder scheme or to remain in their current pension scheme.

The second point has not yet been made in the debate. There is a very high probability that—because of the CAT-marking arrangements to keep charges low—most stakeholder schemes offered by companies will invest in index trackers. Although I do not want to get into a debate on the merits of active versus index tracker management, individuals will have to make the important decision on which they should opt for.

The pension assets in index tracker schemes will go up and down with markets. Those with a personal pension scheme usually have a choice of different funds to invest in, and can make their scheme more or less cautious and change according to circumstances. It is important that people should know and get advice when choosing between their existing personal scheme and the new stakeholder. They should know the significance of the likely index tracker investment versus active investment management.

As I understand it, the tax deductible sum for stakeholder schemes is not a simple £3,600 per annum, but the lesser of that figure or 100 per cent. of salary. I do not understand the reason for the second part of the formula. Working out which is the lesser and keeping records of people's salaries to no apparent end will be a waste of time and money, resulting in unnecessary extra charges for stakeholders. I support our proposal for a tax regime that would be the same for all pension schemes irrespective of their category. The stakeholder proposals simply add costs. Those are some specific points on the two key areas that we are advancing.

Mr. Webb: The hon. Member for Grantham and Stamford (Mr. Davies) mentioned four issues: advice, tax relief, the treatment of group personal pensions and access through employers to all pension schemes. Perhaps it will be helpful if I address those four points in the sequence in which he raised them.

We all agree that pensions are complicated and it is important that people are well informed when they make choices. To that extent, I have common ground with the hon. Gentleman. All the quotes that he read out were about the importance of access to good advice—I have no problem with that—but the substance of his proposals, as I think that he more or less accepted, is that people should be compelled to take advice. Amendment No. 80 says that the employer should ask the person running the stakeholder scheme to issue a certificate saying that he will not let any employees into the scheme unless they prove that they have taken independent advice.

Mr. Quentin Davies: The hon. Gentleman should not misrepresent my words to imply that we suggest that the law should place a charge on people to seek advice regardless of whether they want a pension. We are simply saying that when a pension is sold, the responsibility must lie with the seller—or the employer if they are designating or sponsoring the scheme—to make sure that the individual concerned has been properly advised before taking out the pension. Without that provision, there would be a recipe for the most appalling mis-selling. That would be particularly cruel for people on lower incomes, whom we are most concerned about.

Mr. Webb: That may be the hon. Gentleman's intention, but it is not the effect of his amendments. Amendment No. 80 says that an employee will not be admitted to the stakeholder scheme that the employer is associated with unless the scheme provider can prove that independent advice has been taken by each person who goes into the scheme. That is appropriate for some people, but for others who are well informed and for whom the stakeholder scheme provided by the employer is self-evidently the right scheme, particularly if there is an employer contribution, there is no reason for a legal obligation. It seems a very un-Conservative proposal—although that is not a reason for opposing it—to require even the well informed to take advice. I understand what the hon. Gentleman is trying to achieve, but amendment No. 80 clearly does not do that.

The same is true of amendment No. 81 about tax relief. The amendment raises two issues. The first is whether the £3,600 figure is high enough. I have some interest in the hon. Gentleman's point that it may not be. However, the amendment goes on to propose not a simple £5,000, but £5,000 or the amount allowed under the age-related rebate scheme "provided that the employee shall be given the right to choose".

The hon. Gentleman said that he wanted to simplify the tax regime, but that he wanted people to choose which tax regime they preferred. The tax regime for stakeholder schemes will be different from that for occupational schemes, which appear not to be covered by the amendment.

Mr. Davies: The hon. Gentleman is having great difficulty in understanding something very simple. If the employee chooses, there is no fragmentation of the market from the employee's point of view. It does not matter which tax regime he chooses this year, because he can choose another next year if that is more appropriate to his circumstances. Therefore, we are reducing the complexity of choice and the danger of a mis-choice or a mis-sell.

Mr. Webb: The hon. Gentleman is introducing a new choice. If I take out a pension at the moment, I have no choice about the tax regime that applies to my contributions. The amendment introduces a choice of whether I want the lump sum cap on my contributions to get tax relief or some percentage of my salary. That seems to create greater complexity.

My colleagues and I would like a single annual amount, allowable against tax, for all sorts of pension savings—not choices between different schemes. I fear that that would introduce new complexity, contrary to what is intended.

On group personal pensions, the issues are more difficult. The hon. Member for Grantham and Stamford and his party want to allow group personal pensions to be eligible for stakeholder status. Amendment No. 83 says:

"Approved Group Personal Pensions shall be deemed to be stakeholder pensions for the purposes of this Part."

It does not say, "some shall, provided they satisfy the standards of stakeholder schemes." One wonders what the point of the first 40-odd clauses of the Bill is if an existing form of pension provision will automatically come under the new category.

Clearly, some existing group personal pensions may or may not be good value for money for their members, and the charging structure may be unfavourable to those who are likely to leave early, for example. Simply to say that they will come under the stakeholder scheme and get all the associated advantages is rather difficult. If the amendment were more extensive, and said that they can count as stakeholder schemes if they meet the relevant criteria, we might have had more sympathy. However, as it stands, I am afraid that we do not.

The first time I saw new clause 13 I thought that it was eminently sensible. However, when the hon. Member for Grantham and Stamford explained it, I went off the idea. I wanted some clarification from the hon. Gentleman during his speech, and perhaps he will intervene on me in a moment to explain the point—briefly, I hope.

Under new clause 13, an employer with 3,000 employees would be obliged to provide free of charge a facility to every employee to deduct at source a pension contribution, and to pay that contribution to the pension scheme of the employee's choosing. The Government are proposing one scheme—that the employer would provide access to one stakeholder scheme. It is reasonable to suppose that the employer would then take all the contributions in one go and pass them in one envelope, metaphorically, to the scheme.

As I understand it, the hon. Member for Grantham and Stamford is saying that the employer, at his own cost, will have to pay contributions to every different scheme of which any individual employee is a member. Clearly, individual employees can be members of dozens of different schemes—particularly if there is no company scheme. At a medium-sized firm with no company scheme, individuals could be members of dozens of different pensions schemes.

Mr. Davies: The hon. Gentleman ought to know that employers already must have the software set up to enable them to make such payments under earnings attachment orders and so forth, and these may go in different directions. That is not the great burden of costs on an employer. The great burden—which our amendment avoids, but the Government's formulation unfortunately involves employers in—is the burden of designating the right scheme. That is an enormous responsibility, and involves spending money on actuaries and advisers, and receiving bids from different pension groups, and then on making a choice between them. That is what we want to avoid. It is an unreasonable burden on the employer, and a dangerous situation in which an employer can find himself.

Mr. Webb: With respect to the hon. Gentleman, I do not feel that that is what his amendment is about or would achieve.

Mrs. Browning: Is not it the case that members of staff of Members of Parliament have, at present, a scheme through the Fees Office where they elect to go into a personal pension with a variety of companies, and on which they are responsible for taking financial advice about whether the scheme to which they are signing up is in their best interests? Surely in terms of administration on the employer—in this case, the Fees Office of the House of Commons—that is complex, when one thinks that there are 650 Members of Parliament. However, it does it. Surely it would simply be a matter of putting the money into a stakeholder scheme rather than into a personal pension as at present. I do not understand the hon. Gentleman's argument about the complexity of administration.

Mr. Webb: That is an interesting parallel and I accept that each hon. Member could have one or more employees, each choosing a different personal pension, which could place a considerable administrative burden on the Fees Office.

Mrs. Browning: That happens now.

Mr. Webb: Indeed, but is it a considerable administrative burden? I suspect that it may well be. Do we know how many people the Fees Office employs to administer those payments? Some Conservative Members here today served with me in Committee on the Tax Credits Bill, where we argued against the burden on business of employers having to pass on tax credits. Under the new clause, employers would have to pass on not only one payment from the Inland Revenue to their employees:

they might have to make dozens of payments to dozens of different companies. I accept that there is a parallel, but we do not how much work is created or what it costs.

Mr. Flight: Surely all that is required is for the employer to give a list of instructions to his bank to make regular standing order payments to the various banks of the recipients' pension schemes. Once that was done, there would be no more work involved. That is what the Fees Office does.

Mr. Webb: The hon. Gentleman wants to have it both ways. He and I have both attacked the working families tax credit, which is a single payment from the Inland Revenue through the employer to the employee, regarding it as a burden on business. We are now talking about a system that involves as many employees as there are in the firm and as many pension companies as there are in the land. Contrary to what he said, the payments need not be the same every month: people might want to increase their payments following a pay rise or to contribute a lump sum.

We have to form a judgment about the burden placed on business. Intriguingly, Conservative Members do not think that there will be a burden; strangely, I think that there will. We certainly want to facilitate access to pension saving. The Government have got it right in using the mechanism of employers—there are many fewer employers than employees—to deliver to a specified scheme. In my judgment, that is much less of a burden.

Mr. Brazier: I served in Committee on the Bill, and we are nearing the end of a process that has gone on for two and a half months. Following the emotionally charged and important debate on incapacity benefit, we can see once again how wrong it was to cram so many different subjects into one Bill, as hon. Members of various parties said on Second Reading. The new clause and the amendments grouped with it are very important, dealing with pension arrangements for people who can only just afford to provide for themselves, but we have a small turnout because this discussion follows a mass of other important subjects.

We are suffering once again from the fact that, because the Government are trying to cram a gallon into a pint pot, there is far too much reliance on regulation. We are trying to pin down what should be done, but much is unclear because of the excessive use of regulation. The regulations and the ideas behind them stem from several different consultations, including the consultation on this part of the Bill, which was not even completed when we began our proceedings in Committee.

In other parts of the Bill, Labour party manifesto commitments—on means-testing and on the contributory principle, for example—were abandoned. The Government's refusal to accept the new clause and associated amendments represents the abandonment of another good principle: that we should seek to simplify the social security and pensions system. Absurdly, with the stakeholder plan, the Government are trying to start again with a completely new edifice which is separate from the Treasury's edifice. That is not completely new, but builds on existing plans, and for that reason, it is mostly welcomed by the Opposition.

The hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) missed the point of the interventions by my hon. Friends. The point about the working families tax credit, on which we stood shoulder to shoulder with the Liberal Democrats, is that it is potentially adjustable twice a year on the basis of a complicated calculation. However, as my hon. Friend the Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) pointed out, the arrangements suggested in new clause 13 would be in place for good once a simple standing order had been set up. In the case of the House of Commons scheme, it would be pegged to 10 per cent. of salary. The arrangements would not involve the complexities to which we objected in another context.

By trying to set up such a complicated system, which contained the germ of a good idea when the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Fjeld) first proposed it, the Government are setting themselves against the pensions industry and against those who would like to provide better for those at the bottom end of the earnings scale, who will be specifically targeted by the measure. I suspect that the rival Treasury product will be much more successful.

My final point is really a Third Reading point, but I hope that you will forgive me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because it looks unlikely that we will get to Third Reading. It is very sad that we should be debating all these amendments at the end of proceedings on this Bill. We are dancing round on the head of a pin while the entire debate on pensions policy is crushed between two halves of a nutcracker—one being the devastating blow that was wreaked upon ordinary company, personal and other pensions by the shameful removal of tax credits, and the other being the knowledge that among the low paid, people who do not provide for themselves may end up doing better. That point was eloquently made by my hon. Friend the Member for Grantham and Stamford (Mr. Davies). I strongly support new clause 13 which would go a long way towards improving a rotten, muddled and confused scheme.

Miss McIntosh: I strongly associate myself with new clause 13, which was eloquently moved by my hon. Friend the Member for Grantham and Stamford (Mr. Davies). I wish to address two situations. The first is where an employer already operates an occupational pension scheme. Some employers may be tempted to close their occupational pension scheme to new entrants and simply offer access to stakeholder schemes. Small and large employers alike believe that that would be a regrettable move and I hope that the Minister, when he replies, will address that point.

The second situation is where an employer does not already operate an occupational pension scheme. Most employers without such a scheme would admit that they lack the financial skills necessary to choose such a scheme. If they choose the wrong scheme, many fear adverse consequences for themselves and their employees. I hope that the Minister supports the suggestion that employers should be required to provide access only via a pensions clearing house.

Mrs. May: For the record, I should declare that I have placed in the Register of Members' Interests a non-registerable shareholding in the Prudential corporation.

Before I make a couple of points about the amendments and the stakeholder scheme, I want to pick up on the comments of the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb). I am sorry that I was inadvertently out of the Chamber when he began to speak, but I came in as he was taking interventions on the extent to which proposals for employee payroll deduction facilities in new clause 13 would be a burden on business and difficult to operate.

As a former employee of the Association for Payment Clearing Services, I suggest that if the hon. Gentleman thinks that providing that sort of facility is beyond the scope of the banking sector, he should take a trip to the former de Havilland aircraft site at Edgware to visit BACS—formerly the Bankers Automated Clearing Services company—and see the number of deductions and payments that pass through the system every day. The banking sector is well able to cope with the proposal contained in new clause 13.

Mr. Webb: I have absolutely no doubt that the banking sector can cope. My question was what would be the cost to employers of accessing the services.

Mr. Brazier: Will my hon. Friend the Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) give way?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. It is not possible for the hon. Gentleman to intervene on an intervention.

Mrs. May: I assume that my hon. Friend the Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) wanted to intervene before I answered the intervention. I am happy to give way to him.

Mr. Brazier: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for being as courteous as ever. The point that I tried to make earlier to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) perhaps needs to be reiterated. The cost and complexity arises not from making a payment, but from having to do the calculation every six months for people whose earnings vary from week to week.

Mrs. May: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for clarifying the point that he made earlier. My point is that the banking sector can cope. Businesses produce tapes or telecoms data for banks to put to BACS. Significant numbers of such payments are being made, and if the hon. Member for Northavon is suggesting that new clause 13 should be cast aside on such a technical point, he should visit BACS to see how companies input such information and deal with such payments.

I have two points to make about stakeholders which relate to amendment No. 80. I share the concerns expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of York (Miss McIntosh), and by pension providers and bodies that represent employers. The Government's stakeholder pension schemes may result in the closure of some occupational pension schemes to new members. Employers will tell employees that they are not carrying on with occupational pension scheme provision, providing instead for the stakeholder pension because that is what the Government say is good.

The way in which we have built up our occupational pension scheme funds is one of the jewels in this country's crown. It places us in a far better position than many other countries to deal with future pension provision. We should not attack that position. I accept that the Government do not intend to attack occupational pension schemes, but I fear that the law of unintended consequences could very well bring about that result.

Finally, I want to reiterate a point that I made in the Chamber last week on pensions. I am particularly concerned about the impact of the Government's proposals on women. Women are just getting a foot on the ladder of occupational pension schemes, and some schemes may be taken from them. Secondly, many women are concerned already that they do not receive adequate advice about pension proposals. If no advice is provided on stakeholder pension schemes, many women will be disadvantaged in future. I support amendment No. 80 because independent pensions advice is important for all employees, but particularly for women.

Mrs. Browning: I contribute to this section of the debate with some sadness. Although I was not a member of the Standing Committee, I followed the Hansard record of those deliberations. On the one hand, I must welcome the fact that the new Labour Government have undergone a conversion in respect of personal pensions and pension input per se. Many of us remember how, in the 1980s, every time the Conservatives introduced a Budget to give tax breaks to individuals to encourage them to input into pensions, whether personal or corporate, the Labour party consistently voted against those provisions, which have made Britain one of the strongest countries in Europe for pension funds and provision for old age. Notwithstanding that, the Labour party said time after time before the Labour Government were elected that if it came to office it would make fundamental changes to increase the scope of pension provision for a wider range of individuals and to tighten up aspects where it felt there needed to be more security for the person investing in a pension.

The Committee deliberated and we waited a long while to get proper confirmation from the Government about what they were proposing. Even though we now have a Bill in front of us, the Government still seem unable to answer many questions. I will raise some different issues from those raised by my hon. Friends, and perhaps we will hear one or two answers from the Government.

Given some of the problems, such as pensions mis-selling and the Maxwell scandal, many people may well be concerned about being a part of a group pension of whatever denomination. The Government therefore said that they want to enhance the role of trustees. That is important. However, as the Bill has proceeded, the Government have not been clear about their intentions for trustees.

The Minister of State was adamant in Committee, saying:

> "We want member-nominated trustees to be appointed to the board of stakeholder pension schemes."—[Official Report, Standing Committee D, 4 March 1999; c. 52.]

Despite persistent questioning by my Conservative colleagues, the Government failed to explain who will be the trustees and how they will be chosen. That question seems fundamental. If the Government's new stakeholder pensions are to be widely welcomed and, more important, taken up—particularly if they are to receive the support of employers in the workplace—it is extremely important for that sort of detail to be available.

It is not the sort of detail that should be left to secondary legislation. If we have learned one thing in the past two years it is that many major Bills have been ill thought out—almost cobbled together on the hoof as they progress through Committee. Later, when we are faced with statutory instruments and secondary legislation that put the detail into the Bill, we find that the Government are doing something quite different from what they said in Committee.

I tell the Government and the Minister, who was adamant about trustees in stakeholder pensions, that if they want those pensions to be successful, they should tonight give the House the details of how those trustees will be appointed and take their place on the board.

Mr. Timms: The hon. Member for Grantham and Stamford (Mr. Davies) demonstrated again this evening his remarkable ability to make material that is worth five minutes last for 35. The House will have enjoyed that, although why it was necessary for him to do it on this occasion, I am not sure.

Stakeholder pension schemes are at the heart of our plans to modernise the pension system. They will provide—for many people for the first time—affordable funded pensions so that they can look forward to a secure income in retirement. There has been wide support for their introduction from those who responded to the Green Paper and others, both for the aims of the policy and for the structure that we have put in place to achieve them. We are working closely with the industry to ensure their success.

The hon. Member for Tiverton and Honiton (Mrs. Browning) asked about trustees. The Bill provides for stakeholder pensions to be run in a way that puts members' interests first. Trust-based schemes run by a board of trustees will do exactly that. We will consult between now and the summer on the details of how the trustee arrangements will work. If I understood her correctly, she supports the involvement of trustees in the schemes. I agree, but, as I said in Committee, we want to retain flexibility. That is why we have not ruled out possible alternative governance structures if they can deliver comparable protection.

In the Labour party manifesto, we promised to introduce a framework for stakeholder pensions to meet the needs of those who could not join a good-value second pension. We said that schemes would be approved to receive people's savings only if they met high standards and provided value for money, flexibility and security. The framework in the Bill fulfils that commitment. Contrary to what Conservative Members said, there have been no U-turns. Our position on group personal pensions is the one set out in the Green Paper; we asked for views on it on page 59. We are listening to those views and will reach a conclusion on that basis. That is what we always said that we would do, and we will do it.

Dr. Lewis Moonie (Kirkcaldy): My hon. Friend knows that I want to raise the issue of Christian conscience. He is aware that many Christians cannot take up pension plans under existing or proposed legislation. Many hon. Members on both sides of the House have taken the matter up with the Treasury. Can he reassure me that any regulations under the Bill will take account of Christian conscience regarding the appropriate pension offered, contributions to a scheme and the rights of employees to refuse on Christian conscience grounds any scheme offered?

Mr. Timms: I am well aware of those issues. My hon. Friend put one of his constituents in touch with me. A group from the Plymouth Brethren came to discuss those points with me. Nothing in the Bill or any of our proposals would require employers to contribute to pension schemes on behalf of their employees. We are consulting on the possibility of making it a condition of employment that people should join their occupational scheme, if there is one. That would need to be subject to opt-out arrangements. We will carefully consider my hon. Friend's point in deciding them. I think that the people who have been in touch with him and me will feel generally content about our way forward on this.

Mr. Leigh: I am sorry to labour the point, but the Plymouth Brethren are a tiny group. No one in the House supports their views, which is all the more reason why we should be careful to ensure that their conscience is protected. They cannot join any existing pension scheme, except the basic state pension, because of their religious belief. The Minister must reassure them that they will not be forced into a stakeholder pension against their conscience.

Mr. Timms: I can categorically assure the hon. Gentleman that no one will be forced into a stakeholder pension if they do not wish to join one. The Plymouth Brethren are not that small a group. I much enjoyed the meeting that took place on the initiative of my hon. Friend the Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie).

Let me briefly deal with some of the points raised in the debate. New clause 13 would compel employers to offer payroll deduction facilities for almost all pension arrangements. Conservative Members appear to believe that that would provide an adequate replacement for stakeholder pensions. In reality, providing access to other sorts of scheme would not be a substitute for the benefits that we expect for members from stakeholder pension schemes. The hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) is right to say that the proposals would place a substantial, additional burden on business. Businesses would have to send out regular payments to an unlimited number of pension schemes—depending on how many people work in the organisation. That is not sensible.

The hon. Member for Vale of York (Miss McIntosh) made a much more interesting suggestion. I commend her for raising the point because it seems to have eluded her hon. Friends.

There is a possibility of making a clearing-house arrangement under which employers would make a single payment to a clearing house. The clearing house would then sort out which company the payments should be passed on to. That proposal is favoured by the Confederation of British Industry, for example. It is one of the possibilities on which we shall consult between now and the summer.

Amendment No. 83 would enable existing group personal pensions to qualify as stakeholder pension schemes. Again, we have been absolutely consistent on that point. We do not want to undermine good-value existing provision, but personal pensions do not have many of the features that will make stakeholder pension schemes a good deal for their members.

[Mr. Timms]

Stakeholder pension schemes will provide a better-value, more flexible alternative for many of those who cannot join an occupational scheme. The proposed governance structure is an important part of that; we are determined that stakeholder schemes will be run in their members' interests. It is here that personal pension schemes often fall short of the high standards that we want for stakeholder pension schemes. We are keen not to discourage high-quality provision and will be consulting further on our specific proposals as to how we could best incorporate into the new regime arrangements that meet our high standards and offer good-quality provision.

Amendment No. 80 deals with advice. It is right that people considering joining any pension scheme should have access to good, accurate financial information and advice. We have said that throughout, and our commitment to that should not be in doubt. Since we came to office, one of our priorities has been to ensure that pension companies and advisers clear up the mis-selling scandal that we inherited from the previous Government. The arrangements instituted by the Conservative Government created an enormous number of problems—not least by, wrongly, inducing many people to leave good occupational schemes of the kind referred to by the hon. Member for Maidenhead (Mrs. May) and to enter personal schemes that were much less advantageous.

The amendment would require stakeholder pension schemes to certify that all applicants who want to join their employer's designated scheme have received independent financial advice. That goes much too far. Individual advice has a cost. In many cases, that cost is worth paying, but, given the right information, many potential members will be perfectly capable of making an appropriate choice for themselves.

We expect that significant numbers of those joining stakeholder schemes will do so through their employers. To require all those applicants to receive independent advice would impose excessive costs on schemes if they had to meet the costs of its provision—as they will in many cases.

Amendment No. 81 would require a higher limit on contributions to stakeholder pension schemes than the £3,600 that we proposed, and proposes that, as an alternative, the limit could be set by reference to the relevant personal pension limit. Our proposal is intended to provide a simple, clear system. I can assure hon. Members that contribution limits are one of the aspects of the schemes on which we shall be carrying out further detailed consultation between now and the summer, in the light of the representations that we have received to date. Following that consultation, all aspects of the tax regime—including the maximum level of contributions—will, as is normal, be set out in a Finance Bill or tax regulations as appropriate, but they will not be included in this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

It being six hours after the commencement of proceedings, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER proceeded to put forthwith the Questions necessary for the disposal of the business to be concluded at that hour.

Question put, That the clause be read a Second time:—

"Continuity of claims and awards: persons ceasing to be a joint-claim couple

9A.—(1) Regulations may make provision about the entitlement to a jobseeker's allowance of persons ("ex-members") who cease to be members of a joint-claim couple.

(2) Regulations under this paragraph may, in particular, provide—

(a) for treating each or either of the ex-members as having made any claim made by the couple or, alternatively, for any such claim to lapse;

(b) for any award made in respect of the couple to be replaced by an award (a "replacement award") in respect of each or either of the ex-members of the couple or, alternatively, for any such award to lapse.

Continuity of claims and awards: persons again becoming a joint-claim couple 9B.—(1) Regulations may make provision about the entitlement to a jobseeker's allowance of persons ("ex-members") who, having ceased to be members of a joint-claim couple, again become the members of a joint-claim couple.

(2) Regulations under this paragraph may, in particular, provide—

(a) for any claim made by the ex-members when they were previously a joint-claim couple to be revived or otherwise given effect as a claim made by the couple;

(b) for any award made in respect of the ex-members when they were previously a joint-claim couple to be restored;

(c) for any such award, or any replacement award (within the meaning of paragraph 9A) made in respect of either of them, to be replaced by an award (a "new award") in respect of the couple.

Continuity of claims and awards: couple becoming a joint-claim couple 9C.—(1) Regulations may make provision about the entitlement to a jobseeker's allowance of persons who become members of a joint-claim couple as a result of the married or unmarried couple of which they are members becoming a joint-claim couple.

(2) Regulations under this paragraph may, in particular, provide—

(a) for any claim made by either member of the couple before the couple became a joint-claim couple to be given effect as a claim made by the couple;

(b) for any award, or any replacement award (within the meaning of paragraph 9A), made in respect of either member of the couple before the couple became a joint-claim couple to be replaced by an award (a "new award") in respect of the couple.

Paragraphs 9A to 9C: supplementary

9D.—(1) Regulations may provide, in relation to any replacement award (within the meaning of paragraph 9A) or new award (within the meaning of paragraph 9B or 9C), for—

(a) the award to be of an amount determined in a prescribed manner;

(b) entitlement to the award to be subject to compliance with prescribed requirements as to the provision of information and evidence.

(2) In paragraphs 9A to 9C and this paragraph—

"award" means an award of a jobseeker's allowance;

"claim" means a claim for a jobseeker's allowance.'".—[Mr. Kevin Hughes.]

CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

Amendments made: No. 68, in page 130, line 11, at end insert—

'Insolvency Act 1986 (c.45)

62A. The Insolvency Act 1986 is amended as follows.

62B. After section 342C there is inserted—

"Recovery of excessive contributions in pensionsharing cases

342D.—(1) For the purposes of sections 339, 341 and 342, a pension–sharing transaction shall be taken—

(a) to be a transaction, entered into by the transferor with the transferee, by which the appropriate amount is transferred by the transferor to the transferee; and

(b) to be capable of being a transaction entered into at an undervalue only so far as it is a transfer of so much of the appropriate amount as represents excessive contributions.

(2) For the purposes of sections 340 to 342, a pension–sharing transaction shall be taken—

(a) to be something (namely a transfer of the appropriate amount to the transferee) done by the transferor; and

(b) to be capable of being a preference given to the transferee only so far as it is a transfer of so much of the appropriate amount as represents excessive contributions.

(3) If on an application under section 339 or 340 any question arises as to whether, or the extent to which, the appropriate amount in the case of a pension–sharing transaction represents excessive contributions, the question shall be determined in accordance with subsections (4) to (8).

(4) The court shall first determine the extent (if any) to which the transferor's rights under the shared arrangement at the time of the transaction appear to have been (whether directly or indirectly) the fruits of contributions ("personal contributions")—

(a) which the transferor has at any time made on his own behalf, or

(b) which have at any time been made on the transferor's behalf, to the shared arrangement or any other pension arrangement.

(5) Where it appears that those rights were to any extent the fruits of personal contributions, the court shall then determine the extent (if any) to which those rights appear to have been the fruits of personal contributions whose making has unfairly prejudiced the transferor's creditors ("unfair contributions").

(6) If it appears to the court that the extent to which those rights were the fruits of unfair contributions is such that the transfer of the appropriate amount could have been made out of rights under the shared arrangement which were not the fruits of unfair contributions, then the appropriate amount does not represent excessive contributions.

(7) If it appears to the court that the transfer could not have been wholly so made, then the appropriate amount represents excessive contributions to the extent to which it appears to the court that the transfer could not have been so made.

(8) In making the determination mentioned in subsection (5) the court shall consider in particular the matters specified in paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 342A(6).

(9) In this section—

"appropriate amount", in relation to a pension–sharing transaction, means the appropriate amount in relation to that transaction for the purposes of section 23(1) of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999 (creation of pension credits and debits);

"pension–sharing transaction" means an order or provision falling within section 22(1) of the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999 (orders and agreements which activate pension–sharing);

"shared arrangement", in relation to a pension–sharing transaction, means the pension arrangement to which the transaction relates;

"transferee", in relation to a pension–sharing transaction, means the person for whose benefit the transaction is made;

"transferor", in relation to a pension–sharing transaction, means the person to whose rights the transaction relates.".

No. 69, in page 130, line 11, at end insert—

'62C. In section 384(1) (meaning of "prescribed" in the second Group of Parts), after "Subject to the next subsection" insert "and section 342C(7) in Chapter V of Part IX".'.

'in accordance with sub–paragraphs (2) to (5)'.

No. 49, in page 130, line 45, at end insert—

'Social Security Administration Act 1992 (c.5)

68A. After section 140E of the Administration Act insert—

"Financing of other expenditure

140EE.—(1) The Secretary of State may make to a local authority such payments as he thinks fit in respect of expenses incurred by the authority in connection with the carrying out of any relevant function—

(a) by the authority,

(b) by any person providing services to the authority, or

(c) by any person authorised by the authority to carry out that function.

(2) In subsection (1) "relevant function" means any function conferred by virtue of section 2A, 2C or 7A above.

(3) The following provisions, namely—

(a) in section 140B, subsections (1), (3), (4), (5)(b), (7)(b) and (8), and

apply in relation to a payment under this section as in relation to a payment of subsidy.

(4) The Secretary of State may (without prejudice to the generality of his powers in relation to the amount of subsidy) take into account the fact that an amount has been paid under this section in respect of costs falling within section 140B(4A)(a) above." .

No. 109, in page 130, line 45, at end insert—

'(6) In paragraph 6 of that Schedule—

(a) in sub–paragraph (5), for "section 159A" substitute "section 4A, 159A"; and

(b) in sub–paragraph (6), after "relating" insert "to relevant payments or benefits within the meaning of section 4A above or (as the case may be).'.

No. 111, in page 131, line 13, leave out 'as follows' and insert

'in accordance with sub–paragraphs (2) to (5)'.

No. 112, in page 131, line 25, at end insert—

Order for Third Reading read.—[Queen's consent, on behalf of the Crown, signified.]

Motion made, and Question put, That the Bill be now read the Third time.—[Mr. Robert Ainsworth.]

The House proceeded to a Division—

Mr. David Davis (Haltemprice and Howden) (seated and covered): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The convention in the House is that Finance Bills are not guillotined—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. I understand that the microphones are not on. They will be put on as quickly as possible.

Mr. Davis: The effect of today's guillotine is that amendment No. 27, which would have removed clause 71 from the Bill, was incapable of being debated. Clause 71 has an effect greater than any Finance Bill, in that it removes the requirement for primary legislation prior to major expenditure by the lead Department today.

Can you give me some assistance, Mr. Deputy Speaker, so that the House can be protected from that mechanism in the future? Is it possible for the substantive point within the amendment to be dealt with by the Government at some point? I see that there is a Minister on the Treasury Bench who may be able to help us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the right hon. Gentleman's point, but the House has agreed the guillotine motion and things have simply have transpired in the way that he has described.

Mr. Timms: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. This is an important power which allows us to proceed with investment in new computer systems for changes to the benefit system. I understand that it would be helpful to the right hon. Member for Haltemprice and Howden (Mr. Davis), who chairs the Public Accounts Committee, and to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), who chairs the Select Committee on Social Security, if we could agree an arrangement whereby the report, which will be submitted to the House to permit the expenditure to go ahead could, in normal circumstances, be looked at by those Committees before the House reaches a decision.

Subject to discussion between us, I am sure that we could come up with a mechanism to ensure that that happens in normal circumstances.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am grateful to the Minister for his response.

The House having divided: Ayes 360, Noes 142.

British Deaths (France)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Kevin Hughes.]

7.56 pm

Mr. Tim Collins (Westmorland and Lonsdale): This is a serious subject that involves many people around the country. I know that the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler) hopes to catch your eye for a minute or two after my remarks, Mr. Deputy Speaker, so I shall truncate them to give him an opportunity to speak.

I welcome the Minister and congratulate him on his promotion. I recognise that he is new to his present duties, which he took over in tragic circumstances following the departure of his much missed predecessor. I hope that he will be able to consider what I say seriously and reflect on some of the points that are raised.

The first case that I should like to raise concerns the Allison family from my constituency. Mr. Clive Allison, the son of my constituents, disappeared on 25 April last year. He was working in Lyon and had been working in France for two years. He was 27 and worked at a bar. On the day he disappeared, the French police and the British consulate in Lyon were informed by English speaking and French friends of Mr. Allison that he had disappeared. Unfortunately, the British consulate did not notify his family in my constituency that he had disappeared. That is the first cause of their anxiety about the case.

The second cause of the family's anxiety is that when they were informed four days later, my constituent Mr. Jim Allison telephoned the local French police and spoke to an officer who slammed the phone down on him shortly into the conversation, even though he was naturally distressed because he had just learned that his son had disappeared. The British consulate suggested that it must have been because my constituent was speaking to the French police officer in schoolboy French. In fact, he was speaking to a policeman who was fluent in English.

The third incident in the chain of events is that when the friends of Mr. Clive Allison reported to the French police that he had disappeared, they were told that the French police were not prepared to mount a missing person's inquiry for him and that the friends would have to go round the local hospitals to see whether he had turned up in one of them.

The next stage in this tragic tale is that the body of Mr. Allison was fished out of the local river in Lyon on 4 May and taken to the Government medical institute in the town. It was not tagged for three days so, at one point, it was reported missing. The body was subsequently recovered.

When it was flown back to the UK aboard Air France, the accompanying paperwork disappeared. To this day, that paperwork has not been found. No direct apology has even been given by Air France to the family. Because of the absence of that paperwork, an entirely new post mortem had to be performed on the body when it arrived back in the UK.

The final stage in this tragic set of occurrences was that the inquest into the death was adjourned on 25 September because the coroner in Barrow-in-Furness needed some paperwork from the French authorities to complete his inquiries. To this day, some eight months later, that paperwork has not been provided. In a letter from Mr. Ian Smith, the coroner at Barrow, he said that he shared the concerns of my constituent Mr. Jim Allison about the failure of the French authorities in this instance. He said:

"regrettably what is happening in this particular case is a reflection of what happens in most cases where a British subject dies in France and the body is repatriated and an inquest results . . . I frequently find a lack of thorough investigation and a considerable delay in sending what little information is available. By way of contrast I have dealt with deaths from China, Hong Kong and Zambia amongst others and have received good quality information within a reasonable time and the Chinese authorities had even translated into English."

My concern is that we are all citizens of the European Union. France is our nearest neighbouring member state of the EU, and it is important that the French authorities operate in circumstances relating to tragedies such as this at least as efficiently as countries such as Zambia or China.

Sadly, this is not an isolated case. The merest glimpse at some recently publicised stories in our national newspapers would indicate that there have been a number of other cases. Perhaps the most highly publicised is that of Caroline Dickinson, and I know that the hon. Member for North Cornwall will wish to speak about that later.

There was also the case of Roderick Henderson, who died after being kicked in the head in the Champs Elysées in October 1997. A report in The Daily Telegraph of the 15 July 1998 begins:

"A coroner condemned the French authorities yesterday for erecting a 'brick wall of virtual silence' around the investigation" of that murder.

I do not approach this matter with the view that somehow France is a different country where different standards apply. I certainly do not approach the matter with any hostility towards our neighbouring country. Indeed, this past weekend, I greatly enjoyed with my family an expedition to Paris which, thanks to Eurostar, is a great deal easier and quicker to reach from my London home than my own constituency in the UK.

More and more British people are looking to spend time in France on holiday and on business. It is a neighbour, and it is important that we should have close relations with France and the clearest possible co-operation between the British and French authorities. That is why I tabled some parliamentary questions on the matter, and I was a little disappointed with some of the responses that I received.

I received a helpful letter in February from Baroness Symons, the Foreign Office Minister. She told me that the materials that had been sent by the coroner in October had been passed through the British consulate because coroners' requests have to go through the Foreign Office. They were passed to the consulate in November, and passed to the French authorities. The French authorities notified the British consul at the beginning of February that the papers had been retrieved from the archive and that the file was on the desk of the relevant person. The family were told that it could be four months before the paperwork would be processed and passed on to the coroner. It is now nearly four months since the beginning of February, and certainly no papers have arrived.

[Mr. Tim Collins]

Mr. Jim Allison, Clive's father, has been a sufferer from multiple sclerosis for 17 years and he has said that the strain has meant that the past year has been much the worst for his condition. Additional stress on someone in those circumstances can make matters worse.

I was pleased that the written answers that I received suggest that the Government have been addressing some of the issues. There was a ministerial meeting last November to consider some of the generic, systemic issues. I welcome that, but I was also told, in a written answer on 31 March, that the Allison case was not discussed in detail at that meeting and is not on the agenda for any future scheduled meeting; nor had Ministers discussed French co-operation with British coroners.

The general conclusion was:

"Co-operation is good; the French authorities have to comply with their own formalities."—[Official Report, 31 March 1999; Vol. 328, c. 693.]

The evidence of the Allison case and some other cases suggests that that may be too generous an assessment.

I do not for one moment pretend that there is any ingrained hostility to British people in the way in which the French authorities approach these cases—it is conceivable that they are equally inefficient in cases relating to their own citizens—but it is clear that British coroners do not feel that the French respond to their requests as rapidly and efficiently as they could, or anything like as rapidly and efficiently as coroners in other countries, including less developed countries such as Zambia. The coroner in Barrow said that coroners throughout the country thought the same.

I would be enormously grateful if the Minister took an interest in trying to get the French authorities to supply the papers to the coroner in Barrow. My constituents have now waited 13 months for a verdict on the cause of their son's death. The bureaucratic delay has made things worse for them and caused them further distress. I spoke to the father today. He said that the family do not want to sue. They are not interested in compensation, as they would regard it as blood money. They want justice and they want to know that their son can be laid to rest and the case can be closed so that they can begin to move on with their lives.

Will the Minister please address the issue of the possible systemic problem that seems to have occurred in relationships between British coroners and the French authorities? Ministers have already addressed those issues in meetings with their French counterparts. I would be grateful to know whether there are any plans for further meetings.

All the political parties have produced their manifestos for the European elections and all have said that they favour deepening European Union co-operation on interior and justice policy. Can we please begin to move from the rhetoric to the reality? If we are to have closer co-ordination on justice, could we please start with some justice for British citizens who have lost their loved ones in France?

8.9 pm

Mr. Paul Tyler (North Cornwall): I congratulate the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Collins) on securing this debate, and I am grateful to him for allowing me a few minutes to add to his remarks and, indeed, to endorse some of his concerns. I thank the Minister for agreeing to my speaking, and I, too, congratulate him most warmly on his new appointment.

As the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale said, Caroline Dickinson was a constituent of mine. I have worked closely with her parents, John and Sue Dickinson, to see whether we could not only help the French authorities to bring the culprit to justice, but learn some lessons to help others who may have faced similar appalling tragedies.

Caroline was a young student from Launceston college who went on a school trip to the hostel in Pleine Fougères, where she was murdered. We still do not know who was responsible for that deed. The initial experience that I and her parents had—on both sides of the channel, but especially with the French authorities—was disastrously bad, but it has greatly improved in recent months. As a result of the activities of Baroness Symons, who took an active interest in this case—I took the parents, and other relatives who had been similarly bereaved, to see her—and of the previous Government, who similarly afforded us the opportunity to talk to them about some of the lessons to be learned, the attitude of the French authorities improved distinctly.

Unfortunately and all too often, the slow progress of an inquiry requires the intervention of the British Government before it is approached with more dispatch and effectiveness. In the Dickinson case, the investigative team did not give proper attention to trying to bring the public in France into their confidence and it did not pursue the issue of DNA until it was persuaded to do so by my constituent, Mr. Dickinson. When the team took the opportunity to work with the British police, the investigation advanced dramatically.

I endorse the comments of the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale. When a tragedy occurs, it requires the proactive interest of the British Government at the outset. We should not wait for things to go wrong. That is proved by the fact that when the Government took an interest, there was an immediate improvement both in the flow of information to my constituents and in the urgency with which the investigation was pursued.

Attitudes to investigation procedures differ on either side of the channel. In this country, the police like to take the public into their confidence at the outset. The police try to give as much information as possible to the public and to gain as much information as they can using the media. That is not the French experience and, perhaps, informal steps could be taken, without trying to preach to them, to try to improve that situation.

I wish to emphasise that the key lesson of all the examples with which I have been acquainted is the necessity for a flow of information, whether it be to the coroner's court, the bereaved relatives or the Foreign Office. In many cases, the flow of information has been disastrously slow. When people have suffered such a tragedy, not knowing what is happening—and having no confidence in the process of law in a country just a few miles away across the channel—adds much to the tragic circumstances. I am grateful to the Foreign Office, under this Government and the previous Government, for seeking to assist. I just wish that we had been more effective earlier and, therefore, had achieved better results.

8.13 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Geoffrey Hoon): I am grateful to the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Collins) for his kind words. On behalf of the Government, I acknowledge his thoughtfulness and generosity in withdrawing his application for a debate last Friday to allow hon. Members to attend the funeral of Derek Fatchett. That was a generous and honourable action. I also thank the hon. Member for North Cornwall (Mr. Tyler) for his observations.

I shall begin by explaining the roles of the French and British authorities following the death of a British national in France. When a British national dies in France, the French authorities promptly inform the nearest British consulate. If death is by natural causes, a death certificate is issued by the doctor who certifies the death. If the cause of death is not clear, accidental or violent, the French courts may request a judicial inquiry. The court appoints an investigating magistrate who will order a police investigation, which may take several months to complete. Once that investigation begins, the next of kin, if they want details of it, are required under French law to apply formally to the investigating magistrate to become civil parties to the case. That may take up to a week, during which time the next of kin will be able to obtain only limited information. I recognise that in the immediate aftermath of a death, that could be distressing to a family who might perceive a lack of co-operation on the part of the French authorities. However, it is a French legal requirement, and our consular representatives are not able to circumvent it.

A further problem may be that British families are used to seeing precise causes of death on British death certificates. In France, the precise cause of death is considered confidential and it does not appear on the certificate issued by the doctor. The certificate amounts to a statement that a death has been registered. Again, this may appear curious to British families and may cause concern when appropriate clarification is not immediately forthcoming.

If the next of kin wish to repatriate the body to the United Kingdom, they must apply to the public prosecutor's office for a permit. The undertakers retained by the next of kin usually take responsibility for seeking that. Once the investigating magistrate is satisfied that forensic examination is complete, permission to transport and bury is granted. When all judicial processes are complete, the bereaved family has to apply to a court for copies of any police report.

In accordance with section 8(1) of the Coroners Act 1988, coroners in England and Wales are obliged to hold an inquest into the death of anyone whose body is brought back from abroad for burial in their jurisdiction. The purpose of the inquest is to ascertain who the deceased was and how, when and where the deceased died. Neither the coroner nor the jury can express an opinion on any other matter.

The requirement to hold such inquests was introduced following difficulties with the case of Helen Smith, who died in unnatural circumstances in Saudi Arabia. If the coroner is satisfied that the cause of death has been established by the French authorities, permission is granted for burial. In Scotland, this role falls to the Scottish Office.

If the coroner is not satisfied that the cause of death has been sufficiently established or believes that further investigation is required to establish the cause of death, he may request copies of the French police report and further investigations by the French authorities. British coroners have no direct contact with the French authorities and they ask the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to pass on formal requests. Requests for further investigation may take longer for the French to process, as a court will have to consider them and decide how best to respond. This may involve the re-interviewing of witnesses, whom the court may need to trace.

Our consulates in France monitor the progress of investigations and are prepared to press the French authorities for further action if necessary. In response to the first point made by the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale, I undertake to look afresh at that point to ensure that proper action is taken if necessary.

Our consulates cannot, of course, intervene in investigations, direct them or suggest avenues that might be explored. Once the French authorities conclude the further investigations that the British coroner has requested, the consulate obtains a copy of the French report and forwards it to Her Majesty's coroner's office.

Notwithstanding the views that have been set out, I maintain that co-operation between the French and British authorities over the death of British nationals in France is very good. Requests from coroners offices are dealt with sympathetically by the French authorities. Our consulates in France do not usually experience problems with the French police—the gendarmerie—over notification of deaths of British nationals. We have to acknowledge that the French have an entirely different procedure to our own, and that what some may characterise as unacceptable delay is wholly consistent with French procedure and not a matter of poor co-operation.

I listened carefully to the second and third points that the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale made. I do not accept that there is a systemic problem. We all share the need to deepen justice in interior matters, but the member states of the European Union have a choice—they can seek to harmonise procedures, but I assume that the hon. Gentleman would not want that; or, and this is the approach that the British Government would pursue, we must accept that each country's procedures are different and recognise them for what they are.

Mr. Collins: I accept that there are different traditions, but I hope that the Minister will accept that for many families—certainly my constituents—an appearance is created, I hope unintentionally, of indifference and a casual attitude. Would it be possible for him to take up that matter with the French authorities, suggesting that they could introduce standard procedures saying that they have a different tradition and that they do not seek to create an appearance of indifference?

Mr. Hoon: The hon. Gentleman makes a sensible suggestion. It would be for the French authorities to decide whether it was appropriate to take that course of action. However, I must emphasise that there is no suggestion that, throughout the range of cases with which the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has to deal, there is that sort of difficulty.

I appreciate that the hon. Members for Westmorland and Lonsdale and for North Cornwall raised different cases in which there have been particular problems at particular times. I think that the hon. Member for North Cornwall would accept that subsequently the investigation of that particular case has been pursued vigorously and that the French have taken appropriate and necessary action.

The British Government have been keen to ensure that the deaths of British nationals in France are properly investigated. Perhaps it will assist if I say that my noble Friend the Under-Secretary wrote to Madame Guigou, the French Minister of Justice, on 4 August 1998. My noble Friend stressed the importance of bringing to justice the murderers of British nationals in France and asked the French authorities to spare no efforts in seeking culprits. On 30 November 1998, she met senior officials in Paris from the Ministry of the Interior to discuss the handling of deaths of British nationals and to press for vigorous investigations by the French authorities.

On 11 March, the Home Secretary discussed the investigation of Caroline Dickinson's murder with Monsieur Chevènement, the French Minister of the Interior. I can assure the House that we have an active dialogue with the French to satisfy ourselves that thorough investigations into the murders of British nationals in France are carried out in accordance with appropriate French procedures.

I believe that the relationship between the next of kin of the deceased and the French authorities is generally a good one. Our consulates will certainly do all that they can to help. However, I recognise that the aftermath of a sudden death is not the easiest situation for anyone to deal with. The language barrier and an unfamiliar foreign bureaucracy can provide obstacles to achieving immediate understanding and a good working relationship. The need to become civil parties to the investigation, as I mentioned, and the initial delay to which I referred earlier, can lead to misunderstandings.

Our consulates in France, and indeed all over the world, help next of kin who find difficulty coping with language and cultural differences. They offer guidance on local legislation and customs, and act as intermediaries between the relevant authorities and the next of kin. Our consulates are in continuous dialogue with authorities worldwide to improve working relationships. There is no evidence of systematic discrimination against British nationals in distressing circumstances anywhere, and certainly not in France.

I have the utmost sympathy for those who have experienced the trauma of close relatives dying overseas, especially when the death has been wholly unexpected and untimely. Having to grapple with a foreign legal system, a foreign language, and with unexpected bureaucratic requirements when distraught with grief can clearly overwhelm even the strongest. I can well understand the despair of abiding seemingly endless rounds of investigations and inquiries before grieving relatives are able to feel that justice has been done.

I know that my French counterparts are as anxious as any of us to resolve speedily and effectively all crimes, especially those involving deaths. I will certainly ensure that a further examination is made of the concerns voiced by the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale, and I will report to him accordingly. We will continue to work with the French authorities to address each of those issues.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-three minutes past Eight o'clock.

House of Commons

Friday 21 May 1999

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MADAM SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITION

9.33 am

Mr. David Lepper (Brighton, Pavilion): I have been asked to present a petition about the situation in Kosovo by my constituent, Mrs. Ann Dean. She was moved to initiate it by what she had read and heard about the tragic plight of people who, having lost their livelihood, home and, in many cases, close members of their families, had in effect become refugees in their own land. I believe that the desire to see help go to those people, as expressed by 67 of my constituents who signed the petition, is shared by many others throughout this country.

It is a matter of profound sorrow for me that such a petition is necessary, but it is made necessary by the Serbian Government's continued persecution, destruction and murder in pursuit of their despicable policy of ethnic cleansing.

The petition states:

The Petition of residents of the United Kingdom,

Declares that in early May 1999 the refugees fleeing from Kosovo started, for the first time, to give hunger as their reason for leaving Kosovo, according to journalists who had spoken to them, like two reporters from the Washington Post, whose article was reprinted in The Guardian Weekly on 9 May 1999.

The Petitioners therefore request that the House of Commons urge the Secretary of State for International Development to take urgent steps to ensure that food and medical supplies are able to reach the starving and hungry inside Kosovo, including those in the mountains, in order to reduce the numbers forced to leave Kosovo, to reduce further deaths from hunger and to show the world that NATO's aims are primarily humanitarian.

The Petitioners further request that the House of Commons establish an all-party Committee to monitor the needs of refugees both inside and outside Kosovo.

And the Petitioners remain, etc.

To lie upon the Table.

Orders of the Day

Road Traffic (Vehicle Testing) Bill

Not amended in the Standing Committee, considered.

New Clause 1

INFORMATION ON ACCIDENTS INVOLVING UNCERTIFICATED VEHICLES

'. The Secretary of State shall authorise the use of information in the records maintained under section 45(6B) of the Road Traffic Act 1988 for the purposes of any inquiry into a road traffic accident in which death or serious injury occurs, and shall maintain a record of all such incidents concerning vehicles for which an appropriate test certificate has not been issued.'.—[Mr. Miller.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

9.35 am

Mr. Andrew Miller (Ellesmere Port and Neston): I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

Madam Speaker: With this, it will be convenient to discuss amendment No. 4, in clause 1, page 2, line 6, at end insert

'; and

(c) the registered keeper of the vehicle.'.

Mr. Miller: I congratulate the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on an excellent idea. Through our deliberations this morning, we should ensure that the Bill reaches the statute book in an appropriate form to fulfil the purpose for which it was designed.

I have been involved in the issue of road traffic incidents ever since I have been in the House. I declare an indirect interest as a patron of RoadPeace, the charity that looks after the needs of road traffic victims and their families, who are let down badly by the way in which we as a society treat road death and injury. We regard that as something that might have happened to any of us, but we do not treat the matter with the seriousness that it deserves.

About 3,000 people a year die on our roads. If that happened in one incident—for example, several jumbo jets crashing simultaneously—it would be regarded as a major disaster. The fact that the deaths occur sporadically on roads throughout the country seems to militate against the seriousness of the issue. There are a number of measures that we can take to assist.

My hon. Friend the Minister is aware that Lord Whitty is taking seriously representations made about driver training, the design of roads, speed enforcement and law enforcement. An amazing amount of work is going on in the Department. My hon. Friends in the Home Office are also examining carefully some of the issues relating to the appalling waste of life that occurs each year on our roads.

During my research one thing that became consistently clear was the lack of data to enable us to identify where responsibility lies. We know that some responsibility lies with drivers, but we as a society must improve the situation and reduce the likelihood of such drivers emerging in future.

I find it astonishing that no central records are kept on any subject relating to road deaths. No information emerges from the magistrates court, for example, partly because, as the House knows, very few road deaths become the subject of an inquiry by that court. If a magistrate were dealing with a case in which it was alleged that a driver had exceeded the speed limit, had a bald tyre and did not have an MOT certificate, under current law—regrettably, in my view—the fact that that driver had caused a death might not be the subject of inquiries by the magistrates court. Surely that important information should be collected.

I have argued—I shall touch on this briefly because I realise that the matter is tangential to the clause—that a different approach should be taken to death on the road by making the death central to the charge that is brought against the driver. I shall be publishing some information in the next few weeks, following the research that has been undertaken by my office into international comparisons. It would be extremely helpful at magistrates court level if there was some recording of information to go on to a central database. The connections that are present—at least anecdotally, from conversations that I have had with magistrates—could be put together so that serious scientific analysis could take place.

We all read in the local press of drivers—they are usually males under 25 years of age driving a vehicle that is not properly licensed, not insured and without an MOT certificate—being convicted of various motoring offences. However, there is no collection of that data and I would argue that there should be.

Coroners courts, of course, deal with deaths that result from road incidents. The consequence of such a death on the family is obvious; it results in an amazing amount of trauma. However, the connection between such a death and the non-existence of an MOT certificate—anecdotally, this appears to be the position in a significant number of cases—is not recorded. The purpose of my new clause is to make a small addition to the excellent proposition that has been brought before us by the hon. Member for Basingstoke.

I realise that the Under-Secretary may say that my new clause would have significant resource implications. I appreciate that. Literally—that is how we are supposed to read clauses—it could have resource implications for magistrates, the police, coroners, my hon. Friend and the Home Office. That point will have to be considered. However, I hope that my hon. Friend will respond in the spirit of the clause. Such considerations need to be balanced against the extraordinarily high cost of death on the road each year.

It has been estimated that the cost throughout Europe is an amazing £40 billion. That is the calculation following a serious piece of research undertaken by the European Federation of Traffic Victims. The federation has observer status at the United Nations so it is a respectable organisation. The Government should consider carefully how to balance that huge cost to the public purse against expenditure implications.

I would argue, if it came to the point of argument with my hon. Friend the Minister, that the balance must be in favour of the victims and their families. Modest expenditure could bring about massive savings consequentially.

9.45 am

Mr. Desmond Browne (Kilmarnock and Loudoun): I have considerable sympathy with the objective that lies behind the new clause. I have some experience in the courts in Scotland in dealing with road traffic prosecutions. I am aware that there are sometimes difficulties in obtaining the information that is available about the roadworthiness of vehicles. I am also concerned about the narrowness of the new clause. My experience is that the correlation of information about serious injury or death in road traffic accidents is sometimes a matter of chance.

I have been involved in many road traffic accident cases where there was no serious injury or death, but where the outcome was contributed to by the significant unroadworthiness of vehicles. I suspect that that is the position in the majority of cases. Has my hon. Friend given any consideration to the possibility of extending the new clause so that we might focus on the roadworthiness or otherwise of vehicles involved in accidents, which perhaps is what the Bill is about, rather than the consequences of accidents?

Mr. Miller: My hon. Friend raises an important point. It is right that our primary focus should be on unroadworthy vehicles, the competence of drivers, the proper design of roads and the reinforcement of the message to drivers—it has been given by this Government and previous Governments—of the consequences of drinking and driving, especially over Christmas. That focus and that message are critical.

I, as a Back-Bench Member, drafted the new clause. There may be arguments for broadening its scope. However, you would not allow me to do that today, Mr. Deputy Speaker. We are stuck, perhaps regrettably in view of my hon. Friend's intervention, with the words on the amendment paper. None the less, I hope that I can satisfy his concerns.

Mr. Jonathan Shaw (Chatham and Aylesford): I take up the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne). If we were able to widen the new clause, would that not act as a deterrent for the appalling people who weld together cars that have been involved in accidents? A friend of mine purchased such a vehicle. She did not have a great deal of expertise and, six months later, she found that the vehicle was a death trap. It was extremely worrying because my friend was a foster parent and was transporting children in her care.

Mr. Miller rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. Perhaps the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) should take his own advice of a few minutes ago.

Mr. Miller: I cannot remember what that was, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Mr. Shaw) raises a point that is incorporated in the new clause. I am saying that, with the technology that is now available to the Government, proper cross-referencing of information relating to vehicles and drivers—information that is sitting in court rooms throughout the country, in the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency and in MOT records—will help us, first, and most importantly, to understand whether there is any substance in the anecdotal information that suggests that there is a link between drivers who persistently abuse the law and unroadworthy vehicles. Secondly, it will provide the Government with an opportunity to examine the information and to determine the best way forward.

Mr. Browne: Before my hon. Friend moves off cost implications, and the effect of his new clause and the rest of this brief Bill, I point out that one of the advantages of the database that would be created would be that the police, through the police national computer, could access relevant information instantaneously at accidents. He may be undermining his new clause to some degree in that respect. The information ought to be collated through the police, without the involvement of magistrates or anyone else.

Mr. Miller: The Bill permits the collection of some information through the police national computer, but, for the sake of brevity, I shall not rustle through my papers to find the relevant clause. The police could be empowered for the purposes of existing road traffic legislation to utilise information collected under the Bill, but, in its present form, it does not authorise the Secretary of State to use that information for purposes of inquiry.

I want to ensure that information flows both ways between those who collect MOT data and those who are responsible for overseeing the provisions of legislation dealing with death and serious injury on the road. If we achieve that modest objective, we shall have taken one step along the road of dealing with some of the issues on which I, a number of hon. Members on both sides of the House and organisations such as Brake and RoadPeace have been campaigning for a long time. That is not a perfect solution, but it is part of a complex solution.

Dr. George Turner (North–West Norfolk): I am not clear about whether the information to be exchanged would include information about failure of the MOT test. Two classes of people do not have MOT certificates for perhaps a week or more: some people may simply have been careless or forgetful, but the worst incidents involve people who deliberately use their vehicle even though it has failed an MOT. It is important that knowledge of failure should be available, but I am not clear about whether that would be included in the information to which my hon. Friend is referring.

Mr. Miller: I think that the correct answer to my hon. Friend is that such examples would fall outside the scope of the new clause. I am not entirely certain of what happens to records of failures collected by MOT testing stations, and perhaps my hon. Friend the Minister may be able to deal with that issue when she responds. The individual is given a copy of the certificate, but I do not know what happens subsequently to the original information about the vehicle.

With today's technology, it would certainly be possible to include on a database information about a vehicle that failed the MOT test today, and then passed and gained a certificate a week later after having the appropriate work carried out. I think that such a provision comes within the scope of the Bill, but it may not fall specifically within the scope of the new clause.

Mr. Andrew Dismore (Hendon): Perhaps my hon. Friend and I can help each other on that point. If a registration number is not on the computer, the police know that the vehicle has no MOT and must therefore be an MOT failure by definition. That is the short-circuit way round the problem identified by my hon. Friend the Member for North–West Norfolk (Dr. Turner).

Mr. Miller: If the police stop a vehicle today because they suspect the driver of committing a road traffic offence or, specifically in the context of the new clause, of being involved in a death or the causing of serious injury, I and 99 per cent. of the public would expect them to have the ability to check not only whether the driver's licence is in order, using the police national computer, but whether the vehicle's paperwork is in order. That resource could be made available to the police, beneficially and within the scope of the Bill, and would be a massive advantage.

It could be argued that civil liberties would be breached, but I shall take that argument head on: the real breach of civil liberties is the death and maiming of people on our roads every year. In respect of every issue on which the Government introduce strengthened computerised databases, we must be mindful of privacy and ensure that proper data protection and privacy legislation is developed to reinforce such changes. At the same time, we must be prepared to tackle that argument absolutely head on and say that the real civil liberties issue is the injuring of people on the roads.

Dr. George Turner: Will my hon. Friend clarify the meaning of the words "any inquiry" in his new clause? I am not sure whether they would have legal definition, or whether I or a member of the public could decide to inquire into something. I should have thought that he would want to be restrictive and would have used those words in a more technical sense. Can he explain to the House whether his new clause would restrict those who are entitled to inquire and to get that information?

Mr. Miller: I do not claim to be an expert parliamentary draftsman, but the provision, through its use of the word "any", was intended to be broad brush. As I have said, I would include magistrates courts, coroners courts and the police. There is even a legitimate argument for such information to be made available to insurance companies, because it would be a material fact in respect of whether a policy was valid. We will have to look at that issue as time goes on. I intended the wording to affect not members of the public or the press, but any public authority legitimately engaged in an inquiry relating to death or serious injury. However, I can see arguments for extending it beyond that.

This is a modest new clause, the spirit of which I hope my hon. Friend the Minister will accept. I appreciate that she may have difficulty with the precise wording, because we have not had the opportunity to discuss it, but the intention is as I have described. I hope that, as part of the House's determination to help to reduce the number of deaths and serious injuries on the roads, the Government will consider incorporating at least the spirit of the new clause into the Bill.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (Ms Glenda Jackson): May I begin by thanking my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) for the warm tribute that he paid to our noble Friend Lord Whitty for his dedication to all the road safety issues that my hon. Friend mentioned, such as ensuring better driver training and better road design. As he knows, the Government are engaged in a review of speed, and we have already given a clear estimate of targets for the reduction of deaths and injuries. This country's record is extremely good, but that is no argument for complacency. As the whole House knows, my hon. Friend is a patron of RoadPeace and is assiduous in arguing from the perspective of those who are grievously hurt by the loss of members of their families as a result of pointless and often preventable road accidents.

As I am sure my hon. Friend is also aware, the Government have reduced the necessity for local authorities to apply to the Secretary of State before introducing 20 mph zones or limits on local roads. I assure my hon. Friend, and all members of RoadPeace and other organisations dedicated to reducing deaths and injuries on the roads, that the Government are committed to that aim. As my hon. Friend said, if the number of deaths on our roads occurred as a result of aeroplanes falling from the sky, the reaction would be vociferous. We are concerned to ensure that the number of deaths on the roads is not considered an issue about which nothing can or should be done. We are committed to reducing the number of deaths and injuries on the roads.

I presume that the new clause is intended to serve two purposes. First, it would require the Secretary of State to authorise the use of information in the database of MOT records for the purposes of any inquiry into a road traffic accident. Secondly, it would require the Secretary of State to maintain a record of all such incidents where the vehicle involved did not have a valid test certificate at the time of the accident.

On the first part of the new clause, it seems that the principal party likely to be interested in obtaining such information is the police. However, the police already have access to all relevant information under the provisions of new section 46(5) of the Road Traffic Act 1988—a point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne).

My hon. Friend the Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) was concerned about whether the information would show that a vehicle had failed an MOT. As my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) pointed out to him, the whole point of computerisation is to enable the police easily to access whether the vehicle in question has a valid certificate. It is illegal for people to use a vehicle without a valid MOT certificate. They are liable to be stopped by the police and prosecuted if they cannot produce a valid certificate, which they need to produce in order to obtain a vehicle excise duty disc. If there is no valid disc, it could be because of a possible MOT offence.

Dr. George Turner: Will the Minister clarify whether the records will contain information about failure of the test? I should have thought that, if a vehicle failed its MOT because it did not have adequate brakes, that information should be available to the police because it would be a much more significant offence than simply forgetting to get an MOT certificate. Will that information be on the computer?

Ms Jackson: I repeat to my hon. Friend that it is an offence to drive a vehicle on the roads without a valid MOT certificate, for the reasons that I have already given. In many instances, when a car is submitted for an MOT and is deemed to fail in one or two areas, the whole vehicle has to be retested for technical reasons. However, the purpose of the Bill is to ensure that the computerisation process in which the Government are engaged should be capable of detailing, for those who would most need the information, not least the police, whether a vehicle had a valid MOT certificate. That is central and essential to the proposals in the Bill.

Mr. Miller: I understood the question raised by my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) more clearly when I was sitting down and not under pressure to respond. He made an important point. Will my hon. Friend the Minister look at the possibility of including in the design of the central MOT record system information relating to vehicles that fail the test? Magistrates courts would quite reasonably take different views of someone who omitted to get his vehicle tested within three years and a day, and someone who had driven a vehicle knowing it to be unroadworthy because it had failed the MOT.

Ms Jackson: I thank my hon. Friend for that question because it helps to clarify the position. There will be, within the proposed database, records of passes and failures of vehicles. That is one of the valuable pieces of information that can be made available in certain circumstances to individuals but, more importantly, to the Vehicle Inspectorate because it would enable it to ensure that the testing centres were efficient and were testing adequately and properly, and to highlight areas where it might be necessary to make improvements.

Mr. Shaw: May I press the Minister on this point? Will the information contained in the records say why a vehicle failed? As my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) said, if it has failed because of dodgy brakes, the magistrates court would want to take that into account.

Ms Jackson: With respect to my hon. Friend, I think that there is slight confusion about the information required in order to proceed with a prosecution. As I said, the information that I should imagine is required by the police is available to the police. The issue of defining on the database what particular faults caused a vehicle to fail the test is interesting. I hope that it would be possible to include that information within the programming of the computer base, because those issues are important not only to people who buy cars, but to those who manufacture them.

As I said, the police will already have access to all relevant information under the provisions of new section 46(5). In other cases, the Secretary of State could be obliged by law to provide information from the proposed record of MOT results—for example, where a court action was pending and evidence was required to be put before a court relating to information from the record of MOT results. That situation is already contemplated by clause 4, which makes it possible for an authenticated person, on behalf of the Secretary of State, to give evidence from the records maintained under section 45(6B) in written form.

It is also possible that the Secretary of State may face other requests for information and those would have to be considered on their merits, within the context of the regulation-making powers under new section 45(6) of the Road Traffic Act 1988. I trust that my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston would agree that those powers are already part of the Bill, so the first part of his new clause is not necessary.

Dr. George Turner: My hon. Friend said that the Bill covered the key people who would want to get at the information. I am not completely clear whether it covers all those who may have a reasonable case to ask for the information, such as insurance companies or people who have also been involved in the incident. Would they be able to request the information, or would it have to come through the police or some official mechanism?

Ms Jackson: As I said, if a case is being prosecuted in a court, the Bill ensures that the police have automatic access to such information. A requirement is placed on the Secretary of State to furnish such information as the court may require. Our courts are open and public places, so any information that is presented to a court would be open to anyone who is in the court to hear it or who reads the report of the court proceedings.

On the wider question of information available to others under the Bill, the Secretary of State will define in regulations the classes of person for whom information will be available. They would have to prove that they had a justifiable reason for making such inquiries about an individual vehicle.

The second part of my hon. Friend's new clause is concerned with maintaining a record of all road traffic accidents involving death or serious injury in which the vehicle involved did not have a valid test certificate. The proposed database would not show whether the fact that a vehicle did not have a valid test certificate was relevant to the accident. It may or may not be relevant—the database would not provide that answer, and at worst it could lead to misleading assumptions being made on the basis of spurious statistics. That is my overriding concern, rather than, as my hon. Friend averred, the perception of vastly increased costs. The point about misleading assumptions was made, in his own individual way, by my hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun.

Mr. Miller: The fact that there is a lot of spurious information is precisely what concerns me. There is no scientifically collected data that help us to understand whether there is a correlation between drivers driving without proper paperwork and the consequences of their actions. Academic research may be undertaken, perhaps supported by the Department, but the new clause would create the database that would supply the information to be analysed.

Ms Jackson: The Department intends to engage in research. As I have had occasion to say, the Government are concerned to do everything possible to reduce road casualties. I am not suggesting for one moment that ensuring adequate vehicle maintenance has no bearing on that objective.

My hon. Friend suggested that some vehicle owners take a somewhat casual approach to their responsibilities, and that some drivers are perfectly happy to drive without the valid and necessary paperwork. I think that he was implying that that shows their lack of responsibility for maintaining their vehicle, quite apart from ensuring that it is adequately licensed.

Mr. Browne: As my hon. Friend the Minister said, the existing road traffic legislation provides for the prosecution of the offence of driving vehicles without MOT certificates. Those who have practised in the courts know what small penalties are imposed for that transgression of the law. Unless the prosecution also includes individual breaches of regulations relating to individual parts of the vehicle, the court often does not know the reason for the failure and the reason why the vehicle does not have an MOT.

That long preamble leads me to the general point that I think my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) is making. There could be an increase in the penalty for failure to have an MOT certificate and the greater prosecution of individual breaches of regulations if it were known that there is, as many of us suspect, a significant correlation between the roadworthiness of vehicles and their involvement in accidents. I took it from what the Minister said that such research was being undertaken. Will she expand on that for the benefit of the House, and explain the objectives of that research?

10.15 am

Ms Jackson: I thank my hon. Friend for raising an issue that, as I have said, I shall touch on later. We are discussing a vehicle owner's responsibility to ensure that he is legally entitled to drive on our roads by virtue of the relevant paperwork. Vehicle owners also have a responsibility to themselves and to other road users to ensure that, when they put their vehicle on the road, it is roadworthy.

My hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun referred to penalties. However, there is, is there not, a deterrent element in the Bill? The modernisation and computerisation of records on MOT testing would affect the ease and speed with which the police would be able to check, in any incident that was brought to their attention, whether the vehicle involved was adequately, properly and legally licensed and had the relevant MOT certificate. The issue of penalties is outside the remit of the Bill.

It is precisely because we are concerned that vehicles on our roads should be roadworthy that we have MOT testing to ensure that vehicles are adequately maintained. We believe that, in the main, the MOT testing scheme serves that objective well. In practice, very few accidents are caused or contributed to by vehicle roadworthiness defects. The vast majority of accidents are caused by driver error, excess speed, or incapacity of the driver through the effects of alcohol or drugs. That is why the Government are working hard to crack down on those problems.

[Ms Jackson]

Research has been carried out over the years to find out what proportion of accidents are caused or contributed to by vehicle roadworthiness defects. Only a small proportion of accidents arise because of such problems. Further research is in the pipeline. An on-the-spot accident study is ready to run for the next three years to provide the Government with up-to-date information on accident causation.

Mr. Dismore: Will my hon. Friend clarify the research? My hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) was making the point that the lack of an MOT certificate is symptomatic of a much greater disregard for road safety generally. Will the research cover not only the correlation between the lack of an MOT certificate, irrespective of its causative effect on the accident, and the nature of the offence committed by the driver, but the disregard of the need for motor insurance, which often goes hand in hand with the lack of an MOT certificate and a vehicle excise duty licence?

Ms Jackson: I should be happy to furnish my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon with that detailed information. He reiterated the point that my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston and I have made. What we are talking about, in respect of a failure to maintain a vehicle in a roadworthy state, is a lack of responsibility on the part of the individual vehicle owner. The requirements of the Bill, and those of existing legislation, are part and parcel of a wish to encourage all vehicle owners to meet those requirements in full.

As I have said, the information that will result from the research to which I have referred, and research of which we already have knowledge, will enable us to make informed decisions about what more can be done to improve safety on our roads. I appreciate that new clause 1 stems from the deep compassion felt by the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston for the hapless victims of road accidents, which I am sure that all hon. Members share. The Government certainly share it, which is why we have committed ourselves to a wide range of policies and to enabling research to take place. We are taking a number of steps to ensure that our roads become infinitely safer.

I hope that, for the reasons that I have given, my hon. Friend will accept that, in the instances that I have specified, the new clause is unnecessary. The requirements that it mentions are already in the Bill. I trust that he will be willing to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Andrew Hunter (Basingstoke): It would be presumptuous of me to try to add to what the Minister has said, but I should like to make a few brief points about new clause 1.

I appreciated the kind remarks made by the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) about the Bill, and pay tribute to his commitment to the cause of promoting road safety and related matters. I disagree only with the detail of the new clause, not with the principle.

I agree with the Minister that the Bill as it stands will effectively deliver what the hon. Gentleman seeks. Under the Bill, the police have access to all the information on the database of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency and that on the proposed new MOT database. Clauses 2 and 4 enable information to be made available to any inquiry if the Secretary of State considers that to be necessary.

Dr. George Turner: May I pursue the point about who has a legitimate interest in the information? If I were a solicitor representing someone who had been involved in an accident, I would want to know some facts so that I could advise my client. The information might be available, but I assume that I would have to ask the Secretary of State for permission to have access to it. Does the Bill make it clear that it will be easy for people with a legitimate interest in the information to gain access to it, and that the police would not have to gain access to it first because a court case was involved?

Mr. Hunter: "Easy" is a relative word. Certainly the Bill allows information on the MOT database to be made available to people who have an interest in a particular vehicle. I am afraid that I do not know the precise details of the mechanism whereby the information would become available, but the Bill empowers the Secretary of State, by regulation, to make it available to those who can show an interest in a particular vehicle.

Dr. Turner: I appreciate that the regulations have yet to be drafted, but could the hon. Gentleman give us some idea of how he imagines that the regulations might make the information available, and to whom it would be available? I approve of the principle, but I should like to know more about the practicalities.

Mr. Hunter: The hon. Gentleman must not lose sight of the fact that the regulations will essentially constitute a rerun of those created by the Road Traffic Act 1988. There are points of difference because of the computerisation programme, but they are relatively minor.

I am sorry that I cannot help the hon. Gentleman more. When I was considering tabling the Bill, I went to the Vehicle Inspectorate and was told how the public-private initiative—the new private finance initiative—was working, and what else would be in the programme. I do not know the details, but I willingly accept the principle that the information should be made available as specified in the Bill.

I am afraid that, in my wish to help the hon. Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner), I have strayed from the subject of new clause 1. The new clause suggests that the record could be useful for research purposes. I confess that I had not considered that possibility, but records of road traffic accidents are currently kept, and the police are obliged to submit completed accident report forms, which are collated and summarised. I understand that they are called "Stats 19 records". That mechanism may not be perfect for providing the information that the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston wants to be available, but, through discussion with the Government, the Stats 19 records could provide the sort of information that he wants more readily than the MOT database.

Mr. Browne: May I return to the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Mr. Shaw)? My understanding is that clause 2 allows access to information, and that new section 46(6) empowers the Secretary of State to make regulations to allow access on a commercial basis; but the new subsection restricts access to that which excludes information about the particulars of the premises on which an MOT examination is carried out, or about the person who carries it out—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman's interventions are becoming longer and longer. May I ask him to be a little more brief or, perhaps, to make a speech later?

Mr. Browne: I will try to conform to your guidance, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The simple point that I wish to make is this. A person with an interest may want access to the information for legitimate reasons, perhaps in order to sue a garage or individual tester. Does the new clause provide for that?

Mr. Hunter: I appreciate your leniency, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in allowing the debate to wander from the subject of new clause 1.

New section 46(6) facilitates the commercial sale of information on a database, but excludes means of identifying car owners and MOT testers. New subsection (5) allows the Secretary of State to facilitate access for prescribed persons, such as the police.

10.30 am

Mr. Dismore: There is much to be said for new clause 1. It tries to deal with two different issues: first, the problem that often occurs at the scene of an accident; secondly, the problems that occur later. Perhaps at this stage, I should declare an interest. For some 20 years, I practised as a solicitor specialising in personal injury law, although I have not taken any cases since being elected to this place.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London dealt with a number of the problems that may arise through references to other parts of the Bill, but one or two key factors are still not being addressed there. At the moment, if someone is involved in a road accident and cannot produce their documents there and then, all the police can do is issue them with a document—I think that it is called a HORT/1—asking them to produce their insurance certificate, MOT certificate and driving licence.

Effectively, the driver can then move off with impunity, irrespective of whether the vehicle is roadworthy. The police will obviously do a check there and then, but, in practice, whether the vehicle has an MOT certificate is not taken into account because the police simply cannot check that.

I hope that, as a result of the Bill—I think that the new clause would go some way towards contributing to solving the problem—the police may be able to dial up and check there and then whether the vehicle has an MOT certificate. However, that begs the question: what do the police do if it turns out that the vehicle does not have an MOT certificate? Do they have the power, for example, to say that the vehicle cannot be moved except on the back of tow truck? Effectively, even though the vehicle does not have an MOT certificate—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The new clause is not about the powers of the police.

Mr. Dismore: The point that I make arises out of the inquiry that is permitted at the scene of a road traffic accident in relation to the MOT certificate. My concern is whether the police can stop that vehicle being used.

The measure is also helpful for inquiries into the causes of accidents. The Minister mentioned that the vast bulk of road accidents is caused not by the condition of the vehicle, but by the carelessness or wilfulness of the driver concerned. Given my experience of 20 years in practice, I concur with that view, but problems arise concerning the condition of the vehicle, which sometimes may be detected by an MOT certificate and sometimes not.

My hon. Friend the Member for Chatham and Aylesford (Mr. Shaw) made the telling point that, sometimes, a vehicle has been cut in half and welded together. Sometimes, it may have an MOT certificate and sometimes not. I can illustrate the point from personal experience. A few years ago, I had a car stolen. I was very sad to see it go. It was a bit of a boy racer car—a racing green Ford Capri 2.8, the last of the line and utterly irreplaceable. When it was stolen, I was heartbroken. Ultimately, the police found it, but it had been completely stripped of everything.

Mr. Shaw: Even the furry dice?

Mr. Dismore: There were no furry dice, but the sunroof and speedy wheels had gone. The vehicle was written off by the insurers because to replace the spare parts alone would have cost £6,000.

A year or two later, the DVLA asked me the circumstances in which the vehicle had been written off because someone had bought the shell, somehow reconstructed it and applied to re-register the vehicle. When I lost it, the vehicle had an MOT certificate. That person could have reconstructed the vehicle and, for all we know, it could have been driven around in an unsafe condition. In fact, the vehicle was still structurally sound. The thieves had taken only the bits off, so I was able to reassure the DVLA, but that is the sort of problem that could be dealt with by the new clause.

Another problem that often arises in investigating road accidents is determining whether a defect on the vehicle is a latent or patent defect. Sometimes, it may be detected by an MOT inspection and sometimes not. I remember a case that I dealt with in practice where the driver's seat suddenly shifted as the driver came up to a T-junction, propelling him forward and, he said, pushing his foot firmly on to the accelerator. Needless to say, the vehicle shot across the T-junction and into the path of an oncoming vehicle. As people say in such matters, a collision ensued.

The big problem that we had in the investigation was whether the accident was a result of a defect in the vehicle, or whether the driver was making up a story. The new clause would go some way towards helping to resolve that problem.

[Mr. Dismore]

We had grave difficulty in tracking down whether the vehicle had an MOT certificate because court proceedings at that time meant that we could not ask the other party to produce the certificate until after proceedings had commenced. Therefore, during most of the preparations for the case, we had no idea one way or the other about the vehicle's condition, other than what we could detect by inspection. We could not check whether the vehicle had an MOT certificate. The recent rules of court changes that came in a couple of weeks ago may go some way towards dealing with that problem through pre-action protocols, but it was a serious problem at the time.

One of my concerns about the new clause is that it does not necessarily deal with the position where there is a defect in a vehicle that may not require an MOT certificate. I pray in aid of that argument an accident that occurred to a councillor in my constituency only a few weeks ago. A wheel came off his brand new car—it was only a couple of weeks old—as he driving on the motorway. He had no way of knowing about the problem. Luckily, no one else was hurt, but one of the problems in those circumstances would be to determine the cause of the accident. The MOT certificate would not really help much there.

My hon. Friend the Member for North–West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) raised an important point—the extent to which the information will be made available beyond the police and the enforcing authorities and, in particular, whether it will be made available to the victim of a road accident, or that person's lawyers.

At the moment, if a road accident occurs, the normal procedure at the scene of the accident is to exchange details of insurance. As I understand it, there is no obligation in road traffic legislation to exchange MOT details as well. It may be that, through the new clause, that could become part of the standard procedure at road accidents. The new clause may help those investigating road accidents and those at the scene of the accidents—the victims—to deal with that problem.

Ms Glenda Jackson: I appreciate the arguments that my hon. Friend advances but, under new section 46(6) of the Act, anonymised particulars and information would be sold

"(a) to such persons as the Secretary of State thinks fit, and

(b) for such price and on such other terms, and subject to such restrictions, as he thinks fit".

Therefore, as I said earlier, the new clause is not necessary. The requisite powers will be in the Bill.

Mr. Dismore: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for raising that point.

Fees will be levied. In parenthesis, I hope that those are reasonable because the charges that are levied by the police in relation to their reports are sometimes excessive. My concern is that the Bill creates quite a bureaucratic process by which to obtain the information. How much easier it would be if the parties could simply exchange the details there and then, on the spot, at the time of an accident, as they do with insurance details.

The new clause contains the word "inquiry" as opposed to "enquiry". They have, I think, different grammatical and syntax effects. "Inquiry" effectively means inquiries by public authorities, the police and so forth. "Enquiries" would include those made by, for example, solicitors investigating the cause of an accident, or the victim of accident who is trying to find out whether the MOT certificate had any relevance to the case.

For that reason, although I share the sentiments behind it, I cannot support the new clause as it stands, although if the word had an "e" instead of an "i" I would be much more supportive.

Dr. George Turner: New clause 1 might be a helpful tool to allow us to explore the principle of freedom of information. I was elected on a manifesto that said that we, as a party, supported freedom of information.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on his Bill. I am pleased that some progress is being made in terms of the data that is collected and the use of computers to store, and to help in the analysis of, the data.

I was shocked when, as a police authority member, I found that incidents records were still being kept, in long-hand, in a book—making analysis of the incidents next to impossible. As a result of my experience of a police authority, I believe that the failure of police to adopt information technology must seriously hamper their ability not only to investigate crime, but to analyse incidents. I am absolutely certain that greater knowledge about what causes accidents will help us to reduce the problems that they cause so many people.

I was interested in the Bill also because, as someone with an information technology background, I believe that, in introducing information technology, it is a mistake merely to make minor amendments to previous practice. A common mistake when finally involving computers in our work is simply to record what we have done before. I am concerned that the Bill may have a weakness in that it does not change enough regulation sufficiently to effect current practice.

I should be grateful if the Minister would help me to understand the basis on which information will be made available, as I am not sure whether large sums will be involved in operating the provisions. If large sums will have to be paid to gain information, the Exchequer's point of view on the matter would be understandable. However, I hold the prejudice that information should be readily available to those who want to use it, and that the people best placed to judge whether they should have it are those who will take the time and make the effort to use it.

I accept that personal details—possession of which might be deemed to be an intrusion into an individual's privacy—should be protected. However, we should not extend the concept of privacy to motor vehicles.

Mr. Shaw: I appreciate the point that my hon. Friend is making. On Second Reading, my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London gave as an example the fact that

"prospective purchases of second-hand vehicles might be interested to see evidence of the recorded mileage of vehicles submitted for MOT test."—[Official Report, 5 March 1999; Vol. 326, c. 1406.]

Does he think that such information would be very welcome to people wishing to buy a second-hand car?

Dr. Turner: Indeed; and I shall deal with that very point after developing my argument a little.

I hold the prejudice that, unless large sums are involved, Government should adhere to the principle of freedom of information, and not censor information unless there is good cause to do so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is now going rather wide of the mark, which is new clause 1. I should be grateful if he would come back to dealing with the specifics of new clause 1.

Dr. Turner: I shall, of course, take your advice, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am essentially coming back to the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) on the difference between an "inquiry" and an "enquiry".

We should certainly be considering the possibility of making information available on the basis of an "enquiry". We are talking about information that should, quite reasonably, be available largely on the internet. I do not know why there should be a bureaucratic procedure—in which civil servants process forms claims according to rules drawn up by Ministers, and regulations that took up parliamentary time—to gain that information. We should not create further bureaucracy to handle public information that should be available on the internet. It should take only a few clicks of the mouse to discover the history of the car that one wishes to buy.

10.45 am

Computerisation and other modern technology could revolutionise the way in which consumers are informed. I simply cannot understand why, when they are deciding on a car purchase, people should not be able to analyse the relevant information stored on the internet—such as whether a particular car model made in 1996 had a good repair record. MOT information on why a car or model of car failed its test is very useful for the individual.

Why should access to such information entail a bureaucratic process? Why should we require permission to gain that information? Should not the public have a right of access to information, unless there is a good reason why they should not have it?

Mr. Dismore: My hon. Friend is making a very interesting point. Let us suppose that someone was considering buying a specific vehicle or make of vehicle and paid a fee for information on it, but then decided not to purchase that vehicle or make of vehicle. Under the provisions of the Bill, he would have to pay a fee each time that he wanted information on a vehicle—perhaps several times—whereas, as my hon. Friend said, vehicle information on the internet could be gained at minimal cost.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before the hon. Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) responds to that intervention, I remind the House that the new clause is not about purchasing vehicles, but relates specifically to accidents.

Dr. Turner: I understand your point, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I am generalising from the specific point—to which I shall return.

I really should be grateful if, before the new clause is withdrawn or pressed to a Division, the Minister or the hon. Member for Basingstoke would make it clear why there should be any restriction on such information, and why it could not be gained with a simple "enquiry". I appreciate that some information is more personal, involving the privacy of the citizen, and should not be made available without a formal procedure. However, it is entirely legitimate to allow people making a simple "enquiry" access to the type of information that we are discussing—such as whether a vehicle had had an MOT or recently failed one. Members of the public should be able to access that information if they feel that they should have it. We do not need a bureaucracy to give us permission to have access to it.

Ms Glenda Jackson: As I have already had occasion to say, the Bill provides that such information would be available if the "enquirer"—I think that I am right in that; not "inquirer"—could show that he or she had a legitimate interest in a particular vehicle. My hon. Friend spoke of someone wishing to purchase a second-hand vehicle.

Under the regulations, which are to be defined, it will be possible for organisations and businesses dealing specifically in the matter to buy information about a wide range of vehicles. I am sure that my hon. Friend is aware of the Data Protection Acts, and that he joins all hon. Members in wishing to ensure that machines and other individuals are not able to intrude ever more greatly in our lives by making "enquiries", the origin of which we would not know.

Dr. Turner: I thank the Minister for making that point, although I am not sure that I entirely agree with it. I have absolutely no concern about some information about my life being available on computer. Although I should like some of it to be protected, that certainly does not include information about vehicles.

I am simply suggesting that the information should be available on the internet—which is in the spirit in which the Labour party is proposing freedom of information for the citizen. I believe that—generally, if it does not involve real cost—information held by the Government should be available to the public. The real cost of the information that we are discussing would be incurred by creating bureaucracy.

Mr. Shaw: I take my hon. Friend's point, and I am being convinced by his argument. However, does he agree that information should be available not only about a car's history and MOT, but about the garage's history and the quality of—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I do not want to have to remind the hon. Gentleman again—we are now straying very wide of the mark.

Dr. Turner: On your advice, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I shall ignore that intervention.

I conclude with a straight question. If the provision involves a bureaucratic procedure, why is that necessary? If the information is stored on computer and government computers are already linked, why should the information not be available on the internet? Information that is held by the Government and is not personal is public information and should therefore be accessible to the public at a realistic charge. If the information were on the internet, the charge would need to be only some tenths of a penny.

Mr. Tony McNulty (Harrow, East): I congratulate the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on introducing the Bill, which goes a long way towards precisely what my hon. Friend the Member for North–West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) suggested that it did not do—using computerisation to provide much more than paper records.

Although we have had a useful and interesting debate on new clause 1, the underlying confusion demonstrates the flaws of the proposal, which attempts to do four different things in 10 different directions on the premise of two underlying themes. The notion that there should be, in our legislative body, greater recognition, or analysis, of vehicles involved in road traffic accidents in which death or serious injury occurs is beyond doubt. I could explore why it is shameful that people get away with murder in respect of deaths on the road, but I am sure that I would be admonished. The new clause is not the vehicle to redress the imbalance in our criminal law in respect of those who cause death or serious injury. Although it is well meaning to hook it on to this commendable Bill, it is not necessarily appropriate. Nor is it appropriate to talk at length about 20 mph zones, which reduce the incidence of traffic accidents—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is anxious not to be admonished, so I should be grateful if he would return to new clause 1.

Mr. McNulty: I apologise, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Although it expresses the important concern about death and serious injury, new clause 1 is inherently flawed in trying to tag it to the Bill. Its aim is commendable, but this is not the place for it.

Unlike my hon. Friends, I have serious difficulties with the flippant phrase, "any inquiry". The new clause might as well have said, "any old inquiry". The notion expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for North–West Norfolk that the information should be accessible to anyone at public cost and that it should be on the internet is nonsense. It is one of the most absurd reasons that I have heard for freedom of information. Frankly, it undermines genuine, serious arguments in support of that.

I also have difficulty with the notion that, somehow, we should narrow the scope of new clause 1 to vehicles for which appropriate test certificates have not been issued. There are fundamental reasons why it should not be in the Bill, not least because its aims are already incorporated in this and other measures. People make spurious links between the absence of a test certificate and the responsibility or otherwise of the keepers of vehicles, not least those involved in accidents, and new clause 1 would formalise that in legislation. It says nothing about the link between road traffic accidents in which death or serious injury occurs and whether or not the vehicle has an MOT and it does not make a case for obtaining the records of the vehicles involved in such accidents. Neither aspect of what is fundamentally a well-meaning new clause would achieve its objective, so it is flawed.

In respect of whether the new clause should refer to an "inquiry" or an "enquiry", the Bill makes it quite clear what is required from any legitimate source seeking to access the information. It is both flexible and permissive. I can only assume that my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) was touting for trade for his colleagues in the personal injury field by seeking to broaden it further than necessary.

Although the hon. Member for Basingstoke accepted the thrust of new clause 1, which certainly has broad support on both sides of the House, this is not the place to incorporate provisions in respect of death and serious injury in road traffic accidents. New clause 1 is a nice try; it covers many serious issues, but I urge my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) to withdraw it, as it does not add much to a Bill that does a great deal in respect of moving MOT records from a paper trail to computerisation. We would do the country a disservice if we did not utilise that opportunity for modernisation. New clause 1 is flawed and I urge the House to sling it out.

Mr. Miller: We have had a fascinating debate on an important issue. If I am allowed, I join you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in admonishing my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty), who missed the spirit of my new clause. My hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) revealed that he is not only a scholar, but a boy racer. Perhaps another time he will give me a lesson in the use of English. The hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) made an interesting speech and I am grateful for his contribution. We are on the same side in respect of this important issue. My hon. Friend the Member for North–West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) made some important points about privacy. I hope that the Government recognise that we should not design computerised systems simply to replicate the existing paper-based systems. If the regulations are at fault, they should be amended accordingly—

It being Eleven o'clock, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER interrupted the proceedings, pursuant to Standing Order No. 11 (Friday sittings).

Biotechnology

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it not an abuse of the House that the Government bring forward such an important statement on a Friday, when very few Members are here? Is it not even more of an abuse that the Government have consistently done that on five Fridays when there is legislation that they wish to filibuster—notably the Referendums Bill today?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Madam Speaker has no discretion over the making of Government statements at customary times. The Standing Order relating to Friday sittings makes specific provision for statements to be made at 11 o'clock. That is not a matter in which the Chair can intervene. As far as the Chair is concerned, Friday is a proper working day.

Mr. Eric Forth (Bromley and Chislehurst): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Of course we accept what you have said, but perhaps you and Madam Speaker and others could look to see whether it is a coincidence that, over the past few months, when the Government have wished for whatever reason to prolong business, a statement has appeared, while on other days, when that has not been their wish, there has been no statement. Is it beyond possibility or probability that something else might lie behind that coincidence? Perhaps there is a case for looking again at our Standing Orders to see whether such an abuse is avoidable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If it is not convenient to Members, I suggest that the right hon. Gentleman takes the matter up through the usual channels or proposes that it be looked at by the Procedure Committee.

11.1 am

The Minister for the Cabinet Office (Dr. Jack Cunningham): Biotechnology is an important and exciting area of scientific advance that offers enormous opportunities for improving our quality of life. In health care, biotechnology has already helped to develop better treatments for diseases, including multiple sclerosis, heart disease and diabetes. It is also helping the environment through techniques such as bioremediation, which assisted the clean-up of beaches following the Sea Empress oil spill in 1996. In agriculture, genetic modification has the potential to ensure the more efficient production of food that is more nutritious, tastes better and requires fewer pesticides. That is just the start.

There are many real and exciting benefits and potential benefits, but the technology is new and the risks must be rigorously assessed. The Government recognise the considerable public concern about the safety of genetically modified food and crops. Our overriding duty is to protect the public and the environment. We must continue to ensure that the controls that we have in place are sound and command public confidence.

That is why my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister established a new Cabinet committee on biotechnology last autumn. It is why the first decision of the Committee in December was to carry out a review of the regulatory framework to ensure that it was rigorous, as transparent as possible and able to cope with so fast-moving a technology. We invited a wide range of interested bodies to give us their views, including the Select Committees of this House. It is also why we thought it essential to seek the views of the public through the consultation on the biosciences. It is why we commissioned a report from the chief medical officer and chief scientific adviser on the public health implications of genetically modified food. All three reports are published today.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, who is responsible for food safety, have also been in discussion with the industry over the past year to ensure the effective management of the cultivation of genetically modified crops in this country. Today, we are endorsing guidelines for the cultivation of those crops.

The review has found that the existing system of careful case-by-case assessment of new biotechnology products and processes is an essential component of our regulatory system. However, there are persuasive arguments for strengthening the system by adding new strategic commissions to take a broader long-term view of developments in the technology.

We shall set up two new advisory bodies. The Human Genetics Commission will advise us on applications of biotechnology in health care and the impact of human genetics on our lives. The Agriculture and Environment Biotechnology Commission will cover the use of biotechnology in agriculture and its environmental effects. Working alongside the Food Standards Agency, which will soon take on responsibility for genetically modified foods, the new bodies will have wide-ranging remits, advising Ministers on likely future developments in the technology and addressing broader issues, such as ethical considerations.

The members of the new commissions will be drawn from a broad range of interests. Those with expertise of consumer issues and ethics, for example, will sit alongside scientists. The commissions will also consult widely with the public and stakeholders when carrying out their work.

One of the main findings of our consultation exercises was that the regulatory system should be made more transparent. We agree, and our report published today includes guidelines on transparency that all committees involved in biotechnology, including the new commissions, will be required to follow. We are confident that, with those changes, we will have a rigorous and open system for regulating biotechnology that will safeguard the public interest.

In their report on genetically modified foods and public health, the chief medical officer, Professor Liam Donaldson, and the chief scientific adviser, Sir Robert May, conclude:

"Many of the issues raised by foods resulting from genetic modification are equally applicable to foods produced by conventional means."

They go on:

"There is no current evidence to suggest that the genetically modified technologies used to produce food are inherently harmful."

They further report:

"We are reassured by the precautionary nature and rigour of the current procedures used to assess the safety of individual genetically modified foods."

They emphasise the need to keep a close watch on developments and to continue to fund research to improve scientific understanding in this area. The Government and our advisory committees will continue to do that.

[Dr. Jack Cunningham]

Their report encourages us to improve the openness of the regulatory procedures to public scrutiny. We are doing that today. The report also recommends that consideration should be given to the establishment of a national surveillance unit to monitor population health aspects of genetically modified and other types of novel foods. The Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes is already discussing how that might be done. The ministerial Committee will review progress in the autumn.

The Government have been working with environmentalists and the biotechnology industry to ensure that the first farm-scale plantings of genetically modified crops in Britain are carefully managed. That is why we have embarked on a programme of evaluations, which are being rigorously undertaken to secure thorough and reliable evidence on whether they cause damage to the environment. Unrestricted commercial cultivation of any crop will not proceed until we are satisfied that it does not harm the environment.

Today, the industry group SCIMAC—the supply chain initiative on modified agricultural crops—has published a package of measures that will ensure that proper care is taken when the crops are grown on farms. We welcome that important step forward. The tough rules are underpinned by legally binding contracts. There will be an independent system of enforcement and audit. Some have said that we should have legislated on the issue. That would inevitably have taken much longer than our voluntary approach. However, we think that the guidelines could well form the basis of future legislation. We shall work with the industry and our European partners to take that forward.

The Science and Technology Committee said this week that we need an informed public debate in this area. It condemned some media treatment of the subject and called for more openness and transparency, and for more information to be provided to the public which is accurate and objective.

We agree. The measures that we have announced today are intended to achieve that, but we need to establish the debate on a firm base. The chief medical officer and the chief scientific adviser firmly believe that there is no current evidence to suggest that genetic modification technologies used to produce food are inherently harmful. The Committee came to the same view. The Royal Society this week convincingly dismissed as wholly misleading the results of some recent research into potatoes, and the misinterpretation of it. There is no evidence to suggest that any GM foods on sale in this country are harmful.

The Government welcome open, rational and well-informed debate. That is the best way to safeguard the public interest. We regret that some political, some media and other treatment of the issues has not served the public well.

Biotechnology undoubtedly has the potential to improve our quality of life in many ways. It is the Government's responsibility to encourage this potential, but we will not do so at the risk to public health and the environment. This duty is at the heart of today's announcement.

Mr. Tim Yeo (South Suffolk): We warmly welcome the statement, and I am grateful to the Minister for making it available to me in good time—about three quarters of an hour ago. However, I fully endorse the points of order raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) and my right hon. Friend the Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) about the disadvantage of interrupting a debate on an important private Member's Bill by, yet again, having a statement on an issue of prime concern to the whole country on a day when the House is inevitably almost empty. I welcome also the reports published with the statement, which we will want to study carefully.

What the Minister has said today will be judged by three criteria. Will it protect the British environment against possible damage from GM crops? Will it protect the British people against the possible risks to human health? Will it restore confidence in the integrity of the Government and guarantee that future decisions are taken more openly, with the environmental and health considerations put before political and commercial considerations?

Does the Minister realise that the last five months of evasions, distortions and muddle have destroyed public confidence in the safety of GM crops and food with GM ingredients? Does he agree that the Government's confusion has dealt a near-fatal blow to the prospects in Britain of a potentially beneficial and important technology? Does he recognise that the Government's failure to distinguish sufficiently clearly between the environmental and health risks has needlessly increased public anxiety?

Does the Minister realise that the Prime Minister himself made the matter worse when he said last February that he thought that it was only to be contradicted within hours by the statutory adviser to the Government, English Nature, which said:

"important to proceed on the basis of sound science"

"We cannot assure the public that decisions are being made on the basis of good environmental science."?

Those of us, such as the Conservative party, who want the benefits of biotechnology available to Britain can only deplore the Government's handling of the issue so far.

Does the Minister accept that there is a risk that certain genetically modified crops could upset or even destroy the balance of nature? Does he realise that there is now an overwhelming case for an absolute ban on all commercial planting of herbicide-tolerant and insect-resistant GM crops until research into their environmental impact has been completed?

Does the Minister recognise that completing this research will take at least three years—and possibly longer, depending on the results of trials now under way? Does he realise that the need for this approach is supported by English Nature, the chief scientific adviser, the Science and Technology Committee, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and many other non-governmental organisations?

Does today's statement mean that some commercial planting of GM crops, as opposed to planting for research purposes, will now take place with Government approval? Will the Minister explain how such planting is to be regulated? Are adequate resources available to monitor it, in light of the rapid increase in the scale of planting expected over the next year?

Does the Minister agree that, as breaches of trial conditions have led already to convictions in court of a leading company, self-regulation by the industry is not acceptable? The Government must take responsibility for regulation. What protection is proposed for organic farmers from the risk of contamination from GM crops? What protection is available for conventional farmers? Will there be compensation for any farmer whose business is compromised?

Is the Minister satisfied that the SCIMAC guidelines take account of the latest evidence about the greater distance over which pollination can occur? Does he agree with the Minister for the Environment, who is sitting beside him—who said yesterday that, if evidence were available in Britain of threats to biodiversity, such as that posed by BT maize to the monarch butterfly in America, certain GM crops might have to be banned outright?

On health issues, I warmly welcome the publication of the report from the chief medical officer and the chief scientific adviser. I stress that the Opposition accept that the food on sale in Britain today containing GM ingredients passed all the tests thought necessary at the time that it was approved.

Will the Minister confirm that, last year, the Government were sufficiently worried about the long-term health consequences of food with genetically modified ingredients to approve a scheme to collect data from supermarkets about patterns of consumption and monitor them against health trends? Now that the scheme has been dropped, what alternative scheme is being prepared to obtain such data if it is thought necessary?

Does the Minister recognise that, even after today's assurances, some consumers will want to avoid eating food with GM ingredients? Will he therefore introduce simple, clear and accurate labelling requirements? What plans do the Government have to improve the labelling of animal feedstuffs which may contain GM ingredients? Does the Minister accept that, for the purpose of approving novel foods in future, the concept of substantial equivalence is seriously flawed? Will the Minister explain what steps the chief medical officer and the chief scientific adviser will take to watch future developments?

On the integrity of Government decision making, does the Minister realise that the publication yesterday of a letter giving details of discussions of the so-called biotechnology presentation group has raised serious questions about the Government's approach? Will he now publish the minutes of all the meetings of the group? Does he realise that people now suspect that the Government are more concerned with manipulating the media and public opinion than with protecting the environment and the health of the British people? Does he consider it a proper use of civil servants' time to try to control which scientists are interviewed on "Today"?

Will the Minister state whether any changes were made by the group to the draft report submitted by the chief medical officer and the chief scientific adviser before its publication today? If so, what were they and why were they made? Since the same letter states that Departments were does he consider, in light of the newspapers of the past two days, that it has been successful in that aim?

How will the proposed "central co-ordinated rebuttals strategy" work? What is its aim? Is it to prevent alternative views to those of the Government from being expressed? Will the Minister confirm that, in future, all advice from the chief medical officer and the chief scientific adviser will be published without having to be "cleared by the biotechnology presentation group"?

Does he agree that the very idea of subjecting advice that is supposed to be delivered by objective and expert independent advisers to a group of politicians whose aim is to massage public opinion is utterly disgraceful?

Will the Minister consider making the chief medical officer and the chief scientific adviser more directly accountable to Parliament, perhaps through the relevant Select Committees, so that the integrity of their advice can be guaranteed in future?

The Opposition welcome the publication of today's reports as one step towards rebuilding public confidence, but the Minister must understand that the Government will be judged on whether the measures really place the protection of the British environment and the health of the British people higher up the Government's agenda than hitherto.

Dr. Cunningham: Let me take the hon. Gentleman's last point head on. From the outset, following the election of the new Labour Government in May 1997, we put the health and well-being of people and the environment at the top of our agenda; unlike the Conservative Government, we made it our overriding priority and it has remained so ever since. [Interruption.]

I am bound to say, if the right hon. Member for Hitchin and Harpenden (Mr. Lilley) will shut up for a moment, that the long list of questions that the Opposition spokesman put to me today could well have been put to the previous Government, but not one of them was. At the very time when the Opposition spokesman was himself a Minister in the Department of the Environment, none of those questions was asked. No, that is wrong: one question was asked, about animal feedstuffs. The Lamming committee advised that the Conservative Government should take action, but Ministers ignored the recommendation and did nothing.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned labelling. [Interruption.] When we came to office in May 1997, Government officials in Brussels had instructions from the Conservative Administration to oppose proposals for labelling food—to oppose consumer choice on genetically modified food—so I suspect that he may regret having asked that question. [Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There are too many interruptions from a sedentary position. The Minister must be allowed to respond.

Dr. Cunningham: As well as lacking ideas and policies, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Conservative Front Benchers lack courtesy and manners.

The hon. Gentleman began by welcoming the reports. I accept that they contain a large amount of information that he and his colleagues will need time to consider. At least they welcome them in principle, which is helpful. He set out three criteria. Will the proposals more effectively safeguard the environment? Yes, they will. Will they more effectively safeguard the health of the people of this country? Yes, they will. Will they begin to restore public confidence in the safeguards and processes? Yes, they will.

The thorough and wide-ranging consultations that we have undertaken have produced very positive responses in respect of the main parts of the regulatory and advisory system that we inherited from the Conservative Administration. The Science and Technology Committee was robust in its support of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment and of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes.

We also got a strong message from the consultations that there should be more openness, transparency and public involvement, to improve public understanding of how the system works in the public interest. We have accepted that criticism and we are putting in place measures to improve matters. We have also accepted that there should be new super advisory commissions, to engage the wider interests of stakeholders—people with legitimate interests—and the public, so people can not only see but be involved in the process that is there to safeguard the public interest.

The hon. Gentleman asked about the integrity of the Government decision-making process. The process is such that we see no evidence at all to support his repeated call for a blanket moratorium on the growing of genetically modified crops. That call is almost devoid of support except from the well-known environmentalist groups.

Mr. Peter Lilley (Hitchin and Harpenden): English Nature.

Dr. Cunningham: English Nature has never called for a blanket moratorium on the growing of genetically modified crops, so the right hon. Gentleman would be better advised to shut up and give up his sedentary interventions, because they are all mistaken, wrong and ill-informed, as is all too easy to illustrate.

The integrity of the Government decision-making process is strengthened by the measures announced today. As for the hon. Gentleman's playful teasing about the way in which the system works, we are criticised by him and by other hon. Members for not co-ordinating the Government's response, and when Ministers get together to do just that, he criticises that, too. He cannot have it both ways. I greatly applaud the excellent work being done by my ministerial colleagues in the inter-ministerial committee. We shall certainly continue to co-ordinate the Government's response effectively, exactly as the public would expect.

Joan Ruddock (Lewisham, Deptford): I thank my right hon. Friend for his statement. I look forward, as must others, to reading in detail the reports to which he has referred. He mentioned guidelines for the cultivation of crops. Is he aware of the concern of the Soil Association and of our organic farmers about the difficulty that they think that they face in preventing contamination of their crops and protecting the integrity of organic food, which we know the public are keen to buy, if the buffer zones are not extended? Is there new provision in the guidelines for extending the zones? If not, will my right hon. Friend make it possible to extend them in future, if contamination occurs from the farm test sites?

Dr. Cunningham: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for her welcome for the statement. As a member of the Soil Association, I am very much aware of its views. Yes, the guidelines for cultivation will cover matters such as crop separation. My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment are in consultation with the association about those issues. One of the arguments in favour of the field and farm-scale trials is exactly to allow us rigorously to assess the implications for the environment and then make whatever decisions are necessary in the light of the evidence that accrues.

Mr. Norman Baker (Lewes): I welcome the fact that we have had a statement, but I am also concerned about its being on a Friday. There was no statement yesterday, although one could have been made at 12.30 pm. I suggest that the Government took that decision because the statement is largely content-free.

We welcome the overarching bodies proposed in the statement, and especially the Agriculture and Environment Biotechnology Commission, and we support the idea of a national surveillance unit. Will those with pecuniary interests in the biotechnology industry be eligible for places on those bodies?

This is a GM dog that does not bark. There is a whole range of questions that the statement does not address in any way. Once again, the Government are running behind the GM juggernaut and are not in the driving seat. I want to ask some of those questions. I can do no better than to ask the questions that the Government themselves have asked.

I refer to a leaked Cabinet paper—not the one that we saw yesterday, but another leaked Cabinet Office document dating from 19 February, entitled "GM Foods—Policy and Presentational Issues". As the Government have had the questions in it before them for three months, presumably the Minister will be able to answer them.

These are the Government's own questions:

"In respect of the voluntary deal with the industry, how can we be sure that the deal will not unravel? What can we do if it begins to do so? Do we have any statutory power to impose in-use conditions?"

"Are we 100 per cent. sure that the voluntary deal will allow us to capture all the necessary data to come to a sensible evaluation?"

"What about long-term monitoring? Even after five years, the real environmental effects may not be known. Will we have the means to identify longer-term effects?"

In terms of labelling, the Government ask:

"is our labelling line on soya oil tenable?"

The questions continue:

"If people have ethical objections to GM processing, should they not have a real choice informed through labelling?"

As for the impact of GMOs on health, the Government asked themselves:

"Why don't we require a pharmaceutical-type analysis of the safety of these foods with proper trials? What if it"— that is, the study—

"says that there is evidence of long-term effects? This will look like we are not sure about their safety—we do not monitor consumption of other foods."

In respect of animal feeds, the Government ask

"how can we be sure of the safety of products derived from animals which eat GM animal feeds?"

Those are just some of the questions in the Cabinet Office paper that demonstrate that the Government have the questions but no answers. Rather than bringing us a vacuous statement about an overarching body—although I welcome that—which does not answer any of the questions—[HON. MEMBERS: "You just said you welcomed it."] I welcome one part of it, but there is a lot missing.

I ask the Minister to be rather less gung-ho about genetic modification and rather more assiduous in answering the questions he himself asked on 19 February.

Dr. Cunningham: The hon. Gentleman is, as so often, confused. He is referring not to a Cabinet Paper but to a paper for the working meeting of interdepartmental officials. He is wrong to present that to the House as a Cabinet paper. His lukewarm welcome of my announcement is typical of the hon. Gentleman, whose sole parroted cry is either to call for a blanket moratorium on the growing of GM crops, which would mean that we would get no evidence to answer his questions—

Mr. Baker indicated dissent.

Dr. Cunningham: That shows the stupidity of his position. His other tactic, which fortunately he has not repeated in the Chamber, although he used it on the radio this morning, is deliberately to misrepresent the views of the Government chief scientific adviser. He is wholly wrong in that regard, too.

Of course, nobody can ever guarantee that a deal will never unravel, especially now when the biosciences are moving so rapidly. However, there are strong provisions in the agreement. There are obligations that have to be met, to which the companies involved have agreed. All our evidence is that the companies want an agreement that will work in practice.

The hon. Gentleman read out a question about the availability of data. I repeat that we can get data on environmental impact only if we have field and farm-scale trials. Perhaps he will go away and reflect on whether he still supports a moratorium on those, at the same time as asking for data to evaluate. That is a contradictory position.

Of course, as the Minister for the Environment and my other colleagues and I have made clear many times, we shall go on examining the trials for as long as is necessary to satisfy ourselves that there are no serious harmful effects on biodiversity. If we find harmful effects of the kind reported by Cornell university in Nature this week, albeit from a laboratory experiment, not from field trials, we shall take action similar to that which the European Union has already taken in respect of that evidence from Cornell, and stop licensing processes until we are satisfied that the situation is fully understood.

Several hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I appreciate that this is an important subject, and the Minister made an important statement that invites longer questions, but I remind hon. Members that this is a private Members' day, so perhaps we can now have shorter questions and answers.

Dr. Phyllis Starkey (Milton Keynes, South–West): I welcome my right hon. Friend's sensible proposals for reforming the advisory system to produce a more holistic way of considering the effects of biotechnology. Will he confirm that the deliberations of the advisory bodies will be based on rigorous scientific research validated by peer review? Does he agree that that will be doubly necessary after the unfortunate public confusion caused by the bypassing of the peer review system by the media release of Dr. Pusztai's now discredited experiments—the accounts of which have been enthusiastically taken up and repeated by some rather credulous Opposition Members?

Dr. Cunningham: I agree with my hon. Friend. All the decisions that we make have been, and will continue to be, taken on the basis of the best and most rigorous scientific evidence available. As my hon. Friend says, that evidence will always be subject to proper peer group review. It is absurd to imagine that the Government, like Opposition Members, including some Opposition Front-Bench spokespeople and those from the Liberal Democrats, could take decisions on the basis of the hysteria surrounding what we now see as the fatally flawed and misrepresented science in the research of Dr. Pusztai. It reflects no credit on Opposition Members that they and their spokespeople participated in the media hysteria, because it damaged the public interest.

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): I welcome the Minister's assurances from the chief medical officer and the chief scientific adviser that the GM foods currently on the market are safe. That is reassuring. Genetic modification is of importance, because it brings great benefit to the countryside and helps British agriculture to compete in the global market. The hysterical campaign that has been launched against it is in danger of damaging an important British industry.

I believe that the Minister announced two or three—I could not work out how many—

Mr. Eric Forth (Bromley and Chislehurst): Quangos.

Mr. Atkinson: Quangos, if my right hon. Friend will have it so.

Will the Minister tell me whether those bodies will be set up quickly? Will they be able to delay the current field and farm trials? Today's announcement will, of course, cause some uncertainty for the companies currently involved in the experiments.

Dr. Cunningham: I am grateful for the hon. Gentleman's measured response, and his rational conduct of his involvement with such important matters. As he said, there is a great danger that we could seriously damage important United Kingdom industrial and commercial interests. We are one of the world leaders in the biosciences, and it would be a terrible error to allow that to be damaged or undermined in any way.

As for the two new commissions that I announced today—the Human Genetics Commission and the Agriculture and Environment Biotechnology Commission, they will not have any impact on the plans for the farm and field-scale trials. As I said, responsibility for the safety of genetically modified food will eventually pass to the Food Standards Agency. We hope that both the new commissions will be up and active by the end of the year.

Dr. Lynne Jones (Birmingham, Selly Oak): I, too, welcome the setting up of the new biotechnology commission, although I had understood that we already had a Human Genetics Advisory Commission. The commitment to transparency is important. Will my right hon. Friend ensure that the commission and the relevant committees sit in public, and have sufficient resources to carry out their work effectively?

Professor Beringer, the outgoing chairman of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, told the Science and Technology Committee that his committee had been seriously under-resourced. That problem should be addressed, and I hope that my right hon. Friend will give a commitment that it will.

Does my right hon. Friend agree that our experience shows that, when there is the slightest suspicion on the part of the public that health and environmental considerations, and their right to choice in the food that they eat, are not given overriding priority, above commercial considerations, potentially beneficial technology has no chance of getting off the ground? Is it not in the interests of the commercial companies involved to recognise that fact and to support—indeed, to press for—proper national and international regulation and the segregation of crops so that genuine choice can be provided?

Dr. Cunningham: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's support for the announcements that I have made today. The difference between the commissions that I have announced today and existing committees is that the former will be overarching bodies with a wide remit to consider all aspects of the fast-moving developments in the sciences and technology. My hon. Friend mentioned resources for ACRE, and Professor Beringer. I take the opportunity to place on record our appreciation of the work that Professor Beringer and his colleagues have done, and of the work that all the other scientists and members of the other advisory committees do in the public interest for the Government. My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment has taken up the point raised by Professor Beringer and increased, within the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, resource support for the work of ACRE.

The Government have made their position on labelling clear. We believe that consumers should have a clear choice—in contradistinction to the attitude of the previous Conservative Government—and we shall work with the industry and our European partners to improve regulatory control wherever we think necessary.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby): This is a matter that gravely concerns constituents of every Member of the House. Can the right hon. Gentleman, with his customary courtesy, reassure my constituents and others who are very worried by the reports of butterflies and bees whose immune systems have been destroyed? If that is happening, it must be stopped, as I am sure the right hon. Gentleman would acknowledge. He is a scientist, but my constituents and I do not have his scientific knowledge.

The right hon. Gentleman talked about an open and well-informed debate. Can he categorically reassure the House that the desire to prevent discussion of the Referendums Bill and the Fur Farming (Prohibition) Bill—over which the Minister responsible for animal welfare has been shedding crocodile tears—has not been a factor in the making of the announcement today?

Dr. Cunningham: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman might consider what he has said and do something himself to reassure his constituents, instead of taking an alarmist attitude and undermining possibly already fragile public confidence. I repeat that we shall take notice of any scientific and environmental development as the policies are implemented. If it is necessary to take further action, we will. I emphasise again that our overriding priority is the health and well-being of people and the environment.

Mr. Geraint Davies (Croydon, Central): I very much welcome my right hon. Friend's statement. Will he confirm, first, that the preservation of indigenous species of plants and birds will be a fundamental consideration—including species in those countries that might receive exported GM crops; secondly, that the interests of consumers will be paramount and that, if a product contains GM ingredients on the inside we will start to label GM on the outside; and thirdly, that, while considering the prospective benefits of third-world development, we will also consider the prospective power relationship between multinational countries and third-world development, in the interests of future trade profitability of third-world countries?

Dr. Cunningham: I thank my hon. Friend for his support. We shall do whatever is necessary to protect biodiversity in this country. We want to have farm and field-scale trials so that we can assess the impact on biodiversity. The labelling issue is a question for the biosafety protocol. As for development in third-world countries and in fragile environments, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development will shortly publish a paper on those issues.

Mr. Andrew Lansley (South Cambridgeshire): I am sure that the Minister will be aware that some of the leading biotechnology companies in this country are based in my constituency. What further work is he publishing today to follow up the White Paper on competitiveness in the knowledge-based industries that was published last year? Many biotechnology companies wish to know what will be done on that issue and the Minister made no specific mention of it in his statement.

The Minister mentioned a Human Genetics Commission. How will the work of that commission relate to, and be co-ordinated with, the work of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority? Will the commission take on the work of the xenotransplantation interim regulatory authority and give it the regulatory teeth that it demands if successful progress is to be made with the technology, including by a company in my constituency?

Will the Minister confirm that, even though a precautionary attitude will be taken to the planting of GM crops that will lead to a delay in any commercial planting in this country, if another European Union member state were to license the commercial planting of GM crops, there would be no legal bar to a company proceeding with commercial planting in other member states, including here? What have the Government done about that?

Dr. Cunningham: It was not my purpose to deal with the competitiveness White Paper today, but the development of biotechnology is important for the competitiveness of our industries. That is why the Government have been concerned to try to ensure that we regulate the developments properly and, at the same time, provide a climate in which those important industries can flourish and prosper in the British economy. The hon. Gentleman is right: the way that the system works is that a proposer can seek approvals in any member state and obtain a crop licence, but each member state has to give consent. We inherited that system from the previous Conservative Administration.

Mr. Andrew Miller (Ellesmere Port and Neston): May I follow the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones) when she referred to the existing Human Genetics Advisory Commission? Will my right hon. Friend publish soon the details of the bodies that will be incorporated in the new commission? Have the Government considered the evidence collected by the Select Committee on Science and Technology on whether the Human Genetics Advisory Commission should have some statutory powers given to it?

Dr. Cunningham: All the information that my hon. Friend requires is published in the documents that we are making available today. I should have responded on the same point to the hon. Member for South Cambridgeshire (Mr. Lansley). The Human Genetics Commission, which I have announced today, will advise us on the applications of biotechnology in health care and the impact of human genetics on our lives. It will not be a regulatory body.

Mr. Eric Forth (Bromley and Chislehurst): The Minister must be aware that, although many people are worried about the direct effects on people and their diet, they are even more worried about the possible collateral effects of the field trials and the way in which the processes used in the experimentation could spread out of control by being transmitted by insects, in the air, through the soil or in the water. Can the Minister give us an absolute assurance that every step will be taken to ensure that, during those crucial and—I accept—necessary experimental stages, there will be no accidental collateral effects that we might all soon live to regret bitterly?

Dr. Cunningham: Yes.

Dr. George Turner (North–West Norfolk): Can my right hon. Friend assure me that he recognises that—given that we have seen so much bad and selective science and muddling of the issues—the Government will have to address the knowledge of the public about the issues? The public are now very confused about the health implications of the foods that have been licensed, which seem to be muddled up with the environmental problems that we yet face. At times, there is deliberate confusion between trials and commercial plantings. The language and the selective reporting in some of the media—for example, the term "Frankenstein food"—have been deliberately used to misinform the public, who are not scientifically well educated. The Government must deal with the issue.

Dr. Cunningham: It is exactly because we understand public concerns, and because in some cases there have been deliberate attempts to mislead, unsettle and scare the public that we have done all that work over the past five months and are announcing our decisions today. Of course there has been some bad science. Happily, that has been thoroughly exposed for what it was. There has been deliberate muddling of the issues. On more than one occasion, we have heard people on radio and television, including the interviewers themselves sometimes, claiming that genetically modified crops "were being let rip". Nothing could be further from the truth.

My hon. Friend referred to commercial planting. There is no unlimited commercial planting taking place in this country—none at all. Controlled planting is taking place, under rigorous supervision, and it will go on in that way until we are satisfied that it is safe for any single plant or product to go on to the next stage.

Dr. Peter Brand (Isle of Wight): May I put the record straight? No Liberal Democrat has called for a total ban on growing any genetically modified food—[HON. MEMBERS: "You have."] No, no; we have welcomed trials so that we can get the science right. We are asking for a ban on commercial production involving GM food.

Will the new commissions, which sound as though they will be extremely useful bodies, bring together representatives of the industry, academics and representatives of other regulatory bodies? If the commissions are to have members from the industries involved, is it not vital that the regulatory body, the Food Standards Agency, should be made up entirely of people without commercial or financial interest in the industry?

Dr. Cunningham: As ever, the Liberal Democrats seem to want to run with the hare and hunt with the hounds, depending on the audience that they are addressing. Many of the hon. Gentleman's hon. Friends have deliberately given the impression that they wanted a total stop to all the work on GM foods. It is not good enough for the hon. Gentleman to come into the Chamber this morning and pretend that that has not been the case.

As for people from industry serving on Government advisory bodies, there is no bar to anyone from any walk of life serving voluntarily on Government bodies. We want Government advisory and regulatory bodies made up of the best membership that we can achieve. That always has been the case, and it remains so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We must now return to the Bill.

Mr. Robathan: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I seek your guidance on behalf of the many people outside the House who are concerned about the constitutional issues regarding fair rules for referendums, and the prohibition of fur farming. How can we explain to them that the Government are determined that the Referendums Bill nor the Fur Farming (Prohibition) Bill will reach the statute book, and are deliberately getting craven toadies on their Back Bench to talk the measures out?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman knows full well how the House works. That is not a matter for the Chair. We must return to the Bill before the House.

ROAD TRAFFIC (VEHICLE TESTING) BILL

Not amended in the Standing Committee, again considered.

New Clause 1

INFORMATION ON ACCIDENTS INVOLVING UNCERTIFICATED VEHICLES

'. The Secretary of State shall authorise the use of information in the records maintained under section 45(6B) of the Road Traffic Act 1988 for the purposes of any inquiry into a road traffic accident in which death or serious injury occurs, and shall maintain a record of all such incidents concerning vehicles for which an appropriate test certificate has not been issued.'.—[Mr. Miller.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

Question proposed [this day], That the clause be read a Second time.

11.54 am

Question again proposed.

Mr. Miller: I am convinced that the public at large would disagree entirely with the point just made by the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan). Surely to goodness the House regards the deaths of 3,000 people each year as somewhat more important than his trivial little Bill.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby): I watched the hon. Gentleman on the monitor, presenting his argument in a very slow, turgid manner. He showed no interest in the subject on Second Reading. Many people have written to me about referendums and about fur farming. They will know where to lay the blame for the fact that fur farming will not be prohibited in this country.

Mr. Miller: On the Conservative party.

Before the statement, I was responding to important comments made by my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Norfolk about matters relating to privacy. I shall not answer his point in full, as that would involve my expressing my personal view of the way in which matters of privacy should be dealt with in society, as the Government and the public service hold more and more co-ordinated data on individuals. I have strong views on that, which I would be prepared to share with my hon. Friend outside the debate.

We must remember that it is not vehicles with defects that cause death and serious injury; it is drivers. I am grateful for my hon. Friend the Minister's remarks about the research that is going on, and the ideas that that has given me for potential regulation within the scope of the Bill, if the research identifies a correlation which, I suspect, exists, as I said in my opening remarks.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hendon spoke of the possibility of MOTs being exchanged as part of the showing of particulars when there is a road traffic incident. That is an interesting point which the Minister may want to consider.

The debate has been helpful, and I hope the issues discussed will be taken on board by my hon. Friend the Minister. Bearing in mind the observations made by the promoter of the Bill, whose efforts I strongly support, and the assurances received from the Minister, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion and clause, by leave, withdrawn.

REGULATIONS UNDER S.45 OF ROAD TRAFFIC ACT 1988, 1988 c. 52

Dr. Nick Palmer (Broxtowe): I beg to move amendment No. 1, in page 2, line 36, leave out 'application or'.

I shall address a different aspect of the Bill—the possibility of introducing an element of privatisation to MOT tests. The amendment is quite minor because its purpose is to delete two words. However, it would remove the central determination of fees for testing for the purpose of obtaining an MOT certificate.

When we consider the privatisation of any activity, I suggest that five tests should be carried out, each of which applies in this instance. The first test is whether there is a clear definition of quality. Rail privatisation is an example of privatising without applying that test. The companies that take over the work will interpret their duties in widely different ways and there is a danger that standards, as perceived by the public, will deteriorate sharply.

The second criterion is whether there is potentially a large competitive market. The rail industry provides an example where, effectively, there are many local monopolies. The effect of privatisation has been to move from a state monopoly to a set of private monopolies. Most people—even those who have an ideological preference for privatisation—will agree that that is sub-optimal.

Thirdly, is there a regulatory format? Water privatisation is an example of the difficulty of regulators who are torn between regulating for superior water quality and regulating for lower price. Their job is not enviable and privatisation, where it is not easily possible, is somewhat suspect.

Fourthly, we will seek always to ensure that, where privatisation is undertaken, there is minimal disruption and hardship for the existing staff, who have loyally administered the service previously. The coal industry is an example of the dangers of privatisation. Effectively, since the coal industry has been denationalised, it is well on the way to being phased out altogether. I admit that there were some tendencies for that to happen before denationalisation.

Fifthly, we need to see the potential for significant cost savings, either for the Government or for consumers. I think that the privatisation of telecommunications is generally accepted, even by those who are not enthusiastic about privatisation as a concept, to have resulted in substantial benefits for the consumer.

If we apply these criteria to MOT testing, the House may agree that all five of them are satisfied. The Bill gives us the opportunity, by deleting "application or" to open the door to them. First, let us consider well-defined quality measures. What the MOT test consists of has been laid down for many years. From time to time, the Government may introduce a change, but there is no dispute about what an adequate MOT test is. That is clear to everybody, and it will continue to be so if pricing is left to the individual garage.

The second consideration is whether there is a potentially large competitive market. I suppose that there are thousands of small firms throughout the country that offer MOT testing facilities. It seems clear that, if they were allowed to compete on price for the MOT test, they would be interested in doing so. If some of them were to withdraw from the market, others would take their place. There seems every prospect of a vibrant competitive market for MOT testing.

Mr. Shaw: I am concerned about what my hon. Friend said. The idea that small garages in rural areas will be able to compete with large multinationals by keeping their prices lower is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Lord): Order. We are straying rather wide of the mark.

Dr. Palmer: I shall make a general observation. The vibrant competitive market to which I refer is partly ensured by the fact that most people will wish to have an MOT test carried out locally. The likelihood of their going to a large multinational company for an MOT test is not as great as it would be in some other industries.

Thirdly, there is the question of disruption and hardship for existing staff. My proposal would involve existing establishments continuing, as envisaged by the Bill, with some degree of additional licensing and training. I think that we all welcome the provisions set out in the Bill, and allowing garages to compete with one another on price should not, in principle, produce any problems for them. There may, of course, be cases where an individual garage feels that downward pressure on the price for MOT tests forces them to withdraw from the service. However, that in itself is unlikely to result in disruption or hardship for that garage. Other hon. Members may correct me, but I believe that relatively few garages depend heavily on income from MOT testing for their survival. The impact on businesses should be minimal; I doubt whether even one would cease trading.

Mr. Shaw: Do not MOT testing and servicing go hand in hand? Garages, therefore, rely on MOTs because the two are carried out together.

Dr. Palmer: The fee for the MOT test makes up a relatively small component of the bill paid by the typical car owner, but the necessary servicing resulting from it, and the parts involved in that, make up a large component. For that reason, even the smallest garage would find it valuable to continue in the market, simply because of the attraction of the ensuing service work.

That point brings me to the possibility of significant cost savings, which is the fifth criterion. I suspect that the cost of MOT tests would descend rapidly towards zero. Given the difficulties of attracting customers, of which most of us who have worked in any kind of small business are aware, it would be much cheaper to attract a customer by offering a free MOT than by taking out any amount of advertising for services or repairs, and the consumer might benefit in respect of the entire cost of the MOT.

Under the Bill, a garage would pay a fee to the Department; I am not suggesting that that fee should be abolished or varied, although it needs to be standardised so that the garage can recoup its costs. In an age in which most of us have declared ourselves to be open minded on matters of state control versus privatisation, I wonder whether it is appropriate for the Government to say precisely what charge should be made, from John o' Groats to Land's End, for work done for the general public. I welcome the Bill as much as have previous speakers. It gives us the opportunity to look again at that assumption and to ask ourselves whether it is time to open up the possibility of a new option.

Mr. Browne: A feature of clause 2, which my hon. Friend seeks to amend, is that it substantially restates existing law. Indeed, the words that he seeks to delete from the clause already appear in section 46 of the Road Traffic Act 1988. Is it not in the interests of the consumer that such a standard national test has a standard application and a standard fee to ensure that testers do not cut corners?

Dr. Palmer: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for making that point, which brings me back to the need for a well-defined quality measure, which is the first criterion. It is tempting for any MOT establishment to cut corners, simply because that saves time. They do not—or we suppose that they do not—because a well-defined list of activities has to be carried out under the MOT test. Under the other criteria relating to the Bill, people would be specifically trained in what needs to be done. A more well-defined licensing system for approved assessors would be put at risk if they attempted to cut corners.

Mr. Dismore: Is not the answer to my hon. Friend's point that the Bill introduces much tougher policing of garages to ensure that they maintain standards?

Dr. Palmer: I am grateful to my hon. Friend, who said what I was trying to say in a much clearer way.

The Bill offers an opportunity that is worth seizing for the benefit of consumers, and presents no hazards for standards of quality control or for those who have to operate it. I ask the House to accept the amendment.

Mr. Hunter: I listened carefully to the hon. Member for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer) and to the interventions that he allowed, and I wonder whether a slight misunderstanding prevails. Under the current regime, there is no standard or fixed fee for the tester to charge the motorist for an MOT test. The downward pressure of market forces, which the hon. Gentleman advocates—and which I warmly advocate, too—is possible under the present regime. The Motor Vehicles (Tests) Regulations 1981, as amended, prescribe a total maximum amount that a tester can charge a motorist. If I recall correctly, the precise figure that the tester is obliged to pay the inspectorate is 58p per blank certificate. That is the cost of implementing the test process. The Department estimates that that sum might rise by £1 to £1.58 or thereabouts, but, as the hon. Gentleman said, it is a very small proportion of the total charge that the motorist pays for his MOT test.

Dr. Palmer: Does the hon. Gentleman agree, however, that the passage that the amendment seeks to delete appears to suggest that the fee to be paid on an application—by the consumer—will be laid down?

Mr. Hunter: That is not my understanding. I apologise to the hon. Gentleman—perhaps the Minister can clarify this point in due course. I understand that the principle of payment that currently applies will continue to apply. The tester will buy in advance space on a database, which represents the blank certificates that he now buys. The Secretary of State sets the maximum charge that the tester can then make to the motorist. It is the intention of neither the Bill nor the Department to change that basic principle.

It is perhaps ironic that, as someone who believes in the open market and privatisation, I support the current regime and want it to continue, as the Bill would allow it to do. I do so, however, because this is not a genuine open market. Where market principles apply in their purest form, the purchaser has the option not to purchase, whereas every car owner is obliged to have his or her vehicle MOT tested. The law requires that, and that causes a distortion of the marketplace. Therefore, the regime of imposing a maximum sum is a consumer protection measure. Although the hon. Gentleman and I support downward pressure of market forces, the reverse could happen—MOT testers could raise their charges because motorists are obliged to undergo the test. I defend the current regime, and I oppose the hon. Gentleman's amendment. He may have misunderstood the situation. We need to protect the motorist—and other consumers—from an unreal market.

Dr. Palmer: As I understand it, the hon. Gentleman is arguing that there is already an open market, but he also likes the fact that there is not one. I should be grateful if he would clarify that. The charges to be paid by the tester are regulated under clause 2(1)(j), whereas the charges to be paid by the consumer are regulated under clause 2(1)(f). Many privatised services are, in effect, compulsory: water supply is an obvious example. Consumers can refuse to take water, but few do so.

Mr. Hunter: I follow the hon. Gentleman's argument, and I am sorry if I did not make my point entirely clear. I certainly accept the principles of an open market, and in many respects I am sympathetic to what the hon. Gentleman is seeking to achieve by his amendment. However, there is downward pressure of market forces under the present regime, so the amendment is not needed to achieve the objectives that the hon. Gentleman seeks.

I believe that the experience of the past 10 years has justified a measure of consumer protection to prevent garages from raising the cost of the MOT test above the level prescribed by the Secretary of State. The Bill reflects that view, which is why the hon. Gentleman's amendment is mistaken.

Dr. George Turner: I represent a rural constituency, and such protection is particularly important in a rural environment. People who live in an urban environment may have many test centres in their immediate vicinity, but people who live in villages in my constituency need the protection that the law currently offers, and we should maintain that.

Mr. Hunter: I acknowledge the hon. Gentleman's point, and with that I conclude my remarks.

Mr. McNulty: If I were being honest, I would say that, when I first read the amendment tabled my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer), I did not understand where it was going or where it was coming from. He has now explained with great eloquence where he is seeking to go. I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) that, if that is where my hon. Friend wants to get to from here, the Bill is the wrong device to use. Moreover, I do not share my hon. Friend's goals.

My hon. Friend the Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) referred to consumer protection and the existing ceiling on the charge. That protection should not be hampered or interfered with. The Bill implies a shift from 58p to £1 per certificate for the database, which is a fair charge and can be recovered subsequently, as we shall see when we come to the next amendment.

The test is compulsory, consumer protection measures are in place and there is a ceiling on the charge, so the market is already regulated, and that would be disrupted if the amendment were accepted. In my area, garages use the MOT test as an entrée to get people to go back for further services, whether it be petrol, regular car servicing or other services. I fear that, if that maximum charge is lost and we have a less regulated market, or a market that is not regulated at all, small garages with MOT testers in rural areas will go, and there will be a completely distorted market.

If the amendment were passed, we would have not a pure free market—the hon. Member for Basingstoke will not like this, but such a thing does not exist anyway, except in the psychotic minds of people like Milton Friedman—but a far more distorted market. By definition, large, perhaps multinational, garages will be in a far better position to defray all testing expenses—whether or not a computerised database is involved—than a one-man outfit.

Moreover, the amendment might well distort the process of dealing with criminal elements in the issue of MOT certificates. By liberalising the market, it might affect one of the key aspects of the Bill, which I firmly support. Computerisation could enable authorities to identify disconcerting patterns of testing—for instance, a disproportionate number of passes for older cars—far more readily, and to police effectively the whole MOT process. That ability would be lost if a broader free-market regime were introduced, leaving consumers unprotected.

Many garages now say that, if a car fails its test, they will test again free of charge. Many now say that they will incorporate the test in the regular service. It is crucial to consumer choice that smaller garages should retain the freedom to act in that way, within a regulated market. If—I suspect that this will not happen—the amendment were passed, and brought about the pure free market that my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe wants, that would be a disaster. He has not said so thus far, but I hope that his is a probing, even teasing, amendment, intended to air the issues involved.

I commend many of the Bill's provisions. Computerisation will improve the current regime. Tinkering with the pricing regime and the regulatory framework will not allow us to improve the operation of computerisation, and the amendment should be resisted as strongly as possible.

Ms Glenda Jackson: The reasons why the Government cannot accept the amendment have been put succinctly by my hon. Friends the Members for North–West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) and for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty), and by the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter). This Government—and, indeed, previous Governments—have felt that it must always be within the powers of Government to set the level of the maximum fee for an MOT test.

The amendment would delete part of subsection (1)(f) of the proposed new section 46 to the Road Traffic Act 1988, which mirrors, and enlarges, the existing section 46. I have no argument with—indeed, I endorse—the desirability of keeping legislation as simple as possible, and I have little doubt that that was part of the thinking of my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer). However, the Government cannot accept the amendment, because it would remove the Secretary of State's power to prescribe in regulations the fees to be paid by applicants for MOT tests. My hon. Friend the Member for North–West Norfolk described the difficulties that would be caused to his constituents, and—in his own way—my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East expressed the Government's concerns.

Part of new section 46 to the 1988 Act simply repeats what is provided in existing section 46, which has been tried and tested over the years and has been found to work well in practice. Therefore, in principle, there is no reason to disturb the legislation. Existing section 46 of the Act re-appears in the Bill because it is clearly better to consolidate the legislation into a single section of sequential provisions, rather than to amend many isolated parts of the existing provisions. It has clearly been done for ease and clarity of drafting and to make the legislation easier to work with in practice, all of which is commendable and, as I have said, was part of the thinking of my hon. Friend in tabling the amendment.

Perhaps more fundamentally, the existing wording of the relevant part of the clause is needed because, as I have already said, it is essential for the Secretary of State to be able to prescribe the fees to be paid by applicants for MOT tests. In practice, what is prescribed in subordinate legislation, the Motor Vehicles (Tests) Regulations 1981—the point was made by the hon. Member for Basingstoke—is the maximum amount that can be charged by an MOT testing station for carrying out an MOT test.

Surely, were the Secretary of State not able to do that, from John o' Groats to Land's End, there would be no control of how much an MOT test might cost. Motorists would be faced with being required by law to have their vehicles MOT tested, but there would be no protection in the law to regulate how much could be charged for those MOT tests. As I have said, successive Governments have felt that control to be necessary. Those points were endorsed by my hon. Friends the Members for North–West Norfolk and for Harrow, East, and the hon. Member for Basingstoke.

I was somewhat concerned when my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe referred to the possibility of garages—or, indeed, testing stations—cutting corners. I am sure that he is aware that arrangements have been in existence since the inception of the MOT scheme in 1961 for the Vehicle Inspectorate to supervise the conduct of the scheme. Generally, it works very well. However, the computerisation project has been designed to give the inspectorate far better information than it has ever had, so that it can do its job even more effectively. That will enable the inspectorate to concentrate its efforts where they are most needed.

Perhaps my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe is not aware that the inspectorate has to supervise the standards of some 55,000 nominated testers at 19,000 MOT testing stations throughout the country to ensure that vehicles are tested to the correct standard and that motorists get a fair test. In practice, the inspectorate does that by ensuring that testers and testing stations are given clear ground rules for carrying out testing when they first join the scheme. Thereafter, inspectorate examiners check on their performance once every 12 to 18 months. Most people would say that that was a bare minimum to ensure fair and proper standards, rather than a case of vexatious regulation. As I say, computerisation will enable the inspectorate to have far better information and to be able to target, if it perceives any lapse of standards in the results of vehicles that have had their MOT.

In the light of what I have said, and mindful of the reasons—the best of all possible reasons—why my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe tabled the amendment, I trust that he will withdraw it.

Dr. Palmer: I am grateful for hon. Members' comments. With regard to the Minister's remarks, I clarify that the suggestion of cutting corners did not come from me. I expressed confidence that the existing arrangements would avoid that.

The feeling of the House on the point is clear. Rather than pressing it to a vote, I beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

12.30 pm

Dr. Palmer: I beg to move amendment No. 2, in page 4, line 14, leave out subsection (6).

This is a probing amendment, the aim of which is to explore the extent to which the Government should become involved in the commercial use of MOT data. It may well be that, to defray the costs of the computerised system—which has the benefits to which other hon. Members have very rightly referred—such involvement would make sense. Nevertheless, it is appropriate that the House should have a quick look at the issue, to decide whether we wish to move down that path.

Subsection (6), which the amendment would delete, would allow the sale of information, for any price,

"on such terms, and subject to such restrictions"

as the Secretary of State thought fit, to any persons whom the Secretary of State thought fit.

The only restriction proposed in the subsection is that information on "the premises at which any examination was carried out or any person concerned with the carrying out of the examination" should be protected.

I wonder whether the subsection will provide sufficient protection. It is not instantly clear to me whether information about persons involved in the ownership, or driving, of a vehicle will also be protected—as that information is held in separate DVLA records, and I am not sure of the extent to which those records are open to the general public. If they are open, cross-searches and cross-retrievals would make it possible to undertake a quite massive direct mailing operation, writing to those who have taken an MOT test, drawing on their experience to date and attempting to influence their future buying patterns.

If information on individual car owners is not available, the issue will be substantially de-fanged. However, I still wonder about the extent to which the Government should market their knowledge of individuals' transactions with the Government. If we accept the principle of the provision without amendment, there are a great many other spheres—tax records, for example—in which we might feel able to market government knowledge. One current and controversial example is the marketing of information from the electoral register.

I invite the Minister and the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) to give the House their views on whether subsection (6) will offer sufficient protection against misuse of data.

Mr. Hunter: I wonder whether the hon. Member for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer) is aware of the Transport Act 1982—which has not been enforced, but is a paving Act for privatisation of the Vehicle Inspectorate. The previous Government passed it, but never implemented it. Nevertheless, it remains on the statute book. If the current Government, or a future one, wished to enable it, privatisation of the inspectorate would happen, and the core of the hon. Gentleman's arguments would, I suspect, cease to apply. He is concerned about the Government, rather than a private industry, becoming involved in commercialism.

I think that, in one respect, I may be able completely to reassure the hon. Gentleman. Personally, I do not know about the accessibility of the DVLA database—but I do know that the Bill will not remotely affect it. The Bill is concerned only with establishing the MOT centralised computer database.

The hon. Gentleman also asked about anonymity, and whether vehicle owners' identity would be contained. The answer lies in clause 1(6B). The only information that would be made available under that provision is that pertaining to vehicles and not the names of the registered keepers. I understand that the names of registered keepers are not available from the MOT database.

"the carrying out of and the results of the examinations",

We could spend a long time discussing the principle of how much the Government should be involved in commercial activities. I am not sure that it is right to question that in the absolute and general; we should concentrate on the detail. If the Secretary of State were able to become involved in commercial activities and "sell" information, consumer organisations might wish to use that information to advise consumers about the reliability or otherwise of specific motor cars; manufacturers might use it to rectify defects in their models; prospective purchasers would find it valuable, not least in respect of the mileage of second-hand cars; and vehicle insurers might wish to know whether the vehicles of the drivers whom they insured had valid tests. I look at the issue pragmatically: the database contains information which many individuals and organisations would find useful, so it should be made available on a commercial basis.

Finally, the commercial element would go some way to offset the cost of computerisation and would therefore benefit the motorist.

Mr. McNulty: The final point made by the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) is extremely important. People should not run away with the notion that we are commercialising and selling the MOT database simply to defray the entire cost of its computerisation. As he suggested, it will go some way towards it, but will not cover it completely. Rather than being in any way sinister or suddenly opening up some huge new opportunity for the ghastly men and women from direct marketing organisations, because of the qualifying statement at the end of clause 2(6)(b), it is of no value to direct marketing, blind-selling organisations.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer) said, the only caveat on the sale, or passing on, of information from the database is if those particulars do not identify the premises at which any examination is carried out or any person concerned with carrying out that examination. When that important caveat is included in the equation, it is not some liberalisation-mad free-market measure that will mean that, having got an MOT, one will receive a barrel-load of unsolicited rubbish because the nasty old Government have sold the information. If that is not the case, what is the main motive for selling on, or making accessible, certain elements of the database? I would suggest that, rather than defraying the cost of computerisation, there are fundamental consumer protection reasons. Again, I would depart from what my hon. Friend the Member for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner), who is not in his place, said. He seemed to suggest that Governments were good at modernising and computerising various activities that had been done on paper, without producing benefits. The Bill takes us into areas of consumer protection that we would not begin to entertain under the certificate-based system, and that is much to its credit. Those elements will be lost if we accept the amendment, which is why I strongly argue against it.

The proposal that anybody—that is legitimate organisations and individuals rather than the "inquiry versus enquiry" argument from dodgy solicitors or anyone else—who can show reasonable cause should be able obtain the MOT history of a particular vehicle must make more sense to a potential purchaser. They would not be allowed to do that if we accepted the amendment.

Anonymous, vehicle-specific information such as recorded mileage will be of use to the purchaser of a second-hand car. Another useful and exciting element of the new database is that commercial organisations will be able to purchase anonymous aggregate data on the MOT performance of particular brands of cars from particular years. Better information on trends in the performance of particular makes and models in MOTs must feed into overall protection for the consumer.

The existing MOT pricing regime will continue. The elements of consumer protection from the previous testing regime are vital. In relative terms at least, the MOT testing process has been a success. Without discarding the successful elements, we are adding new, interesting and exciting areas of consumer protection afforded by the development of a computerised base. Lord knows, second-hand car salesmen, like solicitors, are not, in some regards at least, one might suggest, necessarily by nature the friends of consumers and always interested in their protection.

I commend my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe for tabling the amendment, which, like the previous ones, has allowed us to highlight the important areas of consumer protection that the computerisation of the MOT regime affords. The hon. Member for Basingstoke is to be congratulated on the enhanced consumer protection that the Bill provides in an area where it is needed.

I do not want people to run away with the notion that the proposals represent the wicked commercialisation of another database that would result in anyone who has an MOT getting an avalanche of rubbish through their door. The anonymity of the vehicle keeper and the garage at which the test was carried out are fundamental and are the only caveats needed to render the database worse than useless for direct mail organisations. Those provisions are vital for consumer protection, enhancing, rather than moving away from, the consumer protection elements in the existing MOT structure. I commend subsection (6) strongly to the House, because it is fundamental to the spirit of the Bill. Removing paragraphs (a) and (b) would deeply wound the Bill in a way that I would find unacceptable.

Ms Glenda Jackson: We strongly agree with the points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty) about the benefits inherent in the Bill for consumer protection. I am aware of the concerns expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer) but I trust that, in responding to the amendment, I shall be able to reassure him that the kind of scenario that he has evinced to the House this morning will not be possible, given the strictures within the Bill.

In effect, the purpose of the amendment is to delete a part of the proposed new section 46 of the Road Traffic Act 1988. If the amendment were to succeed, it would—I am sure inadvertently—defeat one of the main objectives of the Bill. That objective is the disclosure of anonymised information in bulk from the computerised records of the results of MOT tests for the benefit of consumers—a point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East—and many other interested parties. For that reason, I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe will withdraw the amendment.

Subsection (6) of new section 46 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 would enable the Secretary of State, by regulation, to sell anonymised information in bulk from the MOT database. He would be able to sell such particulars and information to such persons as he thought fit—for such price, on such terms and subject to such restrictions as he thought fit.

The objective in being able to do that is twofold. First, we would make information available from the database which could be used for all sorts of useful and beneficial purposes. Secondly, there would be the ability to sell such information for a price that reflects its commercial value, so that the proceeds would help to offset the cost of introducing and running computerisation in the MOT scheme. All of those very positive benefits would be lost if the amendment were to succeed.

It is the view of the Government that there is an overwhelming desire for better information about the results of MOT testing to be more widely available. The useful opening debate this morning on an amendment tabled by my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) showed that, with many hon. Members presenting interesting and detailed contributions. At present, the available information is somewhat limited—primarily because no central record of MOT tests exists at present. That is understandable, given that the MOT scheme relies on paper-based records.

That will all change with the introduction of computerisation over the next couple of years, and it is therefore absolutely right that information that will be gathered on the database should be put to maximum use. That means making it available for other people to use, other than just the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. That is exactly what new section 46(6) of the Road Traffic Act 1988 is designed to enable the Secretary of State to do.

It is not possible here to give a full account of all the possible uses to which this information might be put. However, it seems highly likely that consumer organisations, and indeed the motor vehicle manufacturers themselves, will have an interest in being able to find out, for example, which makes and models fail the MOT test at what stage, and for what reasons. Such information would clearly be of interest to prospective purchasers of second-hand vehicles, as would information about recorded vehicle mileage. Vehicle insurers, for example, are also likely to be interested in being able to confirm that vehicles of drivers whom they insure have valid MOT certificates if they need them.

Under the provisions of new subsection (6), as it stands, no information would be released which identified the registered keeper of the vehicle—because such information would not be on the record of the results of MOT tests anyway. Nor would any information be released about where vehicles were tested or about who tested them, because the provisions of the Bill preclude that information from being supplied. The Government believe that the provisions that would enable the Secretary of State to disclose anonymised particulars and information have clearly been very carefully thought through, and provided for in the Bill.

The clear objective of the provision is to enable the Secretary of State to reflect the commercial value of the information in the price that is charged for it. The income arising would be used to offset the cost of computerisation. That, we believe, is an equitable arrangement.

I am aware of the concerns expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe about the possible misuse of such information. I am sure that we all share those concerns. As with all legislation, the Bill must accord with the requirements of the Data Protection Acts. My officials have already held preliminary discussions with the assistant Data Protection Registrar about the Bill's provisions and the controls needed to meet those requirements. No significant problems have been encountered or envisaged.

The regulations enabling the Secretary of State to sell anonymised information in bulk and detailing the particulars as to prices charged and the individuals or groups to whom or which such information may be sold will all be drawn up with the benefit of consultation. We have little, if any, doubt that the information that will be available once the MOT test scheme is computerised will be safe from misuse. No one wants anyone's letter box to bring a daily avalanche of unsolicited junk mail. There are more serious uses to which the information could be put, and we are very clear that everyone must be protected from such misuse.

In the light of what I have said, I trust that my hon. Friend will withdraw the amendment.

Dr. Palmer: I am grateful to the Minister and to all who have commented on the amendment. We had a useful discussion, putting on the record exactly what the intentions of the clause are. I accept my hon. Friend's assurances: it is a reasonable package. I therefore beg to ask leave to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment, by leave, withdrawn.

Order for Third Reading read.

12.52 pm

Mr. Hunter: I beg to move, That the Bill be now read the Third time.

As hon. Members may be aware, the Bill had the briefest of Second Reading debates and was unchallenged in Committee. I therefore welcomed the fact that amendments were tabled on Report, because that exposed some of its central features to scrutiny. Few things are worse than a Bill being passed unscrutinised.

Hon. Members will be aware that the Bill's origins lie in a consultation process initiated by the previous Government in the Department of Transport's 1994 review of MOT testing. We would probably have arrived at this point in the evolutionary process set in motion by that review at about this time, regardless of which party won the 1997 general election. The Bill is not contentious from the point of view of party politics.

The main purpose of the Bill is to provide a statutory framework for the establishment of a central computer database of the MOT test status of vehicles. We believe that the database will help to ensure compliance with the requirement to hold a valid MOT certificate and will aid enforcement. It will help to ensure high and consistent standards of testing and facilitate the introduction of paperless tests should that be deemed desirable at some time in the future. As we have heard, it will also allow the sale of information on the database, to the benefit of consumers and to offset the cost of computerisation.

I thank the Minister for allowing me access to her officials while the Bill was being prepared and during its passage through the House. I am most grateful to them for their invaluable advice and help. I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr. Miller: The House should express its gratitude to the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) for introducing the Bill. I am especially grateful for what he has just said; this has indeed been a useful exchange on several issues that would not otherwise have received any scrutiny.

It is absurd that we still have a paper-based system for MOT certificates. One large vehicle manufacturer put it to me that the average vehicle coming off the production line today has more computer power than the Apollo lunar module that landed on the moon. We have very sophisticated vehicles with extraordinary computing power, yet the regulatory regime that licenses their use on the road does not incorporate the same technology. The House should therefore welcome the Bill, and I urge the Minister to ensure that progress is made rapidly towards bringing it into practice.

One of the aspects of the Bill is something on which I have done extensive work—the relationship between computerised data and the rights of private citizens, in terms of the Data Protection Acts. The House will be aware that one of the Government's early actions was to introduce a Bill incorporating the European directive on data protection into mainstream legislation; its provisions were absorbed into the 1988 Act, which was passed under the Conservative Government. That was a positive step.

Bills such as this underline the need for us all to be vigilant on behalf of our constituents about the continued protection of privacy where there is legitimate concern. Anyone who does not meet the legal requirement to have a proper MOT certificate should expect that information quickly to reach the hands of the various authorities, including the police, the prosecuting authorities, magistrates courts and so on. That is right.

However, when data are sold, it is vital to have proper mechanisms for the anonymising of the information, so as to protect the individual citizen. The state has more and more information about the individual citizen on databases that can be cross-referenced, and I can see that more of that will result from the Bill. Cross-referencing between the police national computer and the MOT database is right, but, as the powers get stronger, we must consider carefully the privacy issues that arise.

I have consistently argued that, some day, we shall need to consider the role of the Data Protection Commissioner, as she is now called, and that her role should be expanded, to make her commissioner both for data protection and for privacy. That is a powerful argument, and the Bill illustrates the need to consider it. Whether that will happen as a result of this Bill, or of subsequent mergers of databases—the merger, for example, of the databases of the Contributions Agency and the Inland Revenue—is open to discussion.

I urge the Minister to reflect on that observation in the context of her responsibilities, because there are some important issues that we need to consider.

As the hon. Member for Basingstoke suggested, the central purpose of the Bill is to create the database. The subsequent issues stemming from that must be to ensure that people abide by the law and that we collect information that may help us in the future with the better design of vehicles. We must not allow the Bill to be used for purposes that might put at risk the privacy of an individual citizen. I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr. Browne: I congratulate the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on introducing this Bill. It is clear to me from the debate today and from reading the report of the Second Reading and Committee stages that both sides of the House agree that this modest, technical Bill will make an important contribution to the growing body of road traffic legislation. I checked in the Library yesterday and that legislation now takes up the equivalent of five volumes of an encyclopaedia.

Vehicles of an appropriate age are certified through the MOT test as roadworthy and that has been an important addition to the cause of accident prevention. As my hon. Friend the Minister made clear in the debate on new clause 1, it is probably as a consequence of the MOT requirement that research shows that the lack of roadworthiness of vehicles contributes to comparatively few accidents. However, we must bring the MOT system up to date.

As the Bill makes clear, there are many advantages in having a centralised computer database of the MOT test status of vehicles. Not only will a computerised system provide a means of control of the issue of the some 22 million MOT tests that are carried out annually, it will make it easier for the Department's Vehicle Inspectorate to monitor the performance of MOT testing stations and, as importantly, the individual testers who will now be effectively licensed.

Much was said on Second Reading, in Committee and in the debate today about how the database will assist the police to enforce the law on MOTs; how the instant access through the PNC will be a preventative force; how it will facilitate the relicensing of vehicles; and even, through access by prospective purchasers, how it will help to protect consumers. Those positive advantages justify the proposed changes in the Bill.

On Report, I raised a question with the hon. Member for Basingstoke about the disclosure of information under the new sections 45 and 46 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 that the Bill will introduce. My reading of new section 46(6)(b) is that no information can be disclosed that identifies who tested a particular vehicle or where it was tested. If I have understood that provision correctly, it means that the information can be sold commercially either in bulk or to individuals such as prospective purchasers of vehicles, but information about the premises where the vehicle was tested, or who tested it, cannot be revealed. I believe that that is what the hon. Member for Basingstoke said in response to my intervention on the point.

I seek reassurance from the hon. Gentleman or from my hon. Friend the Minister that regulations made under subsection (5) will not necessarily restrict access to information about who tested the vehicle or the premises at which it was tested. I can envisage circumstances in which an individual other than the owner or registered keeper of the vehicle could legitimately argue for access. For example, a person injured in an accident may want that information for civil proceedings, so that the testing station or the individual tester may be held responsible. Subject to that clarification, I support the Bill.

1.10 pm

Mr. James Cran (Beverley and Holderness): I shall be brief. The Opposition support the Bill. That support was expressed on Second Reading and it has not changed. However, we spent almost four hours on Report considering the most fatuous collection of amendments that I have ever seen, illustrated by the fact that the Minister simply swept them all away—very elegantly, if I may say so. The ulterior motive was never to improve the Bill, but to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order.

Mr. Cran: The intention was merely to make sure that the next—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must resume his seat when I stand. He is straying from the Third Reading motion.

1.12 pm

Dr. Alan Whitehead (Southampton, Test): I support the Bill and congratulate the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on introducing it. I am delighted to be present on Third Reading to make a brief contribution.

I have a confession to make to the House. I belong to the small but shamefaced club whose members are people who have bought clocked cars. I did so some years ago, having undertaken what I considered to be reasonable checks about the provenance of the car. It appeared to have 30,000 miles on its clock, and I took it home and began driving it.

The circumstances in which I found out that the car was clocked are pertinent to the Bill. I believe that, in future, when consumers purchase a second-hand car and face the same problem as I had, they will be grateful for the passing of the Bill. After I had driven my car for a while, I was surprised to receive a telephone call from the trading standards officer of Wiltshire county council—not the county where I resided at the time.

The trading standards officer had been on a "fishing" expedition around car auctions in Wiltshire, and happened to have recorded the mileage of cars that were sold at the car auction at which I had bought mine. He had taken it upon himself to search, by whatever means he could, the destination of the cars sold at that auction and to telephone the registered keeper of the cars whose destination he had traced, to find out whether the mileage that he had recorded was the same as that which the purchaser believed to be the case. The car that I thought was a good purchase at 30,000 miles in fact had more than 80,000 miles on the clock. I was astonished and humbled to find that my checks had been so useless and that I had been sold a thoroughly dodgy car, so I took up the matter with the vendor. When I returned the car to the vendor, I contacted the trading standards officer concerned to thank him for his diligence.

The organisation that had sold me the car denied all knowledge of the circumstances in which it had been clocked. It claimed to have been taken in as much as I had been when it purchased the car. I was paid back most of my money and, thanks to the trading standards officer, I was spared having a car that was not fit for use.

The company that had sold me the car escaped any prosecution or any come back for its activity and it is still trading. The trading standards officer could not demonstrate that the vendor had sold the car knowing it to be clocked and was guilty of an offence.

I hope that the hon. Member for Basingstoke will be able to assure me that a car's mileage as registered at its MOT can be obtained with proper safeguards. That will allow two things to happen that will be a complete response to the calamity that I have set out. First, I will be protected substantially on purchasing a car that appeared subsequently to have been clocked. As importantly, trading standards officers would be assisted in establishing, when a second-hand car dealer bought a car, perhaps at an auction, and passed it on, the point at which the clocking had taken place.

A genuine purchaser of a car for sale, believing it to show the correct mileage on the clock, would be able to mount a defence. Someone who had taken on the car with a high mileage on the clock and clearly between the point of purchase and resale had clocked it, could be identified. If that is a correct reading of clause 2, it represents a tremendous step forward for consumer protection. It will allow purchasers in future to rest assured that it is possible by reasonable inquiry—there will still be people who purchase cars without undertaking sufficient checks, who will be duped—to have a good chance of knowing what has happened to a car and the circumstances in which it was purchased and sold to them.

If that is the position, the Bill's progenitor, the hon. Member for Basingstoke, is to be congratulated. Purchasers of cars will have recourse to action whereas I discovered only by chance that my car was clocked.

1.14 pm

Mr. Dismore: I congratulate the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on the progress that his Bill has made. Not many hon. Members have the opportunity to introduce a private Member's Bill, and far fewer have the opportunity of taking it through the House and seeing it, one hopes, make rapid progress in the other place.

I welcome the Bill for several reasons. First, it will make a great contribution to vehicle safety, not only in the short term for one-off vehicles but in the longer term. The database that the Bill will create will enable the Secretary of State to accumulate comprehensive and authoritative statistical data on the trends of vehicle roadworthiness.

We often hear about problems with new vehicles. I do not know how many times I have seen recall notices in the press when a design fault has suddenly been found or a manufacturing defect has affected a number of vehicles. Such difficulties are often easily and quickly detected, the vehicles are brought back for repair and the problem is dealt with. The most obvious example was the Ford Pinto case in the United States. The design fault was the positioning of the petrol tank and cars exploded suddenly when they were rear-ended at traffic lights, incinerating the occupants. The Ford Motor Company took some time to accept that there was a design fault on the vehicle and that was one of the issues on which Ralph Nader, the great defender of consumer rights, made his name.

The Bill goes beyond that and, through the database, will look at the longer-term trends of vehicle safety. That will, first, enable manufacturers to determine whether there is a longer-term design fault in a vehicle, which may not be immediately apparent when it appears on the road—for example, a part may wear out more frequently on one type of vehicle than on another—and, secondly, inform them in their design processes. They will be able to work through the MOT system to check what may be going wrong with a particular vehicle, and that will help them to improve design.

Thirdly, the Bill will help consumer choice when people are buying vehicles second hand. If we publish the statistical information on which cars last longer, we will enable people in that market to make a much better choice. For example, we all know that Morris Minors go on for ever. Such information does not come from MOT testing, but from experience gained over many decades, and it could be made available to consumers at a much earlier stage.

Mr. Miller: My hon. Friend has raised an interesting point about the safety of second-hand vehicles, which is very pertinent to me. My wife suffered whiplash injuries in a crash. Immediately following that, there was a press announcement about the reinstallation of a petrol cap. Had there been a computerised system, she could have got that information far earlier and perhaps avoided the injuries that she sustained.

Mr. Dismore: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for that intervention, because it graphically illustrates the point I am making. Design faults are often found early on, but sometimes they are longer term and the MOT system could be a useful early-warning system for consumers who have bought a particular vehicle or as part of the second-hand market.

I also welcome the Bill because it will enable the inspectorate to monitor garages much more closely. We all agree that most garages do an excellent job when they repair cars and carry out MOT tests, and that they would not be involved in ripping off the consumer in any way, shape or form. Equally, as in every profession, one or two rogues may not test vehicles as they should. Someone may issue an MOT certificate on a dodgy vehicle in return for a back-hander, but the Bill will allow us to monitor statistically the performance of garages. If the same garage issues dodgy MOT certificates time and again, we will be able to clamp down quickly and easily, which is a great consumer benefit.

I am also pleased that we are putting the training of people involved in MOT testing on a statutory basis. My hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty), who is not in his place, had quite a pot at solicitors. Perhaps I may return the compliment by having a pot at teachers, lecturers and instructors—there are good, bad and indifferent ones. Putting the training mechanisms on a statutory basis, including the charging arrangements for them, will result only in an increase in standards.

The Bill will also achieve much better supervision of MOT testing stations. Garage chains were mentioned earlier, and the authorised examiner may not be able to be present at every garage for every test. That is inevitable. Therefore, I am pleased that the Bill provides for nominating supervisors at each MOT testing station to ensure that the tests are carried out effectively and competently. That is an excellent improvement that has been made to the Bill.

We discussed how the Bill will help crime prevention, but many issues that warrant being highlighted were not mentioned. In particular, the Bill will help to remove the incentive to steal and forge MOT certificates. That is one of the problems that often occurs through the dodgy garages that I mentioned earlier—those who, for a back-hander, issue dodgy MOT certificates—which find that blank MOT certificates have disappeared from the garage safe. If, as a result of the Bill, the definitive MOT record is on a database rather than a paper certificate, it will make a great contribution to combating the problem of stolen MOT certificates. It will also mean that we can stop supplying blank MOT certificates and get rid of the whole paper chase.

My hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead) mentioned the important benefit of including vehicle mileage on the record. One of the problems is that people rarely keep previous MOT certificates, so a vehicle's long-term history is not available. For example, a company car may cover a vast number of miles in the first year or two, which would take much of the life out of the car. Indeed, it would run it into the ground. It may then be sold on to somebody who uses it very little for two or three years. When it is sold on again, the mileage, averaged out, may look reasonable. However, it is important that the consumer buying that car knows that, in its early years, it had a lot of use, because that may affect the vehicle's life. That is another important protection for consumers.

My hon. Friend the Member for Test also made a valid point about the Bill avoiding the clocking of vehicles. It is important that we make that information available to consumers. I do not want to rehearse our earlier arguments about who can make inquiries, but I hope that this mechanism will enable consumers and those interested in vehicle safety to obtain MOT histories for the purposes that I have described.

Another benefit of the Bill is that of renewing the MOT certificate. When my tax disc comes up for renewal, I know that I must buy a new one because I receive a reminder and can trot down to the post office and fill in the relevant form. I doubt whether I am alone in that, the last time that I went to renew my tax disc at the House of Commons post office, I forgot to take my MOT certificate with me. That was a bit of a nuisance, because I then had to return to renew it on another occasion. If we have automatic renewal through a computer database, we will not need to produce our MOT certificates in order to renew our tax disc, so the risk of having to make two trips to the post office will be avoided.

Moreover, if one receives a reminder, it ensures that one renews the certificate. My hon. Friend the Minister said that, when people have to renew their tax disc, it serves as a reminder that their MOT test may be due at the same time. Although that may be so for people who have an annual tax disc, those who renew periodically during the year may find that their MOT certificate is out of sync with the disc.

Happily, the garage to which I take my car for repair issues its own reminder to me. Obviously, that is of great commercial benefit to the garage—it not only reminds me that my MOT certificate is due for renewal but suggests that I might like to go back to the garage to have the job done. It is an excellent garage and I have no qualms about taking my car there. I suspect, however, that many people forget to renew their MOT certificate and thus commit an offence along the lines that we discussed earlier. The Bill will therefore benefit consumers in that way.

For the reasons that I and my hon. Friends have given, I commend the Bill to the House and congratulate the hon. Member for Basingstoke on making such progress with it.

Ms Glenda Jackson: I add my voice to those that have already been heard in the Chamber thanking the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) for introducing the Bill. As he is aware, the Government welcome its introduction. I also thank him for his gracious comments about the help afforded to him by my officials.

I should also like to thank hon. Members who have contributed to the debate. As the hon. Member for Basingstoke said, the Second Reading debate was comparatively short. The contributions that we have heard this morning from my hon. Friends the Members for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller), for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. Browne) for Southampton, Test (Dr. Whitehead) for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) for North-West Norfolk (Dr. Turner) and for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer) have been fascinating to listen to, because they have been informed and particularly detailed. I should also like to thank hon. Members not only for their good-natured approach to the debate, but, although it was brief, for the way in which the Committee stage was conducted.

I must exclude from that list the contribution of the hon. Member for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Cran), who is the official spokesperson for the Conservative Opposition on this issue. He had the temerity to dub as fatuous amendments tabled by my hon. Friends that sought to improve the Bill and to ensure a reduction in deaths and injuries on our roads. Their amendments were concerned with data protection to safeguard the individual, given the computerisation of information proposed in the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Lady knows that I brought the hon. Member for Beverley and Holderness (Mr. Cran) to order because a discussion of the amendments takes us away from the motion, which is that the Bill should be read a Third Time.

Ms Jackson: I am grateful for your advice, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and for the fact that we share a view about the contribution of the hon. Member for Beverley and Holderness.

I shall deal with the issues that have been raised by my hon. Friends on Third Reading. My hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston was rightly concerned—as I am sure that all hon. Members are—about how we ensure data protection, given the requirements of the Bill, and about individual privacy.

My hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun asked to whom information on the computerised database will be available and what information the database will contain. I trust that I shall reassure him by saying that new section 45(6B) of the Road Traffic Act 1988 covers all details of the tests—not only the results, but where and by whom the vehicle was tested. New section 46(5) allows, by regulation, disclosure of full details under new section 45(6B) to people who can show reasonable cause for wanting such information, such as for an investigation into a car accident. New section 46(6), however, provides bulk disclosure of information to anyone, but that precludes the selling of information on where, and by whom, a vehicle was tested.

My hon. Friend the Member for Test gave us painful and personal details of what had happened to him and his vehicle. He rightly highlighted the fact that a computerised central database will help to ensure that such situations do not arise in the future.

[Ms Jackson]

My hon. Friend the Member for Hendon brought together the central themes of this important debate. He referred to the co-ordination and dissemination of information, which can bring only benefits in the important areas of crime reduction; ensuring that testing and test centres are the best that they can be; and consumer protection. As he most tellingly pointed out, such information can also assist in the better design of motor vehicles. All that is part and parcel of what I regard as one of the central conclusions of today's debate: that the dissemination of information can play a major part in reducing the number of deaths and injuries on our roads. That was the opening theme of the debate, when we discussed new clause 1.

As I have said, the Government welcome the Bill. We believe that computerisation will bring significant benefits to MOT testing. We are proceeding with the modernisation of the existing scheme, but, as I am sure that all hon. Members know, the current legislation would impose constraints that would prevent us from achieving all our objectives. The Bill will ensure that modernisation takes place as cost-effectively as possible, and with the maximum benefits.

One of the Bill's main purposes is to amend provisions in part II of the Road Traffic Act 1988 relating to MOT testing. None of the Bill's provisions will relax or remove any of our existing controls over the scheme; on the contrary, the Bill will preserve and enhance those controls.

The main objective of MOT computerisation is to enable the Secretary of State to establish and maintain a central record of the MOT status of vehicles, and the project will ensure that the Secretary of State has better information. The need for better information has been a recurring theme today, and not only in the context of how tests are carried out. Computerisation will clearly enable testing standards to be controlled more effectively; what the Secretary of State would not be able to do without the Bill is to enable the police to check easily and quickly whether a vehicle has a valid MOT certificate. The Bill will also help to facilitate paperless vehicle relicensing transactions, and will enable information from the proposed MOT database to be used for the benefit of others. For instance, the information could be used to help to meet the cost of introducing computerisation.

As has been pointed out, the Bill provides the potential for us to reduce the amount of crime, and to make it easier for consumers to meet requirements in legislation specifying that vehicles on the road should be properly licensed and roadworthy. It will make better enforcement possible, and may enable vehicles to be relicensed over the telephone. As I have said, we are aiming for paperless vehicle relicensing transactions.

We welcome the provisions enabling information to be made available to prescribed persons in certain cases. Hon. Members were rightly concerned about that issue, but, as I was at pains to point out, it will be for the Secretary of State to define what information may be disseminated to whom and for what amount. The Government have no intention of selling information from the database about the identity of registered keepers of vehicles; indeed, such particulars will never be recorded there. Particulars in database records, such as where and by whom an MOT test was carried out, will not be disclosed except in cases prescribed by regulations. I have responded in detail to my hon. Friend the Member for Kilmarnock and Loudoun, who was rightly worried about that.

We want to ensure that disclosures of information will be permitted only when the person requesting the information can demonstrate the existence of reasonable cause for requesting it. For example, the regulations would require it to be demonstrated that an inquirer had a legitimate connection with the state of the vehicle involved. That could be achieved by the quoting of the 17-character alpha-numeric identification number that is unique to individual vehicles.

The Bill enables the Government to obtain maximum benefit from a central computer record of the MOT test results of approximately 22 million vehicles, tested every year at 19,000 MOT testing stations. A full regulatory impact assessment has been carried out. It is estimated that the cost of computerising the MOT testing scheme will be approximately £22 million per annum. That cost will be borne initially by the Vehicle Inspectorate at the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, but passed on to motorists through an increase in the MOT test fee, amounting, we expect, to no more than around £1.

If anonymised information from the proposed MOT database is sold for commercial benefit, as we hope that it will be, the Vehicle Inspectorate will have a share in the income generated and, in turn, will use that income to help to reduce the extra £1 burden of the test fee, so the Bill will benefit consumers not only by making additional information available to them, but by helping to reduce the cost of obtaining an MOT test.

I am pleased to reiterate that the Government welcome the Bill, which will greatly assist in achieving the maximum benefits from introducing computerisation into the MOT scheme. For all those reasons, and for all the reasons that have been put forward by hon. Members, I commend the Bill.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed.

Referendums Bill

As amended in the Standing Committee, considered.

COMMENCEMENT (NO. 2)

'.—This Act shall come into force on such day as the Secretary of State may by order appoint.'.—[Mr. Miller.]

Brought up, and read the First time.

1.37 pm

Mr. Andrew Miller (Ellesmere Port and Neston): I beg to move, That the clause be read a Second time.

We have spent the morning dealing with dodgy MOT certificates. We now deal with a dodgy insurance policy, as proposed by the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan). On Second Reading and throughout Committee, he described the Bill as an insurance policy. I have sought to amend the Bill extensively to turn it from a dodgy insurance policy into one that will work, but the hon. Gentleman does not want to take any advice on the matter.

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby): As regards advice, has the hon. Gentleman taken any advice from the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, the hon. Member for Knowsley, North and Sefton, East (Mr. Howarth), or from anyone in the Whips Office, on the new clause that he has tabled?

Mr. Miller: I will be frank. I tabled a considerable number of the amendments after my own research, and some were tabled after discussions with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary. I make no bones about it. I seek to improve what was perhaps intended to be helpful legislation. It seems that the hon. Gentleman was not open to advice because the Under-Secretary has, I understand, offered to embrace the spirit of the Bill within the electoral commission that is proposed by the Government. That was described on Second Reading at great length.

Mr. Oliver Letwin (West Dorset): In that case, will the hon. Gentleman call on the Government to guarantee what we have repeatedly asked for: no referendum will be held until rules similar to those proposed are in place?

Mr. Miller: I do not need to call on the Government to make such commitments. I know my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary extremely well. I trust him absolutely. I know the Home Secretary extremely well and I trust him as well. I also trust the Government. Clearly, the weakness of the hon. Gentleman's position is that he does not trust anyone. That is indicative of the problems that face the Tory party: Conservative Members do not trust even each other.

Mr. Letwin: Of course I understand that the hon. Gentleman trusts his own Front Benchers. However, it would be a little difficult for him to trust them if they have never made the statement, would it not? Would it not be helpful if they stated that they would not hold referendums until they had rules in place?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael J. Martin): Order. We are discussing new clause 3. Let us concern ourselves with that.

Mr. Miller: I should love to answer the point made by the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin), but—on your advice, Mr. Deputy Speaker—I shall not.

Mr. Robathan: You cannot.

Mr. Miller: Yes, I certainly can.

The substance of the new clause deals with the date of commencement. The problem is that the hon. Member for Blaby does not seem to trust anyone, but wants his so-called insurance policy to be effected immediately. I am trying to be helpful to him.

New clause 3 would make alternative provision for the implicit commencement date of the Bill's provisions. I believe—although there are greater experts on the matter than I am—that, unless an alternative date is provided, a Bill's provisions will commence automatically on Royal Assent. New clause 3 would simply provide for the Bill to come into force on a date determined by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Letwin: Never.

Mr. Miller: Does the hon. Gentleman want to say something? I am not quite sure what the word "never" means. Never say never is my advice to him—or he might stay in opposition for ever.

Mr. Letwin: I am, of course, trying to say that the intent of new clause 3—it would be better if the hon. Gentleman admitted it—is to give the Secretary of State power never to implement the Bill's provisions.

Mr. Miller: Again, the hon. Gentleman shows no faith in anyone.

Mr. Andrew Dismore (Hendon): I do not know whether my hon. Friend is aware of the case of R v. Secretary of State for the Home Department ex parte Fire Brigades Union and others, but it deals with a point of construction applying to his amendment. I hope to be able—if I catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker—to expand on that issue later in the debate.

Mr. Miller: I am not sure whether to address my hon. Friend as learned, as he has substantially more legal qualifications than I do. Nevertheless, I shall avoid responding to his point, but leave him to make it later in the debate.

New clause 3 will enable the Secretary of State to determine the date on which the provisions come into force, presumably giving him the option of following the advice and guidance sought by the hon. Member for Blaby. If there were to be a referendum before establishment of the promised electoral commission, the Secretary of State could trigger the Bill's provisions —which would, quite rightly, provide at least some mechanism to deal with the hon. Gentleman's concerns about the conduct of the referendum.

Mr. Robathan: Has the hon. Gentleman just admitted the possibility that there could be a referendum before the measures are in place? If he did, he has contradicted everything that he said in Committee.

Mr. Miller: I did not say that. I am working on the basis that I have as little knowledge of what happens in Cabinet as the hon. Gentleman does.

Mr. Robathan: You trust them.

Mr. Miller: I have considerably more trust in my right hon. Friends than the hon. Gentleman obviously does. If the Cabinet decided tomorrow that there should be a referendum, the new clause would give them a vehicle to provide the types of protection that the hon. Gentleman is seeking.

Mr. Robathan: Last night, about 65 of the hon. Gentleman's colleagues voted against the Government. Do they have a similar trust in the Cabinet?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are debating a new clause. Those matters should not be dealt with in this debate.

1:45 pm

Mr. Miller: Last night, my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Berry) said that he accepted 98 per cent. of the Bill that was before us. If the hon. Member for Blaby would trust the Government and my hon. Friend the Minister 98 per cent., we would not be having this rather odd exchange. As I said, the Government have the opportunity to put in place the protection that the hon. Gentleman seeks should the Cabinet decide on a referendum on any subject between now and the enactment of the Bill.

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): The hon. Gentleman has already admitted that, without the new clause, the Bill will come into effect on Royal Assent, so the new clause would simply delay its implementation. Can he explain why we need a delay?

Mr. Miller: That is a perfectly sensible point and it is my duty to explain it to the House. Due to the filibustering of the Opposition, I have not had the chance to do so. The Bill gives the Secretary of State the power to trigger the Bill if, hypothetically, the Government decided on a referendum on the abolition of Blaby or anything else. That is the insurance policy that the hon. Gentleman requires. If there is no referendum between now and the enactment of the Bill, without the new clause, we shall have set up a body that is superfluous to requirements at public cost, wasting taxpayer's money. The new clause would enable the hon. Member for Blaby to have his insurance policy without the potential waste of public money that would result from his having purchased that insurance policy earlier than necessary.

Mr. Robathan: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for being so generous with his time, although he would quite like to spin out his speech. I am prepared to accept his new clause without further discussion if he guarantees that the Bill will receive a Third Reading this afternoon. If he wants to have an insurance policy brought in by the Secretary of State, I am willing to accept that in return for the Bill receiving a Third Reading today.

Mr. Miller: As a humble Back Bencher, I regret that that is not within my gift. During the debates on the several amendments that I have tabled, I want to ensure that a rather weak insurance policy is improved so that we do not end up with the dodgy-MOT-certificate syndrome that we discussed this morning.

Dr. Alan Whitehead (Southampton, Test): I have listened carefully to my hon. Friend's reasons for the new clause. Is he assuming that the Bill applies only to national referendums and not to local and regional ones, which may well take place at a time that is difficult to specify and according to the wishes of the Secretary of State or is he assuming that those flaws in the Bill will have been ironed out before Third Reading?

Mr. Miller: As I understand it, the Bill refers only to referendums that are triggered by an action of a Secretary of State. Whether that could cover local or regional referendums is a matter for discussion. Some of my hon. Friends from the north-east have said that they would like an early referendum on the devolution of powers to that region. Such a referendum would require the Government to create the reference framework. I do not know whether the same applies to referendums at county council or district council level, although I am sure that it could be the case in certain circumstances. My one-line new clause would remove the possibility of an absurd amount of public money being wasted on the creation of a body that, even if Conservative Members have only a small amount of faith in the Government—surely they have at least some—

Mr. Letwin: No.

Mr. Miller: If that is the official position of the Conservatives, it reflects badly on them.

Mr. Butterfill: Surely the hon. Gentleman accepts that everything that has happened today has been an organised filibuster to prevent the Bill from reaching the statute book. The Minister could give an undertaking to introduce Government legislation if he wanted. Of course we distrust the Government.

Mr. Miller: I find that insulting. Throughout my time in the House, I have worked very hard with hon. Members from both sides on issues relating to road safety. My new clause, which we spent a substantial amount of time discussing today, was about issues relating to the death of 3,000 people a year. The hon. Gentleman should not regard that as filibustering. His constituents would not agree. It is probably substantially more important than this Bill.

As I was trying to say before I was interrupted several times by Conservative Members, this is a simple new clause aimed at minimising the waste of public money that would ensue from all the provisions in the Bill coming into force on Royal Assent. I would prefer it if the Conservatives had a little faith in the Government and accepted the spirit in which my hon. Friend the Minister made his representations on Second Reading. I have been assured that there will be an electoral commission draft Bill, which will be subject to widespread public consultation. It is surely right that a Bill on issues that are so fundamental to our constitution should be subject to public consultation. I am sure that the hon. Member for Blaby accepts that. Why waste time and resources on the body specified in the Bill? If the hon. Gentleman wants an insurance policy, the new clause would get him more sympathy from Labour Members without wasting a lot of public money.

Mr. Robathan: We have 36 minutes left today, so I suspect that we shall not finish all the business on this Bill or on the Fur Farming (Prohibition) Bill, which I regret, because I support that Bill.

Mr. Miller: Will the hon. Gentleman therefore condemn the actions of his colleagues last week in talking out that Bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must not go into that.

Mr. Robathan: I would not dream of doing so. However, there is time available next week, when we have a recess starting on Thursday—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must not mention those matters. He must refer to the new clause.

Mr. Robathan: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The new clause is a small clause, and the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) asked us to put more faith in the Government and to have an insurance policy. I do not particularly object to the clause, and I would be prepared to accept it. We agree that we want a referendums commission.

The hon. Gentleman and the Minister sat through the Committee. I believe that the Minister thinks that this is a good idea. He may not think that every aspect of the Bill is a good idea, but I think that he accepts that it would be good to have a referendums commission so as to have the rules for referendums brought in before the next referendum—be it, as in the new clause, at the discretion of the Home Secretary, or be it at the enactment of the Bill.

The hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston was voluble about the new clause, as he has been throughout the day. We are asked to put faith in the Government, but the amendment paper shows that we should not have faith in them. Why has the new clause been tabled? It is not normal for a specific derogation to the Home Secretary to be made at this stage of a Bill. It is normal to have that enacted at Royal Assent. I do not object to the clause, but I want to know why it has been tabled. Why have the Government assisted in producing this clause and others, as we have heard, and why are they opposed to the Bill?

The hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston talked about a waste of public money and resources. However, he is aware that negligible amounts of public money would be spent under the Bill because there would be no need for a referendums commission if no referendum were called. I look forward to seeing the Government's proposals to give discretion to the Home Secretary to determine when the measures are brought into law.

I would have more faith in the Government if they would give us the guarantee for which Members on both sides have asked, as have many outside the House.

Mr. Letwin: Does my hon. Friend agree that we could accept entirely the new clause and the refusal of the Government to accept the Bill as a whole if we had such a guarantee? Does he further agree that proposing the new clause in the absence of that guarantee provides nothing like an insurance policy? If the Government are determined not to promise that they will have no referendum before the new commission is enacted, they will show no sign of actually implementing the legislation in advance of a referendum. Therefore, we have an insurance policy that the Government could negate.

Mr. Robathan: My hon. Friend is right. The hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston talked about improving the insurance policy but, as I have said all along, I will withdraw the money that I wish to put in that insurance policy if we have the Government's insurance policy on the table. The clause will not improve the insurance policy and is designed to damage it.

I remind the hon. Gentleman of the famous words of the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) on exactly this subject when he was asked whether the Government were obliged to accept the Neill recommendations. The right hon. Gentleman was then a Cabinet Minister; this was before his sad demise. I do not hear Labour Members cheering. The right hon. Gentleman said:

"We don't have to but we need to be mindful of the analysis that he is offering."

I should like the Government to say rather more firmly that they will accept the recommendations and introduce a Bill to be enacted before a referendum, with the discretion of the Home Secretary involved, as in the new clause.

2 pm

The new clause—along with various others—seems foolish in its introduction, its inception and its motivation. I do not know whether the hon. Member for Northampton, North (Ms Keeble) intends to speak, but the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore), who has been drafted in, may waffle on about the new clause. I confidently expect them to be talking on it at 2.30, but they should know that those who act as toadies of the Whips only gain the contempt and derision of the Whips, and of their constituents, and they irritate and bore the House. I notice that the hon. Member for Hendon is laughing. I am delighted to say that his constituents will have a good opportunity, at the next general election, to reject him.

Mr. Letwin: Does my hon. Friend agree that there are many circumstances under which the tabling of such a new clause and the filibustering techniques that are being used would be perfectly legitimate but that what he and I object to so strenuously in this case is the fact that we are dealing with the fundamentals of our democracy? The tabling of a new clause that is designed to do nothing other than destroy a measure intended to protect democracy against possible distortion by the use of public money and public broadcasting media is nothing short of a disgrace.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind hon. Members that interventions should be brief.

Mr. Robathan: I agree with my hon. Friend, but it is more important to note that hon. Members of all parties agree with him. The hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) is a sponsor of the Bill and agrees with me, with Liberal Members, with the independent hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Bell) and with people outside the House that the new clause was tabled purely to undermine the Bill and to undermine any better democracy in this country.

Mr. Paul Flynn (Newport, West): I have not been physically present in the Chamber for most of today, but I have heard all the speeches by my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller). He spoke on the Road Traffic (Vehicle Testing) Bill, which I accept is very serious. There are 16 Bills before us today, and I am sure that my hon. Friend has expert knowledge of them all and would like to speak about them all with equal brevity but, sadly, although the Bill is splendid and the new clause is entirely acceptable and worth while, we are witnessing not only the assassination of a number of Bills by tactics that many of us might consider questionable—that happened last week, as it does on many Fridays—but the degradation of the rights and powers of Back Benchers.

Back Benchers' time is wasted by Governments and by the Opposition when they want not to argue against a Bill but to use the crude weapons of Parliament to destroy it in an entirely undemocratic way. Today, as on most Fridays, the reputation of Parliament is being demeaned. We want genuine modernisation of the House.

Mr. Robathan: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman, with whom I agree on this subject, as on many, although on some we fundamentally disagree. Does he agree that there is plenty of time in a parliamentary Session to discuss those matters fully and put new measures that are needed—be they about bull bars or whatever—on the statute book? We have plenty of time, but we keep going off on enormously long recesses.

Mr. Flynn: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman. He seemed to think that I was giving way, but I had in fact finished my speech. We are two years into this Parliament. The Government came in as modernising new Labour, but the modernisation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman has indeed finished his speech, because he has not said much about the new clause. Perhaps someone could speak on the new clause.

Mr. Dismore: I congratulate the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) on the Bill's having reached this stage. As he knows from what I said on Second Reading, I have many reservations about it, but I agree with much of what he has said about the new clause.

I am only sorry that the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) is not here today—he is another member of the usual Friday crew—because we could have had an interesting trip down memory lane.

When I intervened on my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller), I mentioned the case of the Crown v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, ex parte Fire Brigades Union and others. It was the leading case that interpreted, in a particular context, wording similar to that of my hon. Friend's new clause. That represents a trip down memory lane for the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border and myself because I was the solicitor who handled the case, and he was the Home Office Minister whom, I am pleased to say, I defeated in the House of Lords.

The case concerned the then criminal injuries compensation scheme under the Criminal Justice Act 1988, which contained in its implementation provisions wording almost identical to that of the new clause. The House of Lords construed what the meaning of the word "may" was in that context. The case turned on whether "may" means "shall", or "shall" means "may", or neither, in any particular case. Bearing in mind what was said when we discussed the Road Traffic (Vehicle Testing) Bill just now, it is somewhat peculiar that, for the second time today, I am having to criticise the wording of an amendment devised by my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston.

I may be able to answer the question asked by the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) when he intervened to challenge my hon. Friend about what he intended to achieve, by telling hon. Members that the enacting provisions in the 1988 Act, on which the House of Lords had to adjudicate, were expressed as coming into force

"on such day as the Secretary of State may . . . appoint".

That is almost identical to the wording in the new clause.

In fact, the Secretary of State did not appoint a day, so the then non-statutory criminal injuries compensation scheme remained in operation. In 1993, the Home Secretary said that those provisions of the 1988 Act would not be brought into force, but the existing non-statutory scheme would be replaced, simply through the diktat of the Home Secretary.

The case was brought by the Fire Brigades Union and a consortium of other trade unions, the TUC and many others to challenge the decision in the courts. Unfortunately, although we were on a winning streak, it went all the way to the House of Lords.

Mr. Letwin: I am most grateful to the hon. Gentleman, because now he is explaining what he is talking about—a five-year delay during which the Government went unchallenged in not implementing legislation. That would be just long enough to hold the referendums on the euro, on proportional representation and so on, while the so-called insurance policy was left in abeyance.

Mr. Dismore: If the hon. Gentleman had listened to what I said earlier—clearly he is already bored by our proceedings, although we have not been going long—he would know that, for that very reason, I have much sympathy with what the hon. Member for Blaby said, and am not happy with my hon. Friend's new clause.

If I may finish the ratio of the case, I shall be able to develop my argument more fully. I regret to say that the House of Lords decision was split—there seem to be lot of split decisions recently—but it found that the wording in the 1988 Act, which is almost identical to that in the new clause,

"imposed a continuing obligation on the Secretary of State to consider whether to bring the statutory scheme . . . into force; that he could not lawfully bind himself not to exercise the discretion conferred on him; that the . . . scheme was inconsistent . . . and that, accordingly, the Secretary of State's decision not to bring"

the provisions

"into force . . . had been unlawful".

However, the legislation

"did not impose a . . . duty on the Secretary of State to bring" the scheme

"into force at any particular time".

The wording of my hon. Friend's new clause would, therefore, mean that the Home Secretary would have an obligation to keep the implementation of the legislation under review, but would not actually have to bring it into force.

Such wording frequently appears in legislation, and because of my experience of that legal case, I always have great difficulty with it; the formulation is so vague. I think that Bills should either be drafted in the same way as the Bill before us, so that they come into force on the date of Royal Assent, or contain a clause similar to the new clause, but using the word "shall" instead of the word "may". That would impose an obligation on the Secretary of State to bring the legislation into force at some stage.

I am concerned about such general discretion provisions, because the net impact of the 1995 case that I mentioned—if the then Home Secretary had got his way—would have been to introduce dramatic cuts in the compensation available to victims of crime. It was thanks only to the consortium of trade unions being prepared to put its money where its mouth was and take on the Home Secretary and the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border that we were able to stop the process. That led to much better provision for victims of crime in the legislation that the Conservative Government were forced to introduce.

For those reasons, I am very concerned by the wording of new clause 3. It is not wise to allow such wide discretion because it should be for Parliament to decide when primary legislation should come into force. I accept the need for some time to be specified in secondary legislation for orders to be drafted and approved by Parliament, and the Bill contains many opportunities for that process. I would prefer the Bill to read as suggested by the hon. Member for Blaby or for new clause 3 to contain the word "shall" instead of "may".

Mr. Tony McNulty (Harrow, East): My hon. Friend has set out two positions, but would he agree that a third position—putting a date of commencement into the Bill, such as 1 January 2001—would be preferable? That was proposed in Committee and, had the promoter not been as petulantly churlish then as he has been today and accepted it, we might not have needed new clause 3 at all.

Mr. Dismore: I have not had the opportunity to read the report of that part of the proceedings in Committee, but my hon. Friend makes a valid point. Many possible dates suggest themselves and, if the hon. Member for Blaby thought that there would be a referendum on Europe or electoral reform, he could have accepted the date proposed in Committee or tabled an amendment with a different date. That would have avoided the problem.

Mr. Robathan: The Government, whom the hon. Gentleman has been urging us all to trust, have told us that we will have a referendum on European integration and on proportional representation. For once, I have trust in the Government and he does not. What is going on?

Mr. Dismore: It is not a question of trust from my perspective. I trust the Government, just as my hon. Friend the Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston trusts the Government. My concern is one of statutory construction. The incorporation of words such as those proposed by my hon. Friend would be a bad addition to the Bill and that is why I do not support new clause 3. Much as I appreciate what my hon. Friend is trying to do, I cannot support him in this case.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. George Howarth): I welcome new clause 3 on commencement. The hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) has said on several occasions that he sees his Bill as an insurance policy. What he is apparently seeking to insure against is the Government not introducing their own legislation on the conduct of referendums before a referendum is held on the single currency, proportional representation or any other matter. The hon. Gentleman knows the answer to that and I shall not repeat it because he heard it ad nauseam on Second Reading, in Committee and on other occasions. He should know by now that the risk of that happening is such that there is simply no need for such an insurance policy.

Both I and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary have made it clear on several occasions that the Government are committed to early legislation on the main findings of the Neill report, which include specific proposals about referendums.

Mr. Letwin rose—

Mr. Howarth: I shall give way briefly to the hon. Gentleman, but I do want to make some progress.

Mr. Letwin: I am grateful to the Minister, but the idea that he wants to make progress is risible. I offer him the opportunity one last time in the progress of the Bill to give the assurance that would give us, and democracy in the United Kingdom, so much comfort—that the Government will not hold referendums on major issues before the provisions are implemented.

Mr. Howarth: The hon. Gentleman has asked me the same question over and over again, and I have given him the same answer over and over again. I will not play this silly little game with him. If the hon. Gentleman wants to waste time this afternoon, that is his business. I am not prepared to take part in that.

2.15 pm

Mr. Eric Forth (Bromley and Chislehurst): I have not asked the Minister the question before, so may I try? I have the permission of my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan), the Bill's promoter, to take a little time to try the question again. Will the Minister give a simple undertaking that no referendums will be held until the provisions of the Bill are embedded in our law?

Mr. Howarth: For the benefit of the right hon. Gentleman, the assurance that I have given in the past is that it is most unlikely that there will be a referendum on the single currency or on the electoral system before the provisions are on the statute book. However, I cannot give him any greater assurance than that for various reasons which he, as a member of a previous Government, would recognise. I cannot predict with any certainty what will happen, for example, on European integration and progress on the single currency, so it would be absurd for me to give such an assurance. We do not expect that that will be the case.

We hope to have an electoral commission established and new controls, including those on the conduct of referendums, in place before the next general election. The hon. Member for Blaby knows that the Government's position is clear on the timing of possible referendums on the single currency and on the voting system for the House. There is no immediate prospect of either of those referendums being held.

If the hon. Gentleman is serious about what he says, he would welcome new clause 3. Under the new clause, the Bill would come into force on a day prescribed by order. As a result, it would be possible to hold back on the appointment of a referendums commission until a referendum was in prospect. Consequently, the commission would have a real job to do. Such an arrangement would preserve the hon. Gentleman's insurance policy, but it would also ensure that taxpayers' money was not used as a premium to pay for setting up a referendum commission in the interim. My hon. Friend's amendment is worthy of support.

Mr. Letwin: If the Minister genuinely believes that the amendment is worthy of support, and—leaving aside what I regard as his spurious argument—if he genuinely intends that there should be no referendum before proper rules are in place, there is a course of action open to him in the next 12 minutes, by association with his colleagues, the Whips. That, I believe, would be wholly acceptable to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) who has worked so hard on the Bill, to me, to many other hon. Members and to many outside the House who care about such matters.

The Minister should withdraw the new clause and the other new clauses and amendments, and give the Bill a Third Reading so that it is on the statute book in a form that enables the Secretary of State to determine when it will be implemented. That would be a great step forward in our legislation.

I admit that initially I was not optimistic about the speech of the hon. Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore). I know that he speaks eloquently and at length, but generally not to the purpose of improving the Bill. However, what he said this afternoon was illuminating and it increased my education. It helped to show that, although the Bill would not be perfect, if it were accompanied by good will on the part of the Government, it would be an improvement on the present situation. It would be by no means as good as a Bill without the new clause, for the reasons that the hon. Member for Hendon gave, but it would be a great improvement.

That course of action is open to the Minister. If, by stating his expectation, the Minister means honestly to suggest that the Government do not want to hold referendums without the legislation, he should adopt such a course of action. We have the basis as a House and as a country for judging whether we should or should not have the trust in the Government that the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) suggested that we should have.

I have always believed that the Minister, and very probably the Home Secretary, intended to do the right thing. I have always seen the Minister as a democrat. However, I am deeply suspicious of the motives of the Home Secretary's colleagues in Cabinet. They have tried to jettison the Bill through the new clause and the many amendments that are to come. I am deeply suspicious because the future of our democracy and its reputation depend on not holding another major referendum without having in place the necessary rules. I suspect that, in their hearts, all Labour Members know that. An opportunity has been granted to us by my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby, who has introduced the Bill, and by the Minister, who says that his intentions are based on good will. I hope that we shall see the Government and their Back-Bench Members behaving with good will this afternoon.

Mr. George Howarth: I think that the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) is being playful. I wrote to the hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan)—the hon. Member for West Dorset received a copy of the letter—on 17 March. I set out clearly the Government's position. I see no point in entering the debate that the hon. Gentleman is trying to create. Nothing has moved on since 17 March. The Bill received its Second Reading and it was debated in Committee in great detail. The Government's basic position is no different from that set out in the letter of 17 March, a copy of which I have no doubt he cherishes and reads every night before he goes to sleep. That is where we stand on the matter.

The hon. Gentleman knows full well that I have said from the beginning that he should wait until we publish a draft Bill on the Neill proposals before the summer recess. That Bill will set out fully where we intend to go with our proposals for an electoral commission. If the hon. Gentleman accepts the case for an electoral commission, it is nonsensical to go forward with a referendums commission, when we are so near to establishing something that would embrace all concerns.

Mr. Letwin: If the Minister means what he has just said, the hon. Member for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller) has offered him a route to an irenic solution. There would be no need to establish the referendums commission in advance of the electoral commission if the electoral commission had been established before a referendum and if, as the new clause suggests, the Secretary of State had not implemented the Act. Surely the Minister should be willing on his own logic just espoused to accept the new clause, and then to urge his hon. Friends to withdraw the rest of the amendments and give the Bill a Third Reading.

Mr. Miller: I have listened to this great debate with much interest. I am particularly interested in the lawyers' club axis that is developing between my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) and the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin).

I want to simplify the process. I want to test the will of the House on this matter. If my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon wishes to oppose the new clause, let us see whether he has the support of Opposition Members.

Question put, That the clause be read a Second time:—

The House divided: Ayes 3, Noes 0.

Division No. 195] [2.23 pm

AYES

Brand, Dr Peter

Families

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Kevin Hughes.]

2.33 pm

Ms Sally Keeble (Northampton, North): I am grateful for the opportunity to have this debate on the important issue of support for families. Despite the emptiness of the Chamber for a Friday Adjournment debate, this matter is of great concern to many hon. Members and is of great and growing interest to many people outside the House because of the changing pressures on family life.

The issue is rarely out of the public arena. Support for families is a source of great strength for many, and its decline is seen as a cause of social decay for many people. It is a particularly important issue for my constituency, because it contains about 12,000 families, which is well above the national average for constituencies.

I should like to read out the views of some of my constituents on family life. These people wrote to me about their experiences during six months of consultation and campaigning on family issues. A single parent wrote movingly about her desire to be at home to look after her child. She wrote:

"I had my child because I wanted to raise her myself, not to be a part-time Mum".

She was retraining to go back to work, and wanted to be able to combine work with a constructive family life. A vicar wrote:

"Historically societies that have failed to uphold the family, and the sanctity of marriage, have often come to the point of collapse."

A much older woman, whose family was grown up, wrote:

"I have no authority at all to pass opinions on how others should bring up their families, but I'm a great believer in family life."

A teacher, expressing views shared by a number of people, wrote:

"Family/parenting/relationships etc could and should be dealt with more in schools and these messages should be reinforced through Government policies etc. Unfortunately I feel that many of these issues are hard to address because we are a very materialistic and therefore work driven society."

Another older woman wrote to me. I thought at first that her letter would be about how women should stay at home looking after the children. She wrote:

"I firmly believe that children under four years need 'one to one' with a parent. I worked part-time when my two children were this age on data processing 6-10pm. My husband arrived home around 5.30pm and took over with the children and put them to bed. It seems now always that material possessions are given priority over the love and care given to bringing up children."

Family policy is sometimes a difficult area for Governments to deal with, because it is on the fault line between the private and the public, the personal and the political. In the past, Governments who have talked a lot about family values have got into trouble. I am drawing on the views and experiences of my constituents, and I pay tribute to many people from all walks of life who participated in the debate that produced the report "Supporting Families in Northampton", a copy of which I have sent to my hon. Friend the Minister. It is based on a Government consultation document.

I thank Avon, Barclays Home Finance, Boots the Chemists, the bishop of Brixworth, Relate, Age Concern, Northamptonshire county council, Northampton borough council, the National Union of Knitwear, Footwear and Apparel Trades, Weston Favell credit union, and many members of the public who filled in questionnaires, came to meetings or just talked on their doorsteps about what they wanted for their families.

For most people, the big issue was change. There was change in the world of work; in particular, there was the impact of women working. In my constituency, many women work, many in part-time jobs, and their incomes are important to the family budget. In the long term, the growing economic independence of women will have profound implications; but in the short term there are practical issues affecting family life. There is also the changing nature of work, from full-time nine-to-five work to part-time work, or shift working in a 24-hour economy. Different types of job require different skills.

The other big change has been in what constitutes a family. Many families have broken up and reformed. Relationships are very different, finances have become more complicated, and, rather than having a nuclear or an extended family, many people have a network extending over a variety of families and generations.

Those changes have led to the need for a very different kind of provision and support, as was reflected in the ideas presented by my constituents. It was noticeable that people were not judgmental about the different types of family, but took a pragmatic approach to the supporting of families in the sometimes very difficult circumstances in which they found themselves, whether those families involved two parents or one, or were "reformed families".

People also made it clear that they considered that the Government's role was to support families—not to interfere in their private lives, decisions and choices, or indeed their life styles, but to provide practical assistance to meet their needs. For example, 100 per cent. of people aged between 25 and 40 who were surveyed in my constituency—including those with the heaviest family commitments—said that they thought that it was the Government's responsibility to ease the pressures of family breakdown, while 91 per cent. considered that it was the responsibility of employers to ensure that their employees could juggle home and work commitments.

People did not necessarily think that Government action had to mean legislative action. It could simply mean extending or reinforcing best practice, or, for example, using purchasing power to ensure that employers implemented family-friendly employment practices. Indeed, many thought that legal solutions were not the best, because they were adversarial and expensive, and inappropriate in the case of what were often interpersonal issues.

Most of the change that people wanted was in the sphere of work. Perhaps surprisingly, they wanted flexible working arrangements, allowing them time off work to deal with family crises. Many people, including the woman whose letter I quoted, went to a lot of trouble to juggle work and family commitments, so that their children could be cared for at home by a family member—perhaps with the mother fixing her working hours for when her partner was at home to care for the children. They wanted support in relation to those sometimes complicated arrangements. Quite a large number of people used nurseries, but, where people were working shifts and difficult hours, the hours of the nurseries, creches and such like often did not fit their working hours. They also wanted help with child care costs. I am pleased that those issues are being actively addressed by the Government.

People mentioned the impact on public services of the changes, with the need for public services to be organised around user rather than provider needs and priorities. From the public services—the local authorities themselves—came the view that that did not always have to mean extra money; there were different ways in which to provide services, using existing resources. Services such as NHS Direct and the youth offender panels, which provide services outside regular office hours, are welcome steps in the right direction, but, too often, public sector services lag behind the changing patterns of people's lives.

Another factor that came up was the importance of grandparents, especially when it came to child care. What emerged from the survey was that support from grandparents was regarded more highly by parents than by the grandparents themselves. I know that many hon. Members could attest to the importance of being able to telephone grandparents to ask for help when all other child care arrangements break down.

From the survey, the difficulty of juggling work and home emerged as the biggest pressure for 25 to 40-year-olds—it was an even bigger family pressure than finance. At a conference on the family, we heard from Boots that, for 90 per cent. of people, their ability to balance work and home life was a key factor in their commitment to their employer. Indeed, 20 per cent. said that they would take a pay cut if they felt that the changes in their working lives would lead to an improvement in their home life.

One of the biggest barriers, other than the practical ones of economy and staff management, to more family-friendly working was seen to be a lack of a forum for best practice. People said that there was a need for positive rewards and incentives, including from Government, for firms to introduce family-friendly policies.

Another big plea was for more support during the difficult time when families break down, when the biggest pressures were seen to be financial. Indeed, 60 per cent. of housing repossessions are due to financial problems following family breakdown; they are not due simply to debt problems. Often, those occur when women are left in homes with mortgages that they cannot afford and which the former partner fails, or refuses, to help to pay for. People had a raft of suggestions, including that financial institutions should examine different financial packages for families to ease them through the different stages of family life, for changes to mortgage arrangements and for arrangements for handling bad debt when things get tight.

There were suggestions for Government, such as ensuring that there was joined-up government not just between central Government Departments, but between local and central Government and Government agencies, including the Benefits Agency and the Child Support Agency. People saw Government as having a role in bringing together and providing backing for some of the more innovative ideas from financial institutions.

People felt that there had to be much more focus on support for second families, especially the needs of children. On one of my school visits, I went to a school in quite an affluent part of my constituency. The head teacher spoke at some length about the special needs of children there, which surprised me. He went on to say that most of the special needs were directly caused by pressures on children due to family breakdown. The child who had the most severe needs was a girl of eight who had already lived in three different families.

Many people in my constituency talked about the need for a culture change—for a culture that was more supportive of families. For the faith communities, there were the important issues about marriage and family life. Those arguments are well known and have been well rehearsed, but, even from the more secular in our society, there was talk about changing values, so that our society was more supportive of families. People talked at great length about the impact of the media and the portrayal of violence; the emphasis on business; and the contradiction that they sometimes detected in Government policy—which seemed to support families, but also to punish them when things went wrong.

Many people spoke about the need for the educational system to teach young people about relationships. Many people—such as the teacher whose letter I quoted at the start of my speech—said that they thought that schools, communities and families were inextricably linked and needed to support one another.

I ask my hon. Friend the Minister, in replying to the debate, to deal with some of those specific points, and also to say when the Government will be implementing the initiatives described in the document "Supporting Families". There is a huge fund of good will supporting implementation of the initiatives and a Government lead in encouraging other institutions to provide a more family-friendly society. It also supports the Government's provision of a legislative and financial framework to help the many families in my own constituency and elsewhere.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Kate Hoey): I am very pleased that my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Ms Keeble) has been able today to raise the very important subject of family policy. I agree with her wholeheartedly that, although it is a Friday afternoon and there are very few hon. Members in the Chamber—although it is very nice to see my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Ms Moran) here—people feel very strongly and great concern about the issue.

Family life is the foundation on which our communities, our society and our country is built. Families are central to the Government's vision of a secure, just and inclusive society. The House owes a debt to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North for the work that she has done in her own constituency in organising not only the survey but the conference, which has produced such interesting results. The Home Office official who attended the conference found it very interesting and was particularly impressed by the breadth of support shown for it by my hon. Friend's constituents, who were from all walks of life.

The consultation document, "Supporting Families"—which has been mentioned already—was the first ever consultation paper on family policy. The public reaction to it—over 900 responses—has been overwhelming, and, in June, we shall publish a summary document. All the responses that we received will feed into the on-going work on family policy of the ministerial group on the family.

One of most important aims of the consultation was to raise awareness of family and parenting issues—and I think that it has already achieved that aim. My hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North has led the dialogue on the issues in her own constituency, and a similar dialogue is being held across the United Kingdom—although I should say that the process elsewhere in the country has not yet produced results as detailed or in the same depth as it has in her constituency.

As the consultation process has been under way, we have made progress across a wide range of policy areas that will make a difference to families. My hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North has already mentioned some examples.

A new National Family and Parenting Institute has been established with £600,000 of strategic funding from the Government. The institute aims to change the culture of parenting, so that seeking advice and information is seen as a sign not of failure, but of responsible parenting.

We have also established a new family support grant—with £7 million, over three years—to improve family support services in the voluntary sector. The grant will help to build infrastructure organisations working to support families, and fund innovative parenting and family support work so that we are able to learn lessons of good practice across the country. It will also support work with boys, young men and fathers—groups in which the ministerial group has identified a particular need for targeted support.

My hon. Friend found that 66.7 per cent. of 25 to 40-year-olds in her constituency would like a national helpline for parents to be established. The Government have given £300,000 to Parentline, to help it to expand into a national helpline for parents.

Parentline will also help the new National Family and Parenting Institute to identify the major problems facing families today through the use of anonymised call data on the issues about which parents call in.

The Government have committed £80 million in 1999-2000 to the sure start initiative for local work with families with young children in some of the most disadvantaged areas. The first 21 trailblazer areas for the sure start programme were announced on 9 April. The projects will start this summer.

In Northampton, 73.6 per cent. of people responding to the survey wanted firms to be more family friendly—an important issue. Since we published "Supporting Families", we have made progress in helping families balance work and home. The Employment Relations Bill will bring in a right to parental leave and time off for urgent domestic reasons and will simplify maternity rights. The Department for Education and Employment is taking forward plans for a wide-ranging campaign to promote family-friendly employment practices. As the Northampton report says, the Government should lead by example as a family-friendly employer. We are working on that in all Government Departments.

One of the key themes in "Supporting Families" was the need to strengthen marriages and support adults in their relationships for the sake of their children. I was interested to learn that 75.7 per cent. of people responding to the survey in Northampton want the Government to intervene to help families when relationships break down.

The proposals in the consultation document were intended to increase the support and advice available throughout people's married lives, and in particular at times of stress such as when first children are born.

The survey in Northampton also revealed that 75 per cent. of respondents wanted Government funding for counselling services for couples in difficulty. As my hon. Friend will know, the Lord Chancellor has initiated a review of Government funding for marriage support services. The review will help us develop a more strategic approach to funding for marriage support.

All the responses to "Supporting Families" will help us as we develop family policy. The ministerial group on the family has already identified some key issues to be addressed over the coming year. In particular, it will be taking forward work on boys, young men and fathers. As we approach the new millennium, the lives of young men are undoubtedly more complex than they were in previous generations: a whole raft of social and economic factors have combined to create a need to find ways of preparing young men better for the realities they will face.

Our primary aim is to recognise the potential of young men to make a positive contribution to society. However, anything we do to help boys must not have an adverse effect on the advances that have been made for young women over recent decades. So, while the ministerial group on the family looks at the needs of young men, the women's unit will be taking forward parallel work looking at the particular needs of young women.

The role of fathers is crucial in this respect. Research has shown that boys who have no contact with their fathers are more likely to be violent, to get hurt, to get into trouble and to do less well at school.

Ms Keeble: One point that was hotly debated during a discussion about nursery schools was that boys can go through their early-years and primary education without a male educational role model. If they do not have a father at home either, they are very much adrift. Is that thought behind the work of the ministerial team?

Kate Hoey: I certainly hope so. I shall write to my hon. Friend and tell her exactly what is happening. Even when children are in contact with their father, voluntary organisations have told us that it is more difficult to encourage fathers to participate in parenting support. We want to encourage schemes for fathers and promote recognition of the fact that they have an important part to play.

The ministerial group will be taking forward family policy in providing help for families facing serious problems. In "Supporting Families", we looked at the particular problems of teenage pregnancy, youth offending and domestic violence. We recognise that many other serious problems face families, including mental health problems, disability, alcohol and drug abuse. We shall be looking at those problems to try to ensure joined-up thinking and joined-up services so that families get the help that they need when they need it.

[Kate Hoey]

We are grateful to my hon. Friend for her work in raising the profile of family issues in her constituency and for sending us the results of her research. She has provided a useful opportunity to give more publicity to "Supporting Families". What we have learned from Northampton will help us in our attempt to make a difference to the lives of families in the United Kingdom. I congratulate her on the work that she has done in her constituency and on giving us a coherent resume of what her constituents have said. It will be useful as we develop our family policies.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at one minute past Three o'clock.

CORRIGENDA

Official Report, 18 May 1999: In column 971, Mr. Norman Baker's speech, the fifth sentence in the sixth full paragraph should read:

According to figures from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and from the Meat and Livestock Commission, a comparison of farmgate prices in October 1997 and 1998 shows the price of feed wheat down 13 per cent., lamb down 32 per cent., beef down 18 per cent., pigmeat—suffering particularly badly—down 41 per cent., milk down 12 per cent., eggs down 13 per cent. and broilers down 7 per cent.

In column 974, the first sentence in the fourth full paragraph should read:

There is great worry among local farmers about what genetically modified crops mean for them.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what data she has collated on the take-up of children's vaccination in Southern Sudan. [83088]

Clare Short: United Nations Children's Fund UNICEF confirm that during two rounds of National Immunisation Days (NIDs) in Sudan in February and March this year, over one million children in Southern Sudan were vaccinated against polio. The next Sudan NIDs are planned to take place in February and March 2000.

Poverty Elimination Programmes

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's plans to link debt relief with poverty elimination programmes. [83297]

Clare Short: We are working to influence the World Bank and the IMF during the comprehensive review of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative to strengthen the linkage between debt relief and poverty eradication. In particular we are stressing the need for HIPC to deliver a greater reduction in the level of service payments in the early years to enable governments to invest sufficient resources in anti-poverty programmes such as health and education and so achieve the International Development Goals.

Debt Relief

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what discussions were held at the recent IMF/World Bank meeting in Washington on debt relief; and if she will make a statement; [83298]

(2) if she will make a statement on the HIPC Initiative following the IMF/World Bank spring meetings. [83304]

Clare Short: The Chancellor of the Exchequer and I participated in discussing the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative at the Interim Committee meeting of the IMF and at the Development Committee of the World Bank in Washington at the end of April. At both meetings, Ministers gave strong support to providing more debt relief to countries which are committed to eradicating poverty. In discussions on the fundamental review of the HIPC initiative, the Chancellor and I emphasised the need for change, in order that the initiative provides countries with a permanent exit from their debt problems, as it was intended to do. We also stressed the importance of debt relief being provided in such a way that it releases resources for governments to invest in key sectors to enable them to achieve the International Development Goals. Phase 2 of the HIPC review will consider how to strengthen this link between debt relief and poverty elimination.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what provision will be included in the Government's proposed debt relief framework for debt (a) service and (b) stock reduction. [83300]

Clare Short: The Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative focuses on reducing the stock of debt, with countries receiving one large cut in their debt which takes effect after many years. We are pressing the international community to agree not only to provide more debt relief to countries who are implementing demonstrably pro-poor policies, but to provide it in a way that enables governments to increase spending on anti-poverty programmes. This points to revising the Initiative so that it takes more account of what governments can afford to pay from their budgets, and delivers greater reductions in debt service paid, especially in the early years.

Reconstruction (Balkans)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the long-term reconstruction needs of (a) Albania, (b) Montenegro and (c) Macedonia. [83299]

Clare Short: We are working with the European Commission, EU Member States and International Financial Institutions to determine the longer term needs of Albania, Macedonia and Montenegro. As the Donors Conference on Macedonia on 5 May indicated, the international community is prepared to provide considerable support based on real needs. Bilaterally we plan to focus on know how and technical support to enable the Governments of the region to increase their capacity to respond to the crisis and absorb international assistance.

IMF

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the IMF's suitability as the lead organisation in helping poor countries meet the 2015 international development targets. [83301]

Clare Short: Multilateral organisations including the IMF have a key role to play in helping countries to meet the international development targets. Following last year's review of the IMF's Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility, it was agreed that the IMF should take more account of the social impact of their programmes, the quality of government expenditure, and should protect budgets in high priority areas such as health and education. We are encouraging the IMF to work more closely with the World Bank to ensure that, in designing structural adjustment programmes, they take account of the impact on the poor. Following proposals put forward by the UK, the World Bank is developing principles of good practice in social policy, in consultation with the IMF. We envisage that these principles will be drawn upon by the World Bank and the IMF in the design of programmes. We continually emphasise the need for the IMF to build support for reforms which lead to economic growth which benefit the poor programmes, through discussion and consultation with civil society.

Ethiopia and Eritrea

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the current humanitarian situation in Ethiopia and Eritrea. [83302]

Clare Short: The UN estimate that there are 3,250,000 people in need of humanitarian relief in Ethiopia. 397,000 of whom have been displaced due to the border conflict. In Eritrea 540,000 people need support with 290,000 displaced by the conflict. Main relief requirements are food, shelter, clothing, household items, health care, water and sanitation. Since January 1998 Britain has provided £5.2 million (including our contribution to EU actions) for emergency food and other support to Ethiopia and Eritrea.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement about the current humanitarian situation in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [83303]

Clare Short: We are continuing to press all parties to the conflict to agree a cease-fire and to reach a negotiated settlement. The signing in April of the Sirte agreement between the DRC, Uganda, Libya, Chad and Eritrea was a welcome step towards a cessation of hostilities, as was the communique issued on 5 May by the leaders of Tanzania, Rwanda and Uganda re-affirming their commitment to a peaceful settlement of the conflict.

Fighting in the country is resulting in continued flows of refugees into neighbouring countries. The conflict and movement of those displaced continues to prevent humanitarian agencies from accessing many of those in need.

The UK is ready to respond to appeals from UN agencies and NGOs. We have so far this year provided over £450,000 bilaterally through humanitarian agencies to support refugee and displaced populations, and other vulnerable groups.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many applications for information she received under the Open Government: Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83117]

Clare Short: In the Parliamentary session October 1997 to July 1998 I received and granted four applications for information under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer on 26 March 1999, Official Report, column 417, how many times Ministers in his Department met their counterparts in the US Government between 1 January 1998 and 1 June 1998; and if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved on each occasion and the name of the US counterpart at each meeting. [82227]

Mr. Prescott: The information for DETR is as follows:

Date	Location	DETR Minister	US Counterpart
13 February 1998	London	John Prescott	Stu Eizenstat (Under Secretary of State for Economic, Business and Agricultural Affairs)
16 February 1998	London	Gavin Strang	Mortimer Downey (Deputy Secretary, US Department of Transportation)
4 April 1998	Leeds Castle	John Prescott Michael Meacher	Carol Browner (Administrator at the US Environmental Protection Agency)
28 April 1998	Washington	John Prescott	Rodney Slater (Secretary of Transportation)

Norwich Hospital

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to ensure (a) public transport access and (b) access off the southern bypass to the new hospital in Norwich from the city centre. [82688]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Public transport access to the new Norfolk and Norwich Hospital at Colney is a matter for Norfolk County Council as the local transport authority, the Hospital trust, who have entered into an agreement with the County Council to provide a high quality bus service for the new site, and the commercial operators.

My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has asked the Highways Agency to look again at access to the hospital. The Highways Agency is considering the matter. A decision will be taken as quickly as possible.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many staff transferred to each regional development area from (a) English Partnerships, (b) the Rural Development Commission, (c) Government offices, (d) regional development organisations and (e) other bodies. [82922]

Mr. Meale: The table shows the number of staff transferring to each regional development agency on 1 April 1999. The figures exclude temporary staff and vacant posts which also transferred. Figures for RDAs exclude overseas staff.

Number of staff transferring to RDAs on 1 April 1999 by source organisation

Region development agency	English partnerships	Rural development commission	Government offices	Regional development organisations	Other
Advantage West Midlands	26	7	30	57	0
East of England	9	15	13	0	0
East Midlands	35	11	13	29	0
North East	85	9	27	91	0
North West	83	8	20	44	0
South East of England	16	9	15	0	0
South West of England	44	23	13	44	5
Yorkshire Forward	60	11	33	63	0

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what staff with environmental expertise have been recruited by each regional development agency. [82923]

Mr. Meale: Staff transferring from English Partnerships, the Rural Development Commission and Government Offices to take forward transferring functions, will have, or will have access to, any necessary environmental expertise to carry out the work. RDAs have been recruiting for a wide range of posts, including strategy development and corporate functions. Where environmental expertise is relevant to the post this will have been a consideration in the advertisement and selection process. RDAs will also be establishing links with a range of organisations, some of which will be able to provide advice on environmental issues. However, separate records are not kept on the environmental expertise of individual staff in the RDAs.

Refrigerants (Emissions)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what assessment he made of whether the author of the report, "UK Emission of HFCs, PFCs and SF6 and Potential Emission Reduction Options", had been involved in lobbying on behalf of (a) the refrigeration industry and (b) the manufacturers of refrigerants referred to in the report; and if he will make a statement; [82928]

(2) what action he plans to take as a consequence of the report commissioned by his Department, "UK Emissions of HFCs, PFCs and SF6 and Potential Emission Reduction Options"; [82927]

(3) what representations he has received concerning the independence of his advisers on climate change issues, with particular reference to the global warming impact of different refrigerants. [82926]

Mr. Meale: We have received representations concerning the consultants who have prepared for my Department a report which updated annual UK emissions data for HFCs, PFCs and SF6, provided emission projections to 2020 and assessed the costs and benefits of options to reduce future emissions. One of the representations included a detailed list of comments on the report, and a detailed reply, responding in full to each of the points raised, has been made.

The consultants were chosen on their technical merits and we see no reason to question the objectivity of the report. The preparation of the report included wide consultation with industry and was overseen by an interdepartmental steering committee.

The Government intend to develop a balanced and equitable strategy across all sectors, to meet the UK's climate change targets. The climate change consultation paper, which we published last October, set out a range of policy options that could be used to meet these targets. We are now developing a draft UK climate change programme for publication later this year. This will be informed by the responses to the consultation paper and other relevant information, including the above report and any representations concerning it.

Metered Dose Inhalers

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in phasing out the chlorofluorocarbon exemption on metered dose inhalers. [83172]

Mr. Meale: The Montreal Protocol allows chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) to continue to be produced for use in the manufacture of metered dose inhalers (MDIs). This essential use exemption will continue to be provided only until an adequate range of non CFC alternatives is on the market, which in the European Union is likely to occur within the next two to five years.

The Montreal Protocol also required Parties to prepare a national or regional strategy by 31 January 1999, which would ensure a smooth and efficient transition from CFC MDIs to non CFC MDIs whilst protecting the health and safety of patients.

As the European Community is a Party to the Protocol, the European Commission prepared an EU wide transition strategy in consultation with member states, which was published by the Commission at the end of October 1998. The EU strategy sets out the criteria which will be used to determine when the essential use criteria for MDIs will be withdrawn in the EU. A number of non CFC MDIs are now available in the UK, and we anticipate that it should be possible to complete the transition for most types of MDI in the next three years.

To complement the EU strategy, my Department is currently consulting stakeholders and interested parties on a draft UK strategy which will manage the transition process within the UK. The consultation ends on 31 May 1999 and we aim to publish the final strategy later in the year.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the annual volume of chlorofluorocarbons released into the atmosphere through the use of metered dose inhalers in the UK in 1997 and 1998. [83173]

Mr. Meale: Based on data supplied by the European Commission, my Department estimates that the volume of chlorofluorocarbons used by manufacturers of metered dose inhalers in the United Kingdom was 2,208 tonnes in 1997 and 2,109 tonnes in 1998. About 40 per cent. of these metered dose inhalers will be used in the United Kingdom, the remainder being exported to other European Union countries and elsewhere. It is assumed that all the chlorofluorocarbons used in the manufacture of metered dose inhalers will eventually be emitted to atmosphere.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has had with London borough councils on the number of empty housing units in their authorities. [83333]

Mr. Raynsford: As part of the annual Housing Investment Programme determination, officials from the Government Office for London regularly discuss with all London boroughs many aspects of their housing strategies and their performance as housing authorities. These discussions include the boroughs' enabling role in bringing empty properties back into use and their private sector renewal strategies to tackle empty properties in the private sector.

The Government fully support the work of the Empty Homes Agency and the London Empty Property Forum, which are both playing an important role in bringing empty homes back into use.

Road Freight

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of road freight in the United Kingdom originated outside the United Kingdom, in the latest year for which figures are available. [82882]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 5 May 1999]: In 1997, an estimated 2.5 per cent. of all tonne-kilometres performed in Great Britain, for both domestic and international haulage, were performed by vehicles originating outside the United Kingdom. Virtually all of this foreign activity was accounted for by the British part of international journeys by foreign hauliers. Domestic journeys by foreign hauliers accounted for under 0.04 per cent. of the total Great Britain tonne-kilometres in 1997, which is the last year for which we have full figures. However, there is some anecdotal evidence that the foreign haulier activity within the UK has been increasing over the recent years. This is one of the issues we will be addressing through the Road Haulage Forum.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the main environmental safeguards agreed under section 106 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 as preconditions for granting planning permission for the second runway at Manchester airport. [83353]

Mr. Raynsford: Manchester airport entered into a number of legal agreements including such matters as landscape and nature conservation, noise controls, night flying, highways improvements, public transport and the relocation of listed buildings.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when research into accommodation and support services available to households experiencing domestic violence is expected to be (a) completed and (b) published. [83564]

Mr. Raynsford: The research was commissioned by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, in association with the Women's Unit and the Department of Health, in June 1998, and is progressing well. The research involves a number of data collection exercises, including surveys of local authorities and women's refuge groups, case studies in a small number of local authorities, and interviews with households who have made use of the accommodation and support services. Fieldwork will be completed by the end of the year.

The final report and good practice guidance for local authorities on the options for addressing the accommodation and support needs of households experiencing domestic violence is expected to be published in summer 2000.

Passenger Partnership Fund

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the guidelines for the Passenger Partnership Fund. [83699]

Ms Glenda Jackson: OPRAF will be publishing shortly guidance for those who wish to bid for some of the Rail Passenger Partnership Fund.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications for information he received under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83105]

Mr. Prescott: For monitoring purposes, this information is collected on a calendar year basis. Information for 1997 was published last year in the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report. In 1998 my Department received 5,304 applications for information under the Code and granted 5,302 of them.

Urban Centres

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to improve facilities in urban centres for (a) the less mobile and (b) those on low incomes. [83599]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department has issued guidance to local authorities on a range of measures to improve town centres for people with mobility difficulties. On the transport side, in January this year we published new guidelines on the use of tactile paving surfaces to provide warning and guidance to blind and partially-sighted pedestrians. We also intend to publish our strategy to encourage walking soon. This will set out the need for town centre improvements to take into account the needs of all groups, including disabled people and the 30 per cent. of households without access to a car.

More generally the planning policy guidance for town centres and retail developments (PPG6) we have issued to local authorities has made particular reference to improving access to and within town centres, improving the pedestrian environment and, in particular, addressing the needs of people with mobility difficulties. We would expect authorities to survey the access and mobility needs of disabled people and demonstrate a commitment to meeting their needs in drawing up their strategies for town centres, their development plans and in making decisions on new developments.

We also expect local authorities to demonstrate a similar commitment in their Local Transport Plans (LTPs). The guidance already issued to local authorities on preparing their LTPs has made particular reference to the needs of people with mobility difficulties. We expect LTPs to provide evidence to support their record in this area, and provide detail of their future plans.

Turning to buildings, Part M of the Building Regulations requires that reasonable provision should be made for access and facilities for disabled people in all new buildings. These requirements currently apply to buildings other than dwellings, but from 25 October this year they will be extended to all new dwellings.

In terms of low incomes, we have commissioned research into the links between public transport and social exclusion. The research will seek to establish the level of exclusion from public transport, identify the factors which discourage different groups from using it, examine the initiatives to encourage new passengers, and propose a range of initiatives to encourage ridership among excluded groups. The results of the research will be available in late 1999.

Rural Brown-field Sites

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the Government's policy is on returning rural brown-field sites developed in the Second World War and no longer required for the original purpose to greenfield status. [83778]

Mr. Raynsford: The future use of a previously developed site should be consistent with the local planning authority's development plan and with the Government's planning policy guidance.

Planning Guidance

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what account he takes of public support for the construction of a relief road in deciding whether to give statutory protection to an area considered by English Nature to be worthy of special conservation the designation of which will obstruct the building of that road; [83777]

(2) what account his Department takes of the effect on environmental pollution of selecting a site for protection as a Special Area of Conservation whose designation will obstruct the construction of a relief road. [83760]

Mr. Meale: None. All Special Areas of Conservation are selected on the basis of their scientific conservation interest. The decision to allow the building of a road must be based on a number of planning factors one of which is its possible effect on nature conservation sites. Article 6 of the Habitats Directive requires all plans or projects which may have a significant effect on sites designated as Special Areas of Conservation (SACs) to be assessed for their implications on the site's conservation objectives. If that assessment shows that the plan or project would adversely affect the integrity of the site, consent may only be given, in the absence of alternatives (ie a less damaging way of carrying out the scheme), in the overriding public interest.

London-Ipswich Corridor

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the remit for the multi-modal transport study for the London–Ipswich corridor; when it will be completed; if he will place any papers relating to traffic flows, investment options and opportunities for the injection of private finance received in the course of the study in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [83749]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Following consultation with the Regional Planning Body and others, we announced on March 23 that a study into the London to Ipswich corridor would be added to Tranche 2 of the Multi-Modal Studies programme. Tranche 2 studies will begin in 2000 and are expected to take on average 2 years to complete.

The terms of reference for the study will be drawn up by a Steering Group which will include the Regional Planning Conference (SERPLAN) the Government Office, the Local Highway Authorities and transport providers. The aim of the study will be to address strategic problems within the London to Ipswich corridor, including on the A12, and to identify solutions to those problems from all modes of transport and land use planning which meet our overarching environmental, safety, economic, accessibility and integration objectives for transport.

The study will be an open process conducted in partnership with SERPLAN and in consultation with a wide range of interests. Specific reports related to the studies, covering topics such as data collection, option testing and strategy formulation etc., will be available from the Government Offices who are managing the studies.

Fenchurch Street Station

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 396, concerning services to Fenchurch Street Station, if he will introduce legislation to improve the level and speed of compensation for customers in respect of infrastructure failures which are the responsibility of Railtrack. [83714]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Compensation to passengers for delays and cancellations, whatever their cause, is paid under the Passenger's Charter. These payments are made directly to passengers by the Train Operating Companies (TOCs) with which they travelled. All TOCs were required as part of their franchise agreements to publish a Passenger's Charter and the level of compensation offered and the events which triggered such payments were required to be as good or better than those offered by British Rail. The Franchising Director cannot unilaterally require improvements.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 396, concerning services to Fenchurch Street Station, what action the Government are taking to ensure that Railtrack invest sufficiently to reduce the incidence of infrastructure failure. [83716]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We made it clear at the National Rail Summit in February that the Government is prepared to work in partnership with the railway industry to deliver a better rail service and increased investment. But Railtrack must play its part in creating a high quality, high growth, high investment railway. We have appointed Sir Alastair Morton to lead the shadow Strategic Rail Authority, and Tom Winsor as Rail Regulator, to ensure that that investment is delivered.

Westminster Council

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the total cost to public funds of the Westminster auditor's inquiry into the Westminster Council's designated sales policy over the period 18 July 1989 to 30 April 1999. [83381]

Ms Armstrong: We are advised by the Audit Commission that the auditor's costs for the investigation, up to and including the publication of his report in 1996, was £3,017,905, which has been met by Westminster City Council. The Audit Commission has, since the commencement of High Court proceedings, met further costs of £3,705,000. This includes the legal costs of the auditor for the High Court and Appeal Court Hearings, and the costs of those appellants whose appeals were successful in the High Court. It does not include the High Court and Appeal Court costs of Dame Shirley Porter and David Weeks; the Appeal Court is reconvening in several weeks to consider the award of these costs.

Audit Commission

Mrs. Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will set out the authority under which the Audit Commission may make, vary, or refuse payments to a District Auditor it has appointed; and if he will make a statement. [83382]

Ms Armstrong: The Audit Commission appoints auditors in accordance with the provisions set out in the Audit Commission Act 1998. Section 3(8) gives the Audit Commission discretion to make appointments on such terms and for such periods as the Commission may determine. These terms include the basis on which payments are made to appointed auditors.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the Government's fuel poverty policy proposals. [83906]

Mr. Meale: The Government intend to publish their proposals for the way ahead on fuel poverty tomorrow. They follow an extensive inter-departmental review of all current policies and programmes, including discussions with over 60 organisations with an interest in this area. Fuel poverty is an important issue which affects all too many households and which we are determined to address. The proposals will be subject to a two month consultation period, during which we shall actively seek views from interested parties. Copies of the consultation paper will be available tomorrow morning in the Library of the House and the Vote Office.

WALES

Union Recognition

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what monitoring his Department undertakes of the implementation of Government policies on wages and union recognition in companies in South Wales. [81921]

Mr. Hain:

Wages

The Government asked the Low Pay Commission to monitor and evaluate the introduction and impact of the national minimum wage with particular reference to the effects on pay, employment and competitiveness. The Commission has been asked to report its findings by December. However, all employers in Wales will need to act within the law respecting the provisions of minimum wage legislation.

Union Recognition

The Employment Relations Bill, which contains a statutory procedure for trade union recognition, is currently being considered in another place. The Government is committed to reviewing the operation of such a procedure once it is in place.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each application for a licence to grow genetically modified crops in Wales in 1999, and the proposed locations. [82220]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: No applications to release genetically modified organisms at sites in Wales have been received in 1999.

An application was received, in December 1998, for the approval of research trials of Spring GM oilseed rape at 15 locations across Great Britain. In line with normal procedures this was assessed by the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment who appraise the application and advise on whether consent should be granted. One of the proposed release sites was in Monmouthshire and a consent was issued earlier this year. Subsequently, the farmer in Monmouthshire has withdrawn his permission to trial the GM crop.

My right hon. Friend's responsibilities in this area are shortly to transfer to the National Assembly for Wales.

New Deal

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of lone parents who have agreed to join the New Deal programme in Wales. [83765]

Mr. Hain: The latest information from the Employment Service indicates that, by the end of March 1999, over 4,400 lone parents had agreed to participate in the New Deal for Lone Parents in Wales.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his latest estimate is of the number of lone parents who have found jobs under the New Deal arrangements in Wales. [83764]

Mr. Hain: The latest information from the Employment Service indicates that, by the end of March 1999, almost 1,200 lone parents had secured jobs through the New Deal for Lone Parents in Wales.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the numbers of 18 to 24-year-olds who have obtained jobs through the New Deal arrangements in Wales. [83766]

Mr. Hain: The latest information from the Department for Education and Employment indicates that, by the end of February 1999, over 4,300 young people had secured sustained jobs through the New Deal for 18–24s in Wales.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications for information he received under the Open Government: Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83121]

Mr. Michael: For monitoring purposes this information is collected on a calendar year basis. Information for 1997 was published last year in the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report. In 1998 my Department received 18 applications for information under the Code and granted 14 of them.

DEFENCE

Armed Forces (Overstretch)

11. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to address overstretch in the Armed Forces. [82588]

Mr. Doug Henderson: We remain firmly committed to addressing overstretch in the Armed Forces. Recruiting is an important priority; it remains buoyant and all three Services have improved their recruitment achievements during the last year. We are also making strenuous efforts to improve retention, for example through the Strategic Defence Review 'Policy for People' initiatives.

Kosovo

12. Ms Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current security situation in Kosovo. [82589]

Mr. George Robertson: Serbian forces continue their brutality against Kosovar Albanians. Over one million have been forced from their homes. The UNHCR report that approximately 800,000 are now resident in temporary camps outside Kosovo or in countries elsewhere. A further 350,000 to 800,000 are thought to be internally displaced seeking refuge and safety in Kosovo.

15. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated tonnage of ordnance dropped on oil and chemical plants in Yugoslavia since 24 March; and what estimate he has made of resulting emissions of (a) ammonia, (b) benzene, (c) chlorine, (d) mercury, (e) phosgene and (f) sulphur dioxide. [82592]

Mr. George Robertson: I am withholding information on the tonnage of ordnance dropped in Yugoslavia since 24 March under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. We take the need to avoid dangerous emissions from nuclear and chemical plants fully into account in making decisions about targets. The UK will comply with its obligations under the First Geneva Protocol.

22. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the effectiveness of the air campaign against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to date. [82600]

Mr. George Robertson: NATO's military action has had significant impact on Yugoslav military and special police operations and continues to do so. The air campaign is moving systematically and progressively to disrupt the violence and degrade President Milosevic's forces, his sustaining infrastructure, command and control and other targets associated with his system of repression.

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role British troops are playing in assisting the humanitarian relief effort for Kosovar Albanian refugees. [82610]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The UK will continue to play a leading role in responding to the humanitarian crisis in the region.

British troops in Macedonia have been assisting refugees since the beginning of April. They are continuing to prepare and distribute food and to supply blankets, nappies and other essential items. UK troops have also been involved in improving infrastructure at the refugee camps. This has included erecting tents and shelters, digging latrines, laying water pipes, removing rubbish, erecting fences and constructing tracks and bridges.

Today we plan to make available some 1,000 UK troops, currently in Macedonia, to assist in the humanitarian aid effort in Albania, where they will work with troops from other NATO nations to construct camps for up to 65,000 refugees. These camps will be handed over to Non Governmental Organisations to administer as soon as they have been established.

23. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role British troops are currently playing in providing humanitarian support in south-east Europe. [82601]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In south-east Europe, British troops are providing humanitarian support in the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and in Albania. For the details of their role, I refer The hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Ms Taylor) today, Official Report, column 140.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of (a) food, (b) medical equipment and (c) temporary accommodation have been provided by (i) United Kingdom military forces and (ii) NATO forces to refugees in (1) Macedonia, (2) Montenegro and (3) Albania since the outset of the NATO action in Yugoslavia; and what has been the cost to date of such assistance. [81944]

Mr. George Robertson: UK forces have not yet provided any assistance to refugees in Montenegro. In Albania and Macedonia UK forces have played a key role in alleviating the refugee crisis. In Albania this has not as yet involved provision of food, medical supplies or temporary accommodation. In Macedonia, full details of the quantities are not available, but estimated costs to date under the relevant headings are as follows:

(a) food	2,500,000
(b) medical supplies	37,000
(c) temporary accommodation	95,000

The Department for International Development will reimburse MOD for the above costs, and has assumed responsibility for future assistance. We do not have records of the value of assistance supplied by other NATO nations.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many additional (a) major units and (b) trained soldiers the Army would require to sustain 24-month tour intervals if operational deployments to Kosovo/ Macedonia/Albania and Bosnia are sustained at current levels indefinitely. [83139]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 4 May 1999]: This would depend on the circumstances of particular operations, the overall level of operational commitment and progress towards achieving full manning.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received on the identity of the perpetrators of war crimes in Kosovo. [83402]

Mr. George Robertson: It is for the Chief Prosecutor of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia in The Hague to seek indictments against individuals she believes have been responsible for serious violations of international humanitarian law in Kosovo. The Government will hand over as much information as they can that will be relevant to the Tribunal's investigations.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received of the extent of collateral damage caused by NATO air raids in (a) the Belgrade suburb of Banjica and (b) Aleksinac. [83490]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 7 May 1999]: We do not have any information on collateral damage to the Belgrade suburb of Banjica.

As NATO has said, a military facility was struck at Aleksinac, home of the 203rd mixed artillery brigade. Despite meticulous pre-attack planning, it is possible that one weapon fell short of the target. (I am placing in the Library of the House a full transcript of what was said on the subject by a NATO spokesman at a press conference on 6 April 1999).

Unlike President Milosevic, we take great care to reduce the risk of casualties and collateral damage. If there has been any unintended damage to civilian property or loss of life we regret this, but NATO's military actions are the result of Milosevic's brutal policy of ethnic cleansing.

Royal Army Medical Corps

13. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on funding for the Royal Army Medical Corps. [82590]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Strategic Defence Review increased the size of the Royal Army Medical Corps by 212 Regular and 675 Territorial Army personnel, an increase of 14.5 per cent. overall. This is part of a major enhancement of the Defence Medical Services for which we are providing an extra £140 million over the years 1998–99 to 2001–02, with further expenditure planned in subsequent years.

Former Service Men (Sexual Orientation)

14. Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the position of former service men discharged on the basis of their sexual orientation. [82591]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence does not monitor Service personnel once they have been discharged from the Armed Forces, whether on the grounds of their sexual orientation, or any other grounds.

NATO Summit

16. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decisions were made at the NATO summit in Washington regarding the non-proliferation of (i) nuclear weapons and (ii) weapons of mass destruction; and if he will make a statement. [82593]

Mr. George Robertson: At the NATO Summit meeting in Washington on 23–25 April, which I attended, the Alliance decided to launch a Weapons of Mass Destruction Initiative. It is designed to integrate and further improve Alliance political and military efforts to counter their proliferation. This decision was recorded in the summit communiqué.

Staff College (Camberley)

17. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will announce his plans for safeguarding the war memorial and buildings of staff college, Camberley; and if he will make a statement. [82595]

Mr. Spellar: In the light of the decision to base the Joint Doctrine and Concepts Centre at Shrivenham, a further review of the future of the Camberley site will now take place and a report will go to Ministers in the autumn. This solution will take full account of the war memorial in the Main Building.

Guided Missiles (Saudi Arabia)

18. Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the planned gift of guided missiles to Saudi Arabia. [82596]

Mr. George Robertson: The details of the gift of Paveway bombs are contained in the Departmental Minute which was laid before Parliament on 4 February 1999.

Territorial Army

19. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the Territorial Army is currently deployed on operations. [82597]

Mr. Doug Henderson: 334 Members of the Territorial Army (TA) are currently deployed on operations, and these represent some 0.67 per cent. of the overall TA. The majority of these are in Bosnia.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of morale in the Territorial Army. [82605]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 22 February 1999, Official Report, columns 27–28. The situation remains unchanged.

Parachute Regiment

20. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the proposed reorganisation of the Parachute Regiment following operations in Kosovo. [82598]

Mr. Doug Henderson: No. The current situation in Kosovo does not affect the Strategic Defence Review conclusions made in respect of the Parachute Regiment.

Troop Deployment (Bosnia)

25. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British troops are currently deployed in Bosnia. [82603]

Mr. George Robertson: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer given today, Official Report, column 3, to my hon. Friends the Members for Warrington, North (Helen Jones) and Plymouth, Sutton (Mrs. Gilroy).

Army Ranges (Shoeburyness)

26. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in determining the future use of the old and the new ranges in Shoeburyness. [82604]

Mr. Spellar: Progress is being made with respect to the disposal of defence establishments at Shoeburyness, Horseshoe Barracks and the Old Ranges (including Gunners Park). Having been declared surplus to my Department's requirements, they are now being prepared for disposal. A draft Planning Brief has been the subject of a public consultation exercise and was approved by the full Borough Council on 25 February. Marketing of the site will begin shortly. With regard to the New Ranges, DERA is seeking to appoint a new contractor to support the operation of the range. It is intended that this contractor will also work with the Agency to improve exploitation of the range through the introduction of alternative activities to supplement income. Several possible diversification opportunities have been identified. However, as negotiations are currently in hand with preferred bidders, it would be premature to provide details until the remaining contractual issues have been resolved.

RAF Strike Command

27. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of RAF Strike Command is currently committed to operations. [82606]

Mr. Doug Henderson: As at 7 May 1999, approximately 8 per cent. of Strike Command's trained strength is currently deployed on operations.

The figures represent personnel deployed away from their parent station and, as such, do not account for personnel supporting operations from their normal station, such as those at RAF Bruggen. Similarly, the figures do not include personnel working at Strike Command or Group Headquarters who are involved as part of their normal tasks in planning activity in support of operations. It would not be straightforward to give an accurate figure which included these personnel.

Strategic Defence Review

28. Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken to adapt the Army's tactical doctrine to the more flexible role defined for it by the Strategic Defence Review. [82607]

Mr. George Robertson: The Army's tactical doctrine is under continuous review and improvement, taking into account the lessons of current and recent operations. This process now includes planning for the employment of the new structures created by the Strategic Defence Review, such as the Air Assault Brigade with its Attack Helicopters. In addition, a Joint Doctrine and Concepts Centre is being established at Shrivenham. It will be a centre of excellence on joint doctrine for all three Services.

30. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to change the resource assumptions made in the strategic defence review. [82609]

Mr. George Robertson: None.

Eurofighter

29. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Eurofighter programme. [82608]

Mr. George Robertson: The Eurofighter programme is progressing satisfactorily. Production contracts for the first 148 Eurofighter aircraft, 55 of which are for the Royal Air Force, were signed in Munich on 18 September 1998. The project remains on schedule to deliver the RAF's first Eurofighter in June 2002.

The seven development aircraft have now flown a total of some 950 sorties, (some 770 flying hours), achieving speeds up to Mach 2.0.

Achievements this year include the signing of the initial aircraft supports contracts in January, and a high altitude demonstration of the aircraft powered by the new Eurojet 200 engine. Most recently, the rear seat controls in one of the 2 twin-seater development aircraft have been demonstrated.

Trident

32. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current deployment of the Trident submarine fleet. [82611]

Mr. George Robertson: There are currently three Trident submarines in the operational cycle in order to maintain one submarine on deterrent patrol at all times. The UK's minimum deterrent force is maintained at several days' notice to fire as was announced in the Strategic Defence Review.

Falklands Garrison

33. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of garrisoning the Falklands. [82612]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The cost to the Ministry of Defence of the Falklands garrison in the financial year 1998–99 is expected to be approximately £70 million.

This figure relates to the costs incurred by the Commander British Forces Falkland Islands only. It does not include the costs of the RAF airbridge to the Falkland Islands, nor the cost of naval deployments to the South Atlantic. These costs fall to other budgets and are not separately identified.

Defence Agencies Merger

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the merger of the Military Survey and Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre (JARIC) Defence Agencies. [83904]

Mr. Spellar: The case for merging the Military Survey and JARIC Defence Agencies into a single, converged Agency was considered under the Strategic Defence Review, and built on earlier work.

The final study, which was completed in September 1998, concluded that there were a number of drivers, mainly in the medium to long-term, recommending the merger of Military Survey and JARIC. These would secure improved operational effectiveness and better service to Defence. Early implementation of merger was recommended.

Following full consultation, I have asked the Director General of Intelligence and Geographic Resources to proceed with the implementation of a single Agency to be launched in April 2000. The post of Chief Executive Designate of the new Agency, Colonel Peter Walker OBE, has been filled by internal competition. On promotion to Brigadier he will lead an Implementation Team which will be established shortly before he assumes his Chief Executive role in April 2000.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the illustrative resource accounting and budgeting accounts for his Department for 1998–99. [82517]

Mr. George Robertson: The first Departmental Resource Account for publication is that for 1999–2000, which will appear in autumn 2000, in line with the timetable set out in the White Paper "Better Accounting for the Taxpayer's Money" (Cmd. 2929, July 1995). The 1998–99 Departmental Resource Account is not due to be published.

RAF Deployment

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the required increase in (a) RAF squadrons and (b) RAF strength to achieve an average deployment on operations for RAF personnel of six months every 30 months based on the RAF's deployed position as at 23 March. [83231]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 4 May 1999]: The target figure for nights away from home on deployment or detachment is 140 nights in one year, or 280 aggregated over two years in peace-time. This needs to be seen in the context of the likely demands placed on the Royal Air Force over a period of time rather than on the basis of a snapshot on one particular day.

Ex-service Pensions

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ex-servicemen receive levels of pensions that were adversely affected by short-term pay restraint measures which were in force at their date of retirement. [82575]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 4 May 1999]: During periods of pay restraint, principally during the mid 1970s, the pay of members of the armed forces rose by less than the rate of increase of the retail prices index (RPI). As a consequence the pensions of those who retired during these periods can be lower than the pensions of those who retired either before or after that period. The numbers affected are not known. However, the numbers leaving the armed forces during the years 1976–78 ranged between 46,500 and 48,500, but not all of those who retired during those years would have been entitled to a pension.

Graphite Bombs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of a graphite bomb. [83465]

Mr. George Robertson: The UK armed forces do not hold such weapons and we have no details about their cost.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many applications for information he received under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83113]

Mr. Spellar: For monitoring purposes, this information is collected on a calendar year basis. Information for 1997 was published last year in the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report. In 1998 my Department received 271 applications for information under the Code, and granted 248 of them.

RAF Museum, Hendon and Cosford

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future development of the RAF museum at Hendon and Cosford. [82594]

Mr. Spellar: Development of the RAF Museum is a matter for its Trustees. A new Visitor Centre at the RAF Museum's Cosford site was completed last year. The Trustees' plans for a major development at Hendon, which are dependent upon Heritage Lottery Fund grants, are progressing well. My Department supports these plans. Indeed, we funded the initial work and have promised further funds towards the Museum's contribution to the development costs.

Defence Estimates

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to publish the statement on the Defence Estimates; and if he will make a statement. [83581]

Mr. George Robertson: I have made no decision on the publication date of the 1999 Defence White Paper. I am keeping the timing of publication under review in the light of developments in the Balkans. As I informed the House of Commons Defence Committee in February, the Defence White Paper will be a forward-looking policy document complementing the Annual Performance Report and replacing the Statement on the Defence Estimates.

Skill Shortages

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what skill shortages he has identified within Her Majesty's forces. [82602]

Mr. Doug Henderson: In the Naval Service there is a shortfall of Engineer Officers, particularly Direct Graduate Entry Engineers, and Engineer (Training Managers). For Ratings/Other Ranks the shortfall categories are: Operator Mechanics; trained Naval Nurses; Short Engagement Seamen; Artificer Apprentices; Commando Medical Assistants; and General Duties Marines. For the Army, there are skills shortages in the medical, dental, and veterinary services. Shortfalls also exist in the Royal Artillery, Royal Signals, Infantry, Army Air Corps, Royal Logistics Corps, Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers, Intelligence Corps and Corps of Army Musicians. The RAF has a shortfall in the number of junior officer fast jet pilots, and officers in engineering and medical branches. A shortage in RAF Fighter Controllers is also giving cause for concern.

Each Service has introduced a range of initiatives to reduce these shortfalls.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Renewable Energy

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has for encouraging the power generating companies to increase their use of renewable energy sources. [82244]

Mr. Battle: Renewable sources of energy make an important contribution to secure, sustainable and diverse energy supplies and are an essential element of a cost-effective climate change programme. The Government are working towards a target of renewable energy providing 10 per cent. of UK electricity supplies as soon as possible. They hope to achieve this by 2010. I have recently published "New and Renewable Energy: Prospects for the 21st Century", which seeks views on the balance of measures and the precise form of support for renewables in the next stage of their development. It identifies the key issues which the Government, industry and other players will need to address. It affirms the Government's commitment to their new drive to develop renewables; identifies the practical steps which might be needed to achieve this objective; and seeks to engage a wider public in the development and realisation of its strategy.

Redundancies

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many redundancies were reported to his Department (a) in 1997, (b) in 1998 and (c) to 31 March 1999, in (i) Southport and (ii) the North West of England. [82911]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The number of redundancies reported to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State were:

	Southport	North West Region
1997	314	33,316
1998	516	36,948
to 31 March 1999	359	18,697

Home Businesses

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of businesses in the United Kingdom run from home; and what initiatives his Department has taken to address the specific needs of those businesses. [83040]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 5 May 1999]: No official estimate has been made of the number of businesses run from home. The Labour Force Survey, Spring 1998, estimated that 600,000 self employed people work mainly from their own home, and a further 1.1 million use their home as a base while working in different places.

There are no schemes specifically addressed towards home-based businesses. Home based businesses and the self employed are eligible for business support in the same way as any other small business. Business Link partnerships provide support to all businesses regardless of size or their location. In addition, the DTI makes available a considerable amount of free information on a wide variety of topics.

I met with officials from the Home Business Alliance on 27 April to discuss their concerns for home-based workers.

Parental Leave

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those European countries which (a) pay and (b) do not pay people on parental leave, indicating the methods used for making such payments. [83558]

Mr. Byers: From the information that we hold, it appears that some form of state payment is provided in Italy, Sweden, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany and Luxembourg during parental leave, subject to each Member State's qualifying conditions.

There does not appear to be any universal provision for payment in Spain, Portugal, Greece, Ireland or the Netherlands.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Parliament (Facilities)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what (a) reciprocal and (b) other arrangements have been made for hon. Members to use facilities at the Scottish Parliament. [83240]

Mr. McLeish: MSPs themselves will wish to consider the nature of their relationship with Westminster MPs. It will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament itself to decide on what arrangements it would be appropriate to make for hon. Members to use facilities at the Scottish Parliament.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for information he received under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83112]

Mr. Dewar: This information is collected for monitoring purposes on a calendar year basis. Information for 1997 was published in the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report. In 1998 my Department (including non-departmental public bodies covered by the Code) received 263 applications for information made under the Code and granted 255 of them.

From 1 July, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Public Record Office

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many linear metres of storage space at the Public Record Office for Scotland are (a) occupied by records and (b) vacant. [83753]

Mr. McLeish: The National Archives of Scotland has 69,492.94 metres of available shelf space, of which 57,618.48 are currently occupied.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Environmental Appraisal

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what environmental appraisals of policy his Department has (a) completed, (b) started and (c) planned. [79632]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on 13 April 1999, Official Report, column 66.

EU-ACP Ministerial Meeting

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the agenda for the forthcoming EU-ACP Ministerial Meeting of 6 May. [83279]

Ms Quin: The last EU-ACP Ministerial Meeting took place in Dakar in February and the next will take place on 29–30 July in Brussels. A separate ACP-EU Council between these negotiating sessions was provisionally envisaged for May, but in the event no need for it arose. No agenda has yet been fixed for the next meeting.

China and Tibet

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) of 26 April 1999, Official Report, column 36, on China and Tibet, if he will list those areas on which a dialogue-based approach has made limited progress; and if he will make a statement on how he intends to press China to take further action. [83557]

Mr. Robin Cook: Since the UK/China human rights dialogue was established in September 1997, and the EU/China human rights dialogue resumed in October 1997, China has taken several positive steps which will bring about its closer co-operation with UN human rights mechanisms. These include signature of the international covenants on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and Civil and Political Rights, and agreement to report to the Un under those covenants in respect of Hong Kong. It has received visits by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, as well as allowing a visit to Tibet by EU Troika Ambassadors. It has also extended an invitation to visit to the UN Special Rapporteur on Torture. We have been able to discuss issues of serious concern including the death penalty, religion, Tibet and individual cases in the dialogues; China has also begun to collaborate with the UK and EU on human rights co-operation programmes. We shall press for further concrete steps through these continuing dialogues, as well as forthcoming bilateral and EU high level meetings with China.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions he has blocked a Commission proposal at the Council of Ministers on the ground of subsidiarity. [83474]

Ms Quin: Subsidiarity is one of numerous factors taken into account when legislation is discussed in the Council of Ministers. It is not possible to say how often it has been the principal factor in UK opposition to a Commission proposal.

Cambodia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what position Her Majesty's Government took on Cambodia at the recent United Nations Commission on Human Rights meeting in Geneva; and if he will make a statement. [83374]

Mr. Robin Cook: We see the UNCHR as an important opportunity to press the Cambodian Government to improve its human rights record. This year we co-sponsored a successful resolution on Cambodia which called for proper investigation into extra-judicial killings, an end to impunity, and for Khmer Rouge leaders to be brought to justice. We will continue to press for full respect for human rights in Cambodia, both through diplomatic pressure and practical assistance.

Sudan

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent information he has received from the United States Government concerning the missile attack last year on the pharmaceutical plant in Khartoum. [83468]

Mr. Robin Cook: It is established practice under Section 1(c) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose or discuss information received in confidence from foreign governments.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Sudan concerning the attack on Akoc in Troc County, Bhar-el-Ghazal, Southern Sudan on 26 February. [83084]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 6 May 1999]: We have had a number of reports of an attack on Akoc by murahileen. Reporting by NGOs on the ground talked of over 40 killed and nearly 900 abducted.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in re-establishing an embassy in Khartoum. [83085]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 6 May 1999]: As I made clear at the time of the withdrawal of staff, we hope the necessary conditions will be re-established for a return to normal relations with Sudan. We have been in regular contact with the Sudanese authorities and discussions continue.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the letter from Lady Bingham of Cornhill to the Minister of State, the right hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), what assistance he has given to the Sudanese Red Crescent (a) emergency vaccine campaign against meningitis and (b) malaria eradication programme. [83354]

Mr. Robin Cook: Support for Red Cross activities, as for all humanitarian responses in Sudan, is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development.

Entry Clearance Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the average length of time of an interview for an entry clearance visa in (a) Bombay, (b) New Delhi, (c) Calcutta, (d) Islamabad, (e) Dhaka and (f) Karachi in the last year for which figures are available. [83560]

Mr. Robin Cook: Applications are dealt with on the basis of a triage system which separates them into 4 tiers. The tiers are:

(A) Non-settlement

Tier 1: Straightforward applications received over the counter, by post, or from an agent, resulting in immediate issue or mandatory refusal. ECOs may ask one or two questions if necessary to clear up minor points.

Tier 2: Secondary examination of less straightforward applications that are likely to result in an issue.

Tier 3: For cases likely to result in refusal. A full interview is required.

(B) Settlement

Tier 4: This is the category under which all settlement cases are dealt with. Interviews can result in issue, refusal, referral (to the Home Office for a decision) or deferral (for additional information to be obtained).

The average length of interviews at the posts listed is as follows (figures, in minutes, are for 1998):

Post	Tier 1	Tier 2	Tier 3	Tier 4
Bombay	2.00	9.00	30.00	50.00
New Delhi	2.02	5.33	28.46	57.54
Calcutta	3.00	10.00	29.75	39.17
Islamabad	3.85	10.50	35.65	39.71
Dhaka	2.80	8.07	32.87	58.11
Karachi	1.59	4.28	26.50	43.00

Turkey

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in respect of Turkey's conflict with its Kurdish population; and if he will make a statement. [83561]

Ms Quin: We receive regular representations from Members of Parliament, Members of the House of Lords, members of the public and interested groups about the conflict in south-east Turkey.

We have made it clear to the Turkish authorities that we believe the conflict in the region cannot be resolved by military means alone. We believe that the social and economic problems of south-east Turkey and the aspirations of the Kurdish population there must be addressed if the region is to achieve a long-lasting peace.

We have long made clear our condemnation of terrorism in all its forms, including terrorist acts by the PKK (Kurdistan Workers' Party).

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current position in respect of Turkey's application to become a member of the European Union. [83488]

Ms Quin [holding answer 7 May 1999]: The Cardiff European Council in June 1998 endorsed the European Strategy for Turkey, which aims to prepare Turkey for membership by bringing it closer to the EU in all areas. The Turks and the Commission have met three times so far to discuss implementation of the Strategy. We welcome the Commission's proposals for funding the Strategy, worth 150 million euro over 3 years. These proposals are currently being considered by the European Parliament; we hope they can be agreed soon.

In November 1998, the Commission produced its first annual report on Turkey's progress towards European Union membership. The report noted that Turkey had most of the hallmarks of a market economy, but still needed to address shortcomings in the areas of human rights, treatment of minorities and the lack of civilian control over the army. Turkey must improve its record in these areas in order to meet the criteria for membership of the European Union laid down by the 1993 Copenhagen European Council.

Zimbabwe High Commission

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many children over the age of majority living in the United Kingdom as part of the household of employees or diplomats of the Zimbabwe High Commission are entitled to diplomatic immunity. [83551]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 7 May 1999]: There are five children over the age of majority living in the United Kingdom as part of the households of diplomats of the Zimbabwe High Commission. All five are entitled to diplomatic immunity.

Chagos Islands

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer on 26 April 1999, Official Report, column 35, what approach he will adopt in considering applications for full British citizenship from Ilois who do not hold full citizenship of another country. [83379]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 7 May 1999]: The British Government does not propose to extend the offer of British citizenship to British Dependent Territories citizens who owe their status to their association with the British Indian Ocean Territory.

Kosovo

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what reports he has received concerning the whereabouts of Dr. Ibrahim Rugova; what attempts have been made to contact him; and with what results; [83485]

(2) what contact Her Majesty's Government have had with the Democratic League of Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [83484]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 7 May 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary spoke by telephone to Dr. Rugova on 6 May in Rome, where he was staying as a guest of the Italian government. Prior to that, I met with Mr. Hafiz Gagica, a senior representative of the LDK on 23 April. Officials remain in close contact with the LDK.

Montenegro

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from Montenegro in respect of the military action in Yugoslavia. [83486]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 7 May 1999]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is in regular contact with the Montenegrin President, Mr. Djukanovic. President Djukanovic naturally regrets the need for military action against the FRY. We understand his position and have pledged Montenegro maximum support.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made on the effects of an oil embargo on Montenegro. [83582]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We recognise the political and economic impacts on Montenegro of the conflict in Kosovo. Both the EU and NATO have made every effort to minimise the adverse effects for Montenegro of punitive measures against the regime in Belgrade, including the EU oil embargo which entered into force on 30 April. The European Union has recently allocated 13 Meuro for budgetary assistance for Montenegro. We are pressing the Commission to ensure that these funds are disbursed as soon as possible, and are exploring other ways of assisting.

Croatia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the return of refugees to Krajina; and what representations have been made to Croatia in respect of their return. [83492]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 7 May 1999]: The Government believes that all those displaced from their homes during the conflicts following the break-up of the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia should be allowed to return to their homes.

We take every opportunity to impress on the states of the former Yugoslavia, including Croatia, the importance we place on refugee return. I most recently raised this issue with Mrs. Skare-Ozbalt, President Thajman's principal adviser on refugee policy, when she called on me in London on 26 April.

KLA

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government first made direct contact with the Kosova Liberation Army; and how many meetings there have been between Her Majesty's Government and that organisation since. [83494]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 7 May 1999]: An initial meeting between an official of the British Embassy in Belgrade and leaders of the Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) was held on 30 July 1998. As co-Chairman of the Rambouillet peace talks, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary held frequent meetings with the Kosovo Albanian delegation, which included representatives of the KLA. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and officials have subsequently had a number of contacts with senior leaders of the KLA.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for information he received under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83107]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: For monitoring purposes, this information is collected on a calendar year basis. Information for 1997 was published last year in the "Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report. In 1998, my Department received 46 applications for information under the Code—35 were met in full, 8 in part and 3 were refused.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many applications for information he received under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83115]

Janet Anderson: My Department monitors applications for information received under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information on a calendar year basis. In 1998–99 the Department and those of its sponsored bodies[1] then subject to the Code received 34 requests for information. 30 of these were granted.

[1] In 1998–99 the following DCMS sponsored executive NDPBs were subject to the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information:

Royal Parks Agency
Arts Council of England
British Film Institute
British Library Board
Crafts Council
English Sports Council
English Tourist Board
English Heritage
Museums and Galleries Commission
National Heritage Memorial Fund/Heritage Lottery Fund
Registrar of Public Lending Right
UK Sports Council.

An Order taken before the Privy Council in February 1999 brought all the executive and two of the advisory NDPBs sponsored by my Department within the scope of the Code.

Folk Music

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures his Department is taking to promote traditional folk and acoustic music. [83294]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government recognise the importance of folk and acoustic music to our wider arts policy. The strategic arms length relationship between DCMS and the Arts Council in funding issues means that it is for the Arts Council and Regional Arts Boards to take decisions on the funding of specific art forms, but DCMS is aware of the need to ensure that performers, producers and promoters of folk music continue to receive appropriate support. The Arts Council—having already provided significant Lottery support to folk music, and having also increased substantially the grant-in-aid budget to be committed to it—will shortly be launching a new Folk Music Policy which, following consultation, will provide a framework for future development, partnerships with other sectors, and future funding.

Hotels

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to publicise the launch of the new rating scheme for hotel accommodation; and when it will take place. [83036]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 4 May 1999]: The Government have asked the English Tourist Board, which will shortly become the English Tourism Council, to arrange the consumer launch of the new harmonised schemes for hotel and guest accommodation, working closely with the AA and the RAC. Preparatory inspections will shortly be complete and the launch is planned for September. We support these arrangements to ensure wide awareness of the benefits of the new schemes.

UK Sports Institute

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress he has made in the allocation of the facilities at the regional centres of excellence for the UK Sports Institute. [83168]

Mr. Banks: Since the launch of the UK Sports Institute's network in England on 1 March 1999, Sport England have briefed key individuals and institutions in consortiums on the way forward. They are also updating the 1997 audit of sport to clarify individual World Class Programme sports service and facility requirements.

The information will be used to draw up a template for each UK Sports Institute consortium which will set out the service and facility requirements for each individual area. These will be ready to present to the network consortiums in the summer.

BBC Director-General

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with Mr. Greg Dyke with regard to the appointment of the next Director-General of the BBC. [83037]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 4 May 1999]: I have had no detailed discussions with Mr. Greg Dyke about the appointment of the next Director-General of the BBC. He did, however, inform me on 4 February that he was considering applying for the post.

Millennium Commission Projects

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of projects which have received Millennium Commission awards have been in (a) the east midlands and (b) Leicestershire. [83164]

Janet Anderson: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. My right hon. Friend will reply to my hon. Friend in his capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of his reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list the expected sources of partnership funding for each of the Millennium capital projects; and how much has now been secured in each case; [83758]

(2) how much of the matched funding being sought by the Millennium Commission capital projects is expected to come from (a) local authorities, (b) development corporations, (c) ERDF, (d) other Government sources and (e) private donations. [83759]

Mr. Chris Smith: These are matters for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

School Playing Fields

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many planning applications for the sale of school playing fields have (a) been considered and (b) been objected to by Sport England since 25 February; and if he will list them. [81801]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 28 April 1999]: Since 25 February Sport England has considered 45 planning applications in respect of school playing fields and objected in 4 cases. Of the remaining 41 planning applications, 16 are still undergoing assessment by Sport England. The list of planning applications is as follows:

Region	Site name
London	Horsenden School, Ealing
	Ashmole School, Barnet
East Midlands	Pingle School, Swadlincote
	St. Peter's and St. Paul's, Lincoln
	Daventry Tertiary College

	Broad Heath School, Coventry
	Cockshut Hill School, Birmingham
South West	Sedgemoore Manor Junior School, Bridgwater
South East	Deburgh School, Tadworth

Millennium Dome (Opening Ceremonies)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to ensure that those invited to the opening ceremonies of the Dome are representative of the whole of society. [82327]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company are determined that the opening celebration at the Millennium Dome on 31 December 1999 will be an inclusive event and will represent the whole of society. The majority of those invited will be members of the general public from across the UK. NMEC are currently developing their strategy for delivering this and will announce the arrangements in due course.

Departmental Legal Business

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on his Department's policy when (a) conducting legal proceedings and (b) seeking legal advice as to the circumstances in which Queen's Counsel should be instructed; and for each of the last three years (i) on how many occasions his Department instructed Queen's Counsel and (ii) what was the total cost of instructing Queen's Counsel. [81764]

Mr. Chris Smith: In relation to sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) of my hon. Friend's question concerning my Department's policy when conducting legal proceedings, and when seeking legal advice as to the circumstances in which Queen's Counsel should be instructed, this Department would normally expect the Treasury Solicitor's Department to instruct Counsel on its behalf. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by the Solicitor-General on 26 April 1999, Official Report, columns 1–2.

With regard to each of the last three years, as far as my officials have been able to ascertain without incurring disproportionate cost, from April 1996 to March 1997 Queen's Counsel were instructed in one case; from April 1997 to March 1998 Queen's Counsel were instructed in three cases; and from April 1998 to date Queen's Counsel were instructed in five cases.

As far as my officials have been able to ascertain without incurring disproportionate cost, the total cost of instructing Counsel during the periods referred to above was:

for 1997–98 £11,350.50; and for 1998 to date £25,168.51.

It should be noted that the total figure given for the period 1996–97 covers work for two cases—it includes a sum attributable to Counsel's fees for work undertaken before April 1996 but paid after that date. It should also be noted that the figure given for 1998 to date excludes Counsel's fees for work undertaken in that period which are yet to be agreed.

Professional Statisticians

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many staff who have worked as professional statisticians in his Department and its predecessor have left on early retirement in each of the past 10 years. [81174]

Janet Anderson: The number of "professional statisticians" who have left on early retirement in the last 10 years is none.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many staff by grade are employed as professional statisticians in his Department; how many of these staff have been accepted as fast stream by the Civil Service Selection Board; and how many have been granted chartered statistician status by the Royal Statistical Society. [81196]

Janet Anderson: Statistical work is undertaken by a range of specialisms such as Research Officers, Social Survey Officers and Economists. Within this Department there are 1 Grade A (U)—Grade 6 equivalent, 1 Grade A (L)—Grade 7 equivalent, 1 Assistant Statisticians employed as "professional" statisticians, all of whom have been recruited via CSSB.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 21 April 1999, Official Report, column 577, if he will give the total travel cost of each occasion when (a) departmental special advisers travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997 and (b) the place visited. [82412]

Mr. Chris Smith: For the period 2 May 1997 to 31 March 1999, special advisers in my Department have travelled overseas in an official capacity on two occasions to the USA and France.

The total cost of travel and any hotel accommodation is £7,739. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

Broadcasting Licences

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received regarding lifting the restrictions on religious organisations which prevent them holding national terrestrial radio broadcasting licences; and if he will make a statement; [83129]

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on United Christian Broadcasting's application for a broadcasting licence. [83044]

Janet Anderson: The Broadcasting Act 1990 disqualifies groups whose objectives are wholly or mainly of a religious nature from holding a terrestrial national radio licence issued by the Radio Authority. However, this disqualification does not extend to local, satellite and cable radio licences where the Authority is permitted to licence religious bodies subject to compliance with its religious guidelines. It is under these provisions that, for example, United Christian Broadcasters already holds two satellite broadcast licences from the Radio Authority. A religious organisation can hold a digital satellite radio licence but not a terrestrial digital radio multiplex or sound programme service licence under the 1996 Broadcasting Act.

My Department has received representations from United Christian Broadcasters, from around two hundred Members of Parliament and more than ten thousand representations from members of the public. We are considering these representations and I will be meeting representatives of United Christian Broadcasters on 10 June to explore their concerns more fully.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum (Kosovan Albanians)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to revise the rules governing refusal of asylum on safe third country grounds in respect of Kosovan Albanians. [83614]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are not persuaded that it is necessary to change the Immigration Rules. The Dublin Convention provides an agreed legal framework for deciding which member state should decide asylum applications made in the European Union. It provides for a range of criteria to be taken into account including the applicant's family links. Member states have not decided to suspend the operation of the Convention in respect of Kosovan Albanians. In recent weeks, we have transferred a small number of Kosovans to other member states. In each case the receiving state had, in accordance with the provisions of the Dublin Convention, accepted responsibility for considering the asylum applications. All of these persons had arrived in the European Union before the recent North Atlantic Treaty Organisation action. None of those Kosovans who are being airlifted directly from the region to the United Kingdom will be transferred to other states on safe third country grounds.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Kosovan Albanians have been (a) refused asylum and (b) removed to other countries on safe third country grounds since 24 March. [83615]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The available information is that no nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, whose cases have been considered substantively, have been refused asylum in the period January to March 1999. It is not possible separately to identify Kosovans within the statistics held on nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia.

All applications for asylum are considered within the terms of the 1951 United Nations Convention on the Status of Refugees and its 1967 New York Protocol. At the present time, and in general, ethnic Albanians from Kosovo who apply for asylum are likely to be able to demonstrate that they have a well-founded fear of persecution and will be granted asylum.

Where, under the provisions of the Dublin Convention, another European Union member state accepts that it is responsible for determining the claim we would normally seek to transfer the applicant there. Six nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, excluding dependants, have been transferred to European Union Member states since 24 March 1999 under the Dublin Convention. All of these persons had arrived in the European Union before the recent North Atlantic Treaty Organisation action. None who arrived since that date have been transferred. No Ethnic Albanians from Kosovo will be returned to the region while the conflict lasts.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to accommodate Kosovan refugees in East Lancashire. [83605]

Mr. Straw: The Refugee Council and its partner agencies are working closely with the Home Office and local government associations to identify sites for further reception centres across the United Kingdom. We are looking at all parts of the United Kingdom. There will be a variety of different forms of accommodation used as temporary reception centres where the refugees can be housed prior to moving into more settled accommodation.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what payments have been made to Siemens Business Systems in respect of work for the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to date. [83617]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Details of the payment arrangements between the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) and Siemens Business Services are commercially confidential. A high proportion of the payments to the supplier are linked to the successful delivery of key elements of the IND Casework Programme, including the computer system and improvements in IND's productivity. In effect it is payment on delivery of specific parts of the contract.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the additional costs to the Government which have resulted from the late delivery of the Siemens Business Systems contract with the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [83618]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the terms of the contract between the Immigration and Nationality Directorate and Siemens Business Services (SBS), the financial risk for the late delivery of elements of the Casework Programme is borne by Siemens Business Services. Although development of the full information technology application has been delayed, many elements of the Programme, in particular improvements to the business process and some new information technology, have been delivered. A package of changes to the contractual payment terms has been negotiated with SBS.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what penalties have been imposed on Siemens Business Systems for late delivery of work at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [83613]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate's Casework Programme is a Private Finance Initiative. A high proportion of the payments to the supplier, Siemens Business Services, are linked to the successful delivery of key elements of the Programme, including the computer system, and to improvements in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's productivity. If the expected benefits are not achieved, the payments to the supplier fall below the target in the contract. The delay in delivering the Programme and the Computer system means that Siemens Business Services have received substantially less income.

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the total cost of the contract with Siemens Business Systems for work at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [83612]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The contract contains a novel charging mechanism in which the Immigration and Nationality Directorate pays for services provided as specified in the contract. Milestone charges relating to the delivery of key elements of the business process improvements and the information technology system and a productivity-related charge is based on the level of savings achieved. Because payments are linked to productivity-related savings, it is difficult to predict the value of payments to be made to Siemens Business Services.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for information he received under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83108]

Mr. Straw: For monitoring purposes, this information is collected on a calendar year basis. Information for 1997 was published last year in the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report. In 1998, my Department received 43 applications for information under the Code, and granted 36 of them.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his answer of 29 March 1999, Official Report, column 554, concerning when the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), would reply to the letter of 3 February from the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire, for what reason the Under-Secretary did not respond in the week beginning 29 March; [83771]

(2) when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 3 February to the Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for North Warwickshire (Mr. O'Brien), on behalf of his constituent, Mr. Perry. [83755]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I apologise to the right hon. Member for not having replied to his letter of 3 February. It has only been brought to my attention due to an administrative error in my Department. I have now replied to the right hon. Member.

Subordinate Legislation (Publication on Internet)

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to publish on the Internet, drafts of the subordinate legislation to be made under the Data Protection Act 1998. [83748]

Mr. George Howarth: Drafts of six of the statutory instruments being prepared under the Data Protection Act 1998 will be published on the Internet at www.homeoffice.gov.uk on Tuesday 11 May 1999. I am also placing copies in the Library. Other drafts will be made available in due course.

Special Branch (Records)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals have their personal details recorded on the (a) data base and (b) files maintained by the National Joint Unit of the Metropolitan Police Special Branch; and how many of these individuals are (i) Irish, (ii) US and (iii) non-EU and non-US citizens. [81678]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 29 April 1999]: None. The National Joint Unit (NJU) does not maintain its own records, but instead draws as necessary upon information held by individual Special Branches nationwide. The NJU, although situated with the Metropolitan Police Special Branch (MPSB) at New Scotland Yard, is not part of the Metropolitan Police Service. It is a national unit, managed by the MPSB but staffed by police officers drawn from forces around the country.

Prevention of Terrorism Review

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what means and on what date Mr. J. J. Rowe QC was informed that his terms of reference for review of the operation of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 in 1998 did not include sections 5, 6 and 7 of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998 relating to conspiracy; and what arrangements will be made to review the operation of these sections of the Act. [81679]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 29 April 1999]: Mr. Rowe was advised by letter dated 17 November 1998 that the terms of reference for his annual review of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 (PTA) did not include review of the conspiracy provisions in sections 5, 6 and 7 of the Criminal Justice (Terrorism and Conspiracy) Act 1998. Arrangements are now in hand for the appointment of a reviewer of the working of those sections and an announcement will be made in due course.

Fair Trade Products

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce fair trade products at (a) meetings, (b) events and (c) catering facilities within his Department. [82866]

Mr. Straw: In purchasing goods and services for these and other purposes, my Department takes full account of the Government's policy of seeking value for money, having due regard to propriety and regularity. However, my Department has undertaken a review of the implications of offering Fair Trade products and will be issuing guidance on their use in the near future.

Prison Service

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the results achieved by the Prison Service on each of its key performance indicators (a) in each prison and (b) on average, in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [83708]

Mr. George Howarth: The Prison Service met five of its eleven targets for the 1998–99 year. This is based on provisional information which is subject to validation by prisons. The tables show key performance indicator (KPI) average performance for the Service as a whole and for each establishment. The overcrowding KPI is formulated in terms of overall Prison Service capacity and population levels and is not applicable to individual prisons.

[1] Cost per place performance figures for Parc, Altcourse and Lowdham Grange prisons cannot be provided on a comparable basis because available data include an element for capital repayment.
[2] Cost per place, assaults, positive random drug testing, purposeful hours, offending behaviour programmes and training figures are provisional. Final figures are not likely to be significantly different.
[3] Purposeful activity performance figures for Lowdham Grange are not available for the financial year 1998–99.
[4] Private prison contractors are not required to supply training figures.

Referendums

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy to introduce legislation to implement the recommendations of the Neill Committee on the conduct of referendums before any further national referendums. [83595]

Mr. Straw: We intend to publish a draft Bill to implement the main findings of the Neill Committee report before the Summer Recess, and we hope to have the new arrangements in place by the time of the next general election. The Government's position on the timing of possible referendums on changes to the voting system for elections to the House of Commons and on Britain's membership of the single currency were set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in the reply he gave to the right hon. Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) on 4 November 1998, Official Report, column 868 and in his statement of 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 179–96 respectively.

Criminal Law Alignment

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department received a copy of (a) the European Commission communication of 14 July 1998 relating to the progressive alignment of criminal laws and procedures within the Union COM (1998) 459 and (b) the Draft Convention of Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters. [83242]

Mr. Straw: The European Commission Communication towards an area of Freedom, Security and Justice of 14 July 1998 (COM (1998) 459) was received in the Home Office on 2 September 1998 and deposited for scrutiny on 15 September 1998.

The most recent consolidated text of the draft Convention on mutual assistance in criminal matters between the member states of the European Union is in Council Document 13144/98 JUSTPEN 108, which was received on 20 November 1998. That document has since been supplemented by proposals for additional articles to be included in the draft Convention. Those proposals, like the consolidated text, have been submitted to the relevant parliamentary Select Committees and have been, or will be, placed in the Library.

Violence against Women

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives Her Majesty's Government are taking on public education to prevent violence against women. [83563]

Kate Hoey: The largest single type of violence against women is domestic violence. We have, therefore, initiated a domestic violence publicity and awareness campaign to make clear the impact of violence against women, including how it so often leads to murder; to challenge misconceptions, such as believing that violence within relationships is somehow not a crime, or that the victim is to blame in some way; and to show what we can all do to reduce domestic violence and its impact, including on children who witness the violence.

The Government launched "Break the Chain" in January, with a leaflet for survivors and those who might be in a position to help them, and an associated poster. This will be followed soon by guidance for agencies which deal with the victims of domestic violence.

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) of 21 April 1999, Official Report, column 583, on the Justice and Home Affairs Council, for what reasons it was not practicable to make an earlier report to the House on the outcome of the meeting on 12 March. [83482]

Mr. Straw: We always aim to report promptly to the House on the outcome of Justice and Home Affairs Council meetings. But we can only prepare a report when we have a reliable record of the proceedings. In the present case, this was received in the Home Office on 16 March, and I reported to the House in the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 22 March 1999, Official Report, columns 23–26. I assure the hon. Member that there was no avoidable delay.

Sudbury Prison

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently held in HMP Sudbury; and how many of these are serving a life sentence. [83477]

Mr. George Howarth: The total number of prisoners held at Sudbury prison as at 6 May 1999 was 489. Of these, 72 are serving a life sentence.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many life prisoners at HMP Sudbury have absconded during (a) the last two months and (b) the last six months; how many of these have committed further offences for which they have been charged during the period of time they were away from the prison; and what they were charged with. [83478]

Mr. George Howarth: In the last two months, two life-sentenced prisoners failed to return to Sudbury from temporary release: one is still unlawfully at large; the other surrendered to the police in North Wales and has been charged with murder.

During the last six months, one life-sentenced prisoner absconded from Sudbury prison. He absconded on 5 March 1999 and surrendered to the police in Shrewsbury on 9 March 1999 with no further charges.

Also, during the last six months one other lifer failed to return from temporary release. The prisoner was arrested in Coventry and charged with shoplifting. This charge is not being proceeded with.

Public Speaking (Public Places)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the members of the Public Speaking in Public Places working party; and what remuneration is received by each. [83471]

Mr. Boateng: The Association of Town Centre Management (ATCM) has established a small working group to look at the various issues surrounding the development of public speaking in public places or "Speakers' Corners". The group met for the first time on 17 March this year and was attended by the following:

Group members
Mr. A. Tallentire	ATCM (Chair)
Mr. M. Sola	ATCM
Mr. S. Baxter	Police Policy Directorate, Home Office
Ms G. Fraser	Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions
Assistant Chief Constable A. McWhirter	Association of Chief Police Officers
Mr. G. Lander	British Council for Offices
Mr. W. McKee	British Property Federation
Mr. J. Orchard	KOP Pavement Shopping Ltd.

The following were also invited to attend but were unable to do so:

David Lepper MP

A representative of the Local Government Association.

Membership of the working party is not expected to remain static and additional members are likely to be invited to the next meeting. No remuneration is provided for members of the working group.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of incitement to racial hatred were (a) reported, (b) investigated and (c) the subject of arrest in (i) Hammersmith and (ii) Fulham police stations in (1) 1997 and (2) 1998. [79874]

Kate Hoey [pursuant to her reply, 13 April 1999, c. 21–22]: I should like to point out that the figures in that answer, which were provided by the Metropolitan Police, were in fact figures for all racial incidents, and not for cases of incitement to racial hatred. The Metropolitan Police tell me that there was no offence of incitement to racial hatred recorded in either Hammersmith or Fulham Division during 1997 and 1998.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Census Returns

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the Acts and the sections of those Acts which define public access to census returns. [83773]

Mr. Hoon: No Acts specifically define public access to census returns.

The following Acts and sections relate to the confidentiality of information in census returns:

The Census Act 1920, section 8(2), as amended by the Census (Confidentiality) Act 1991, section 1.

The following Acts and sections govern public access to census returns within the public records system:

The Public Records Act 1958, section 3(4); and section 5(1), as amended by the Public Records Act 1967, section 1.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the right hon. and hon. Members who, since 1 September 1998, have been informed by the Public Record Office that access to the 1921, 1951 and 1961 census returns is covered by the Census Act 1920 as amended by the Census (Confidentiality) Act 1991. [83754]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) on 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 427.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Kosovo Refugees (School Provision)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the additional cost to local education authorities of providing an appropriate education for child refugees entering Britain from Kosovo. [83711]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Funding for Local Education Authorities for the education of children of Refugees from Kosovo will be provided by the Department in the same way as that for all children on school roll. When we have more information on the number of refugee children from Kosovo likely to come to the UK; their educational needs; and the geographical areas where they will be located, then we will consider what additional funds, if any, local education authorities may need to provide appropriate support.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions he has held with (a) the Local government Association and (b) particular local authorities with regard to school provision for child refugees entering Britain from Kosovo. [83712]

Mr. Charles Clarke: At a joint Department for Education and Employment and Refugee Council Seminar on 28 April, I made clear the Government's commitment that the children of refugees entering Britain from Kosovo will have access to education in mainstream schools. The Department is in regular contact with the Local Government Association and the local authorities who have received refugees to date, to arrange suitable school provision. Those contacts will be developed when we have more detailed information on the numbers of refugees from Kosovo likely to enter the country, and the geographical areas in which they will be located.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many applications for information he received under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary Session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83109]

Mr. Mudie: Statistics are not available for the period required. However, for the calendar year January to December 1998, a total of 35 requests for information were received which cited the Code of Practice. This includes 24 requests received by the Employment Service. No Code requests were refused.

Sex Discrimination

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to issue guidance to employers and employees on the Sex Discrimination (Gender Reassignment) Regulations 1999. [83901]

Ms Hodge: The Sex Discrimination (Gender Reassignment) Regulations 1999 (No. 1102), which were laid before Parliament on 9 April, came into force on 1 May. The Regulations extend the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 to cover protection from discrimination on grounds of gender reassignment in the fields of employment and vocational training.

In order to help individuals and employers understand their rights and responsibilities arising from the new Regulations, I have published the "Guide to the Sex Discrimination (Gender Reassignment) Regulations 1999". In addition to providing helpful guidance on the effect of the legislation, it also suggests some "good practice" examples for successfully accommodating a transsexual employee in the workforce.

I have placed a copy of the Guide in the Library.

Leicestershire Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what levels of funding Leicestershire Training and Enterprise Council received in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99; and what level of balances they carried forward in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) 1997–98. [83179]

Mr. Mudie: The level of DfEE funding to Leicestershire TEC from 1996–97 to 1998–99 was as follows:

Year	£
1996–97	21,637,512
1997–98	20,105,386
1998–99	18,846,814

In addition, DTI funding for Business Link activity amounted to:

Year	£
1996–97	1,370,103
1997–98	1,749,944
1998–99	1,652,087

Balances carried forward were:

As at	Committed Reserves	Uncommitted Reserves	Total Reserves attributable to Secretary of State
1 April 1996	5,090,720	1,103,186	6,193,906
31 March 1997	3,035,955	1,425,890	4,461,845
31 March 1998	2,321,875	—	2,321,875

After-school Clubs

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will make a statement about the music, art and drama content in after-school clubs; [83591]

(2) what plans he has to increase the opportunities for children to engage in music, arts and drama by an expansion of after-school clubs. [83592]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Government want all young people to have access to a range of out-of-school hours activities, including music, arts and drama. The Government's vision is set out in "Extending opportunity: a national framework for study support" published last year. £80 million of Standards Fund money will be made available from April 2000 for the development of study support activities throughout England. In addition, £425 million of lottery money is being made available through the New Opportunities Fund (NOF) over the next four years to support the expansion of out-of-school hours activities—both education and child care. The policy directions issued by my right hon. Friend the Culture Secretary make clear that music, art and drama activities are included within the framework of activities that NOF can fund.

Reception

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made following the early years development and child care partnership plans for 1999–2000 of the proportion of four-year-old children attending full-time reception classes in schools. [81988]

Ms Hodge: The number of four-year-olds in infant classes[1] as at January 1998 was 320,897, equivalent to 51 per cent. of the four-year-old population.

[1] Includes reception and other classes (ie non nursery classes).

Training Organisations

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the criteria for approval of a national training organisation with regard to the assessment of qualifications. [83056]

Mr. Mudie: Any National Training Organisation which has an awarding body function, or which operates as a training provider, must demonstrate it has transparent arrangements to avoid any conflicts of interest.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received regarding the decision by Lantra to combine the role of instructor and assessor for their training courses. [83058]

Mr. Mudie: The Department has received a number of representations on this matter from industry practitioners.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority requirement for qualifications to include external quality assurance and its application in the case of National Training Organisations using instructors to assess trainees on their own courses. [83055]

Mr. Mudie: We welcome the QCA's requirement that external quality assurance should be a feature of vocational qualifications accredited by them. Any organisation conducting training to qualifications accredited by the QCA should be subject to quality assurance by an external body sufficiently independent of those providing the training.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the appropriateness of national training organisations using instructors to assess trainees on their own courses. [83057]

Mr. Mudie: The development of vocational skills often sensibly involves assessment, by qualified trainers, of trainees' performance in realistic working conditions, but such assessments should be subject to external verification.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will ensure that qualifications which are required by law and are his Department's responsibility should be awarded by external assessment. [83059]

Mr. Mudie: In the Department's designation of qualifications under Schedule 2(a) of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992, and in the Qualification and Curriculum Authority's accreditation of qualifications, awards are required to be verified by a body separate from that conducting the training.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Council how many applications for information she received under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83110]

Mrs. Beckett: I have received no applications under the Code.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Darvill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the carry-over of unused fishing effort allocations within the EU Multi Annual Guidance Programme (MAGP IV). [83902]

Mr. Morley: Under the arrangements which I announced on 24 February last year, in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Ms Osborne), Official Report, columns 187–88, fishing effort available to the UK pelagic and beam trawl segments in 1998 was allocated between the various Producer Organisations (POs) or groups of fishermen concerned. Monitoring of uptake during 1998 showed that both segments succeeded in remaining within their main targets. Following representations from the industry, we approached the Commission to see if unused effort could be carried over into subsequent years. They have now confirmed to us that this is possible. We will accordingly be holding urgent consultation meetings with those concerned to explore how to reflect this in effort allocations for this year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce measures to enable a reliable estimate to be made of the proportion of national insurance numbers that have been fraudulently created. [82572]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 4 May 1999]: A considerable amount of work has been done to estimate the number of duplicate and fraudulent National Insurance Numbers in the Departmental Central Index.

Since 1995, the Departmental Central Index Data Cleaning Project has checked the database by selecting cases which fit certain risk criteria. The project has so far resolved over 750,000 duplicate records held in the database which were mainly created when details of customers were accidentally recorded incorrectly. Since the project started, it has detected only about 10 cases of the fraudulent use of National Insurance Numbers.

National Insurance Contributions Office has worked with employers to check their records and looked at over half a million cases: less than 0.1 per cent. of the items were referred for investigation of potential National Insurance Number irregularities.

The best available measure of the scale of fraud is provided by DSS benefit reviews. Since 1995, two Housing Benefit reviews have been carried out and in no instance was a case of identity fraud confirmed. Two Income Support benefit reviews have been carried out since 1995. The second review reported in 1997, and in 99.1 per cent. of cases randomly selected, identity was established to our satisfaction. The remainder included cases in which the customer could not be found.

The studies carried out indicate strongly that identity fraud is one of the least common types of fraud, and the fraudulent use of National Insurance Numbers will form only a proportion of identity fraud. Nevertheless, we are determined that the Welfare System should be secure against fraud of this kind. Our best defence against such fraud is through our current policy of rigorously checking all applications for new National Insurance Numbers, and continuing our programme of data-cleaning departmental databases, and ensuring records are reliable.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the planned savings were as a result of the introduction of the single room rent restriction for each quarter since its introduction; and what the actual savings for each quarter have been. [83713]

Angela Eagle: The estimated yearly savings, which took little account of behavioural changes, for 1996–97, 1997–98 and 1998–99 were £13/£57/£62 million respectively. However, we are unable to provide actual savings because there is insufficient quantitative information to assess how this group as a whole responded to the change.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for information he received under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83118]

Angela Eagle: For monitoring purposes this information is collected on a calendar year basis. Information for 1997 was published last year in the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report. In 1998 this Department received 238 applications for information under the Code and granted 232 of them.

Benefits Agency Medical Service

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his policy for fees paid to doctors working for the Benefits Agency Medical Service and on the progress of talks between Sema/NDA on the level of fees. [83606]

Angela Eagle: The provision of medical services was contracted out to Sema Group Medical Services on 1 September. There are now no doctors employed by the Benefits Agency.

The question of fees to be paid to the doctors is an issue for negotiation between the doctors, their representatives, and the companies employing them (Sema Group Medical Services and Nestor Disability Analysis).

Discussions regarding fees have taken place between Sema Group Medical Services and the British Medical Association. Although agreement has not yet been reached discussions with individual doctors are ongoing.

Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate (a) the additional cost in 2009–10 if the basic pension were raised in line with earnings from 2000 and (b) the increase in revenue from national insurance contributions if contributors paid the same proportion of their earnings in 2009–10 as in 1999–2000. [83496]

Mr. Timms: The estimated additional net cost in 2009–10 of uprating basic State pension alone, without the linked benefits which include Incapacity Benefit and Widows Benefit, in line with earnings from April 2000 in 1999–2000 price terms is £4.6 billion pounds. The estimated increase in National Insurance contribution revenue if contributors paid the same proportion of their earnings in 2009–10 as in 1999–2000 is £1.7 billion.

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 0.1 billion. Gross costs have been provided by the Government Actuary's Department. The cost of uprating basic State pension in line with earnings is net of Income Related Benefit offsets.

2. Estimates should be treated as broad orders of magnitude.

3. Income Support and Housing Benefit offsets have been calculated using PENSIM which does not include offsets for linked benefits.

4. Both estimates assume real earnings growth of 1.5 per cent. per annum. The estimate for the increase in National Insurance contribution revenue is based on the March 1999 Budget assumptions.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the governance structures, other than those based on trustees, which his Department has evaluated in relation to the governance of stakeholder pensions; [83602]

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the costs of the stakeholder pension being based on (a) trustee and (b) other forms of governance. [83607]

Mr. Timms: The Green Paper asked for views on trustees and alternative governance structures which could provide comparable benefits for stakeholder pension scheme members. A number of suggestions have been made on aspects of how different arrangements might work. We shall be considering these carefully and propose to consult further on governance arrangements for stakeholder pension schemes shortly.

The costs of governance will be one of the factors to be taken into account in setting the proposed limit on charges in stakeholder pension schemes.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his proposals for stakeholder pensions will contain a statutory requirement for people to seek financial advice before they join a stakeholder pension scheme. [83600]

Mr. Timms: Appropriate information and advice for those who need it will be an important part of the decision making process for individuals considering a stakeholder pension scheme. We shall be consulting further on how that information and advice would best be delivered. Further details will be set out in due course.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to allow group personal pensions to register as stakeholder pensions. [83603]

Mr. Timms: Group personal pensions will be able to register as stakeholder pension schemes provided they meet the required conditions for such schemes. Those conditions are set out in the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill currently progressing through Parliament, and will be developed in secondary legislation following further consultation.

We are also considering how far the proposed requirement, that employers should facilitate access to stakeholder schemes for employees where an occupational scheme is not available, should apply in cases where employers offer group personal pension arrangements.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimates his Department has made of the average cost of financial advice for an individual seeking to join (a) a personal, (b) an occupational, (c) a group personal and (d) a stakeholder pension. [83601]

Mr. Timms: Occupational pension schemes are operated by employers and charges for financial advice do not arise for individual employees seeking to join such a scheme.

For people considering taking up a personal pension or joining a group personal pension scheme, the cost of advice is, in most cases, included in the overall charges attached to the pension. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in his March 1999 Budget, the Financial Services Authority is to draw up league tables of investment products, including personal pensions, and charges will be a key feature.

Information and advice for those who need it will be an important part of the decision making process for individuals considering a stakeholder pension scheme. We propose, therefore, to consult further on information and advice arrangements for those schemes. We shall then consider carefully what allowance should be made for the costs of information and advice in the proposed limit on charges.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what level the upper limit of the middle band of earnings would have to be set in order to give higher earners the same pension entitlement from phase 1 of the state second pension as from SERPS, assuming that the lower limit is as proposed in the pensions Green Paper. [83495]

Mr. Timms: We have recently reached the end of the consultation period on our proposals for the State Second Pension. Final decisions, including those on earnings thresholds at which different pension accrual rates apply, will take account of the responses received. However, to achieve the policy intention that higher earners would have broadly the same pension entitlement from State Second Pension as under SERPS, the upper limit for the middle band of earnings would need to be set at approximately £20,000 in 1998–99 terms.

Paternity Pay

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his estimate is of the cost to the Exchequer of the introduction of two weeks' statutory paternity pay at 90 per cent. of earnings replacement value, assuming full take-up. [83804]

Mr. Bayley: Around 390,000 men would receive an average payment of £930 with a cost to the Exchequer of £360 million. This assumes entitlement conditions for statutory paternity pay would reflect those for statutory maternity pay. This would require a man to have been with his current employer for at least 26 weeks and have earnings at or above the lower earnings limit for national insurance purposes.

Disabled People

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate his Department has made of the total number of disabled people who will receive an increase in their income as a result of the disability income guarantee. [83608]

Mr. Bayley: We are committed to ensuring that resources are directed towards those that need them most. The consultation document "A new contract for welfare: Support For Disabled People" published last October indicated that we expect some 175,000 disabled people and families with the highest care needs to benefit from the higher premium as a result of the disability income guarantee.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate his Department has made of the total number of disabled children whose benefit will increase as a result of the higher rate of the mobility component of disability living allowance being extended to children aged (a) three and (b) four years of age. [83609]

Mr. Bayley: It is estimated that 3,000 three year-olds and 5,000 four year-olds will benefit in 2001–02 when eligibility for the higher-rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance is extended to children aged 3 and 4.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase assistance with mobility costs available to disabled pensioners not in receipt of disability living allowance. [83253]

Mr. Bayley: Assistance for people disabled later in life with costs associated with mobility, among the other requirements of daily living, is the subject of specific discussions being held with groups representing disabled people.

We have also taken a number of steps to improve the financial support available to all elderly people. These include the introduction of a Guaranteed Minimum Income for pensioners from April 1999, by increasing Income Support for the poorest pensioners by three times the normal price up-rating and an increase in the level of winter fuel payment which means that, from next winter, every eligible pensioner household will receive £100. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has committed us to a "minimum guarantee on tax". No pensioner whose income falls below a specified level will pay Income Tax.

In terms of other help with transport costs some help already exists, for example through the disabled person's rail card. Local authorities also have discretionary power to make special transport provision for disabled people, including elderly people. We have also announced our intention to introduce a national, standard minimum for concessionary fare schemes for people of pension age. It will require each local authority to make available at least half-fares on buses for all pensioners on purchase of a £5 annual bus pass.

Incapacity Benefit

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the oral statement by the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for City of York (Mr. Bayley), on 20 April 1999, Official Report, Standing Committee D, column 864, what assumptions he has made about the cost or savings to the Exchequer of a change in people's behaviour as a result of changes in the law on entitlement to incapacity benefit. [82721]

Mr. Bayley: The costings in the explanatory notes to the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill assume that overall the financial effects of any behavioural changes as a result of the proposed changes to Incapacity Benefit will be broadly neutral.

The behavioural effects of the change to the contribution conditions are assumed to be negligible. This is because it would be difficult for many people to adjust their circumstances in such a way as to ensure that they meet the contribution conditions at the time when they claim Incapacity Benefit. In addition special arrangements to enable people to re-qualify after short breaks in entitlement without paying further contributions will, together with linking rules, reduce any incentive for people to stay on benefit longer as a result of the new conditions.

The behavioural effects of the proposal to take some account of occupational and personal pensions over £50 are assumed to be broadly neutral. Potential behavioural changes would include some people increasing their pension income, to compensate for the benefit reduction, which would lead to higher savings. Other people might seek to change their pension arrangements to maintain the level of benefit, which would lead to lower savings. In the absence of any evidence as to which of these effects will predominate it has been assumed that they will broadly cancel each other out. Since only half the pension income over £50 will be deducted from benefit, people on Incapacity Benefit will still gain from having made their own provision.

The effects of the changes will be monitored post-implementation.

CABINET OFFICE

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what assessment he has made of the achievability of his target for ethnic minority representation in the Senior Civil Service in the period to 2004–05. [82914]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Modernising Government White Paper sets Service-wide targets to increase the number of ethnic minority staff in the Senior Civil Service. The target for 2004–05 is that 3.2 per cent. of the Senior Civil Service will be from ethnic minority backgrounds.

This target is challenging, but achievable. It is based on an assessment of current trends and the potential impact of action we are taking. This action includes identifying and bringing on existing ethnic minority staff with potential, and ensuring all steps are taken to attract ethnic minority applicants for posts in the Service.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to set further targets for ethnic minority representation in the Senior Civil Service after 2004–05. [82913]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Modernising Government White Paper sets out the Government's commitment to tackle the under-representation of ethnic minorities in the Senior Civil Service.

Addressing this is a top priority. The target for 2004–05 is the first step. We will want to monitor progress against this and consider further action in the light of it.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what monitoring he proposes to undertake with regard to his target for ethnic minority representation in the Senior Civil Service. [82915]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: We will monitor the target centrally to assess progress across the Service. Each Department will measure its own progress and report regularly on it.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will include regional development agencies in future lists of ministerial responsibilities. [82919]

Mr. Kilfoyle: No. Regional Development Agencies are classified as Non-Departmental Public Bodies, which are not included in the List of Ministerial Responsibilities. Instead, details of them will be published annually in future editions of Public Bodies, copies of which will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Genetically Modified Foods

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what advice the Government have received from the Chief Medical Officer and the Chief Scientific Adviser about the potential links between genetically modified foods and birth defects and cancer; and when this report will be published. [83096]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: A draft paper prepared by the Chief Medical Office and the Chief Scientific Adviser has been considered by Ministers. The paper concluded that there is no evidence of any greater risk to human health from approved GM foods than from conventional ones and that the tests, rules and regulations for assessing the safety of GM foods are sufficiently rigorous. When the paper has been finalised it will be published.

Freemasons

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many letters were sent to magistrates in the Duchy as part of the exercise to establish a voluntary register of freemasons; when the letters were sent; and if he will break down the total between (a) declared masons, (b) declared non-masons, (c) those who refused to indicate their status and (d) those from whom no reply was received, distinguishing in each case between men and women. [83497]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: All magistrates in Lancashire, Greater Manchester and Merseyside were sent a proforma at the end of last year asking them to declare whether or not they were Freemasons.

From the 11 Benches in Lancashire:

74: magistrates declared that they were Freemasons

674: magistrates stated that they were not Freemasons

13: magistrates declined to give this information

295: magistrates did not return the proforma

From the 11 Benches in Greater Manchester:

122: magistrates declared that they were Freemasons

1,557: magistrates stated that they were not Freemasons

20: magistrates declined to give this information

290: magistrates did not return the proforma

From the 6 Benches in Merseyside:

61: magistrates declared that they were Freemasons

819: magistrates stated that they were not Freemasons

28 : magistrates declined to give this information

137: magistrates did not return the proforma.

Benches were not asked to differentiate between men and women. They have been asked to provide this breakdown.

TREASURY

Working Families Tax Credit

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what effect there will be on their eligibility for childcare tax credit if a parent of (a) one child and (b) two children who is in receipt of childcare tax credit takes unpaid parental leave under the Employment Relations Bill; [83343]

(2) if he will estimate the effect on the income of (a) an employee whose spouse and (b) a lone parent who takes unpaid parental leave under the Employment Relations Bill and whose working families tax credit is in payment and has three months to run; [83345]

(3) if he will estimate the effect on the income (a) on average and (b) by quartiles of a family in receipt of working families tax credit of the main earner taking unpaid parental leave under the Employment Relations Bill; [83341]

(4) what the effect will be on the income of an employee receiving working families tax credit if his or her partner takes unpaid parental leave under the Employment Relations Bill; [83340]

(5) if he will make a statement on the eligibility for the working families tax credit of an employed person who takes unpaid parental leave under the Employment Relations Bill while her employed spouse is the direct recipient of the working families tax credit. [83344]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 5 May 1999]: WFTC will be awarded for a 26-week period. Each award is based on a "snapshot" of income immediately preceding the application. Once the award starts it is not affecting by changes to income during the 26-week period. That means that if a parent decides to take unpaid parental leave during that 26-week period the amount of WFTC awarded, including any child-care tax credit, will not change.

Ms Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how many of those who did not receive family credit but will receive working families tax credit are dual-earner couples. [83342]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 5 May 1999]: It is estimated that in 2000–01, the first full year of the Working Families Tax Credit, about 175,000 dual-earner couples who would not have been in receipt of Family Credit will receive Working Families Tax Credit.

Fuel Duty Escalator

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral statement by the Economic Secretary of 27 April 1999, Official Report, columns 241–46, if he will set out the basis on which the cost of exempting commercial vehicles from the fuel duty escalator was calculated; and what definition of commercial vehicles was used. [83103]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 5 May 1999]: Slightly under 50 per cent. of diesel is used in goods vehicles over 3.5 tonnes and this is the definition on which the figures are based. The amount of diesel used by these vehicles was calculated using total distances travelled by such vehicles in 1997 and the average miles per gallon achieved by rigid and articulated vehicles. However, the definition could go much wider to include all diesel vehicles used by businesses.

Currency Speculation

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the introduction of a tax on currency speculation. [83080]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 6 May 1999]: The Treasury has received a number of representations from members of the public and two letters from hon. Members about the proposal to introduce a tax on currency speculation.

Financial Advisers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons only fee-based financial advisers are permitted to describe themselves as independent. [83553]

Ms Hewitt: Financial advisers are permitted to describe themselves as independent so long as they offer products from any provider. Their independence or otherwise is determined by the polarisation rules, not by their reward structure.

Mortgage Products

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors underlie the Financial Services Authority's decision not to publish league tables on the costs and charges of mortgage products. [83555]

Ms Hewitt: The Financial Services Authority (FSA) has no powers to use its resources to collect information about products and activities it does not regulate. FSA is, however, working closely with the Council of Mortgage Lenders on how key mortgage information can be most effectively presented to customers.

Financial Services Act 1986

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans the Government have to extend the protection afforded under the Financial Services Act 1986 to homebuyers. [83554]

Ms Hewitt: There are no plans to extend the present Financial Services Act to cover mortgages. The Financial Services and Markets Bill provides for mortgages to be brought within its scope and the scope of the powers of the Financial Services Authority. A decision will be made later this year on whether the scope of the Bill should include all mortgage selling.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 24 March on behalf of his constituent Miss Marvin. [83750]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I replied to the right hon. Member on 7 May.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 16 February on behalf of his constituent Mr. Gascoynes. [83756]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I replied to the right hon. Member on 7 May.

Aviation Taxes

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax yield to the UK Exchequer of ending the duty-free concession at airports, and on aircraft, on (a) flights to Europe and (b) all flights assuming that with international agreement similar action was taken by other countries. [83352]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not possible to predict with any degree of certainty the additional revenue which will result from the abolition of duty-free sales (a) within Europe and (b) internationally. Estimates are sensitive to a whole range of assumptions about the nature of the successor regime and the post-abolition marketing strategies of the duty-free operators.

Income Tax Liability

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if interest can be the first tranche of income to be set against personal allowances for the purpose of assessing income tax liability, once the 20 pence rate comes into effect. [83372]

Dawn Primarolo: Savings income, including interest, is favourably taxed. Setting interest income against personal allowances ahead of other income would increase taxes by approximately £110 million and increase the tax bill of millions of people. We do not find such a change attractive.

HEALTH

GPs

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions exist to ensure that each area has a choice of male and female GPs. [73548]

Mr. Denham: We have made possible new ways of working that are more sensitive to doctors personal and family circumstances and we have also improved the general practitioner retainer scheme, which allows a doctor to maintain skills during a career break and so return to general practice more easily. These family friendly policies will ensure that general practice remains an attractive option for female doctors, so that patients have the widest possible choice.

Primary Care Groups

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of Sate for Health by what date he plans to complete the process of appointing primary care group boards. [74709]

Mr. Denham: [holding answer 4 March 1999]: Health authorities are charged with the responsibility to establish Primary Care Groups as committees of their authorities. This process has now been substantially completed.

Medicines Control Agency

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the remit of the Medicines Control Agency is, with particular reference to areas of activity other than the licensing of medicines. [80220]

Ms Jowell: The Medicines Control Agency's primary objective is to safeguard public health by ensuring that all medicines on the United Kingdom market meet the appropriate standards of safety, quality and efficacy. As well as achieving this through a system of licensing before the marketing of medicines, the agency is also responsible for the monitoring of medicines and acting on safety concerns after the medicines have been placed on the market. The agency checks and monitors the standards of pharmaceutical manufacture and wholesaling, represents UK pharmaceutical regulatory interests internationally, and manages the British Pharmacopoeia Commission in setting quality standards for drug substances. It is also responsible for medicines control policy and enforcement of these requirements.

Multiple Sclerosis

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to implement the recommendations in the report from the Working Party on Multiple Sclerosis produced by the British Society of Rehabilitation Medicine. [81342]

Mr. Hutton: The report, "A Survey of Multiple Sclerosis Provision in England 1998–99", was produced by the Association for Quality in Healthcare in November 1998 on behalf of the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

We have set out our plans to address unacceptable variations in services via a modernisation programme to deliver more consistent and higher quality care for patients. We remain committed to improving standards of healthcare and to ensuring that newer treatments, including new medicines, are introduced into the National Health Service as fast as possible where they represent a genuine therapeutic advance and are cost effective.

In addition, the move to new commissioning arrangements will bring about improvements in services for people with conditions like MS. Longer term agreements, reflecting dialogue between clinicians and focusing on health improvement and quality objectives, will increase the emphasis on programmes of care that cross the traditional boundaries to meet patients needs best.

NHS (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what data his Department has collated on the time it takes for ethnic minority members of NHS staff to be promoted within NHS hospitals relative to white members of staff; [82232]

(2) what data his Department has collated on the rate at which ethnic minority members of NHS staff resign from the NHS relative to the rate for white members of staff; [82231]

(3) what data his Department has collated on whether ethnic minority members of NHS staff are more likely to be disciplined by (a) suspension and (b) dismissal than white members of staff. [82229]

Mr. Denham: The Department does not collect the data requested. Ministers are, however, concerned about the treatment of black and minority ethnic staff in the National Health Service and have a programme of action to tackle racism and end discrimination in the service.

In order to inform that programme, the Department commissioned Industrial Relations Services Research to undertake a survey of NHS trusts in England published in August last year, "Equal Opportunities and monitoring in NHS trusts", available from the Department of Health, Wetherby. This survey showed that 98 per cent. of NHS trusts have an equal opportunities in employment policy, but only a minority monitor promotions, redundancies, dismissals or training from an equal opportunities perspective. The survey has provided a baseline against which we are now able to measure progress and set targets for raising standards in employment practice.

As part of the modernisation of the NHS, the Government has published "Working Together—Securing a quality workforce for the NHS", the first human resources framework for the NHS published September 1998. This framework sets targets for reducing racial harassment of staff by colleagues and service users, and increasing ethnic minority representation in the work-force. By April 2000, local NHS employers are to have policies and procedures in place to tackle racial harassment, supported by monitoring and reporting arrangements to measure progress. They must also demonstrate that they are making progress year on year in achieving a more representative work-force.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to collect statistics on the prescribing and dispensing of Beta Interferon for MS sufferers in the NHS. [82642]

Mr. Denham: We will continue to collect statistics on all drugs prescribed by general practitioners, including Beta Interferon, which are dispensed in the community. We do not collect statistics on drugs dispensed in hospitals and do not anticipate being in a position to do so for some time.

Renal Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve renal services in East Lancashire; and if he will make a statement. [82846]

Mr. Hutton: The four health authorities in Lancashire and South Cumbria, working together and with the National Health Service Executive North West, have identified capital investment of £1 million and revenue spending of approximately £1 million for 2000–01 to provide 15 additional dialysis stations. These facilities are expected to be in place at the Royal Preston Hospital by next spring and will relieve pressure and lead to improvements in renal services throughout the area.

Investing in Dentistry

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications have been received under the Investing in Dentistry initiative; how many applications have been (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful; how many are still being considered; and what is the value of the grants that have been awarded as a result of successful applications. [82683]

Mr. Denham: To date, a total of 696 Investing in Dentistry requests have been received, of which 282 have been approved for grants totalling over £8 million; 287 refused, and 127 are awaiting decision.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the bids which he has received from Avon health authority area under the Investing in Dentistry programme. [82900]

Mr. Denham: The investing in dentistry funding requests submitted by Avon Health Authority are as follows:

Clifton, Bristol
Easton, Bristol
Filwood, Bristol
Lawrence Weston, Bristol
Bath (2 requests)
Bedminster (2 requests)
Bishopsworth
Chew Magna
Stockwood
Weston-Super-Mare.

Fair Trade Products

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce fair trade products at (a) meetings, (b) events and (c) catering facilities within his Department. [82871]

Ms Jowell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary on 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 410.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Executive Board members in NHS trusts received a one-off contribution to their pension funds in the last round of pay awards, and what was the total cost of such payments to the NHS. [83097]

Mr. Denham: Information on individual contributions to Executive Board members' pension funds is not available centrally.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has given to NHS trusts in respect of pay awards to Executive Board members in the forthcoming pay round. [83098]

Mr. Denham: The Chief Executive of the NHS wrote to all National Health Service trusts and health authorities on 1 February 1999 about pay for staff in 1999–2000. Setting out the Government's position on senior NHS managers' pay, he said:

> "The Government does not expect to see senior managers being awarded increases out of line with the rest of the public service. Further guidance will follow when the pay round for other staff is complete".

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the scope for including tax and benefit considerations in NICE's assessments of the cost-effectiveness of drugs. [83027]

Mr. Denham: Ministers are considering the responses to the discussion document "Faster access to modern treatment", which set out detailed proposals for the appraisal by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence of the clinical cost effectiveness of new and existing interventions. There will be a further statement shortly.

Dental Services

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental practices providing national health service dental treatment there were in (a) the north-west of England and (b) London, in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 1998; and what is the current figure. [82907]

Mr. Denham: The number of General Dental Service (GDS) dentists on a health authority (HA) list at December 1998 and in December in the years 1996 and 1997 in the North and West region health area and in the Greater London HAs area are shown in the table.

General Dental Service: Number of dentists on a HA list at 31 December in each year from 1996 to 1998 inclusive

	North and West	Greater London
1996	2,195	2,848
1997	2,209	2,946
1998	2,240	3,010

Note:
Dentists includes principals, assistants and vocational dental practitioners.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of dental practices in (a) the north-west of England and (b) London, have (i) under 20 per cent., (ii) 21–40 per cent., (iii) 41–60 per cent., (iv) 61–80 per cent. and (v) 81–100 per cent. of the patients registered with them as national health service patients. [82906]

Mr. Denham: Information about dentists' private patients is not available centrally. The registration arrangements which these private patients have with their dentist may vary greatly. However, information is available for the average list size of registered National Health Service patients of General Dental Service (GDS) dentists.

The average number of NHS patients registered per GDS principal dentist on a health authority (HA) list at 31 December 1998 was 1,481 in the North West region health area, 902 in the Greater London HAs area, and for England the corresponding average is 1,341. Dentists are counted in each HA in which they practice and some dentists had no registrations on that date. Differences between these averages will reflect not only differences in the level of dentists' commitment to the GDS but also, other circumstances, for example the number of support staff.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the percentage of all dental treatment provided by the national health service in (a) the north-west of England and (b) London. [83018]

Mr. Denham: Gross fee expenditure in the General Dental Service for the year 1998–99 in the North and West region health area was £202.5 million and the Greater London Health Authorities was £211.4 million. These represent 15 per cent. and 16 per cent. respectively of gross fee expenditure in England.

Correspondence

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. and learned Member for Harborough dated 20 January; [83065]

(2) when the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham), intends to reply to the letter from the hon. and learned Member for Harborough dated 19 January. [83064]

Mr. Denham: I replied to the hon. and learned Member on 30 April.

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 12 February on behalf of Dr Kravitz. [83752]

Ms Jowell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State replied to the right hon. Member on 7 May.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason the study tracing people who might have contracted hepatitis C from blood transfusions did not also trace those people with haemophilia who contracted hepatitis C through blood product treatments. [82885]

Mr. Hutton: The study to trace people who might have developed hepatitis C following blood transfusion focused on those who were unlikely to have remained under clinical care and who could benefit from treatment which had then become available. As haemophiliacs are in constant contact with their clinicians, the need to include them in the tracing exercise did not arise as they would have already been known to the service. It was implicit in the hepatitis C exercise that anyone who was concerned about their hepatitis C virus status could request a test.

Osteoporosis

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Royal College of Physicians publication, "Osteoporosis: Clinical Guidelines for Prevention and Treatment", will be given official status in Ministers' advice to health authorities. [82890]

Ms Jowell: The Royal College of Physicians clinical guidelines for the prevention and treatment of osteoporosis, and the desktop guide for general practitioners and primary care teams, offer advice on effectiveness to inform clinical decisions.

The Department highly recommends both documents as a basis for developing local osteoporosis strategies, and where strategies already exist would expect them to be consistent with this guidance.

The Department has brought the RCP document on osteoporosis, launched last June, to the attention of the National Health Service through Health Service Circular 1998/124, and through two articles in the Chief Medical Officer's Update.

NHS Costs

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the total operating and maintenance costs of the national health service network in the current financial year. [83026]

Mr. Denham: NHSnet is a managed service provided to National Health Service organisations by commercial contractors who funded its development and meet its operating and maintenance costs. Those costs are confidential to the contractors.

The charges levied by these contractors for using NHSnet are met centrally and consist of connection charges and messaging charges. Estimates for the current financial year are: NHSnet connection charges—£8.8 million; messaging charges—£4.3 million.

Glaucoma

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of cases of glaucoma which are likely to be identified following the reintroduction of free eye tests for pensioners. [82918]

Mr. Denham: We do not know how many people aged 60 and over have already been having regular sight tests or how many of the remainder will take up the opportunity of a free National Health Service sight test but, within these uncertainties, we estimate that optometrists could refer an additional 2,000 patients presenting signs of glaucoma.

Human Insulin

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on what research into the potential merits and negative effects of genetically engineered human insulin the decision to instruct NHS purchasers to cease to buy animal insulins and to transfer diabetics to genetically engineered human insulin was based; [83337]

(2) what guidance his Department gives to clinicians concerning the relative merits and negative effects of genetically engineered human insulin and animal insulin. [83338]

Mr. Hutton: Decisions as to the most suitable type of insulin for particular patients are matters for the clinicians involved, in discussion with their patients. The Department has not issued guidance to clinicians on the relative merits of human and animal insulin, and it has given no instructions to the National Health Service about their use. The Committee on Safety of Medicines will continue to monitor closely the safety of insulins.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications for information he received under the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83114]

Ms Jowell: For monitoring purposes, this information is collected on a calendar year basis. Information for 1997 was published last year in the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report. In 1998, the Department received 40 applications for information under the Code. We do not keep figures centrally on how many were granted the information requested.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Social Housing

38. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what sources of advice are available to the Church Commissioners on the need of social housing in inner-urban areas. [82617]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Commissioners retain a portfolio of 1,591 units of residential property, known as the Octavia Hill Estates, in central London. These properties are let on Fair and Assured rents largely to people who are unable to afford market rents elsewhere in the private rented sector. The properties are managed from local offices and all administer a direct access waiting list. There are very few vacancies within the portfolio and the demand for our accommodation always outweighs supply.

Applications for accommodation are received from a variety of sources including personal callers, local authority and HOMES nominations.

Staffs in the local offices are all members of the Chartered Institute of Housing and are in touch with developments in Government Policy in this field.

British Aerospace

39. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the sale of British Aerospace shares by the Church of England; [82618]

42. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what factors the commissioners took into account when deciding to dispose of its holding in BAe. [82621]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Church's long-standing ethical investment policy is not to invest in companies whose main business or focus is in armaments, and shares in British Aerospace have never been held for this reason.

In view of the proposed sale of Marconi Defence Systems, the defence arm of GEC, to British Aerospace, the Church of England's Ethical Investment Working Group has recommended to the Church's central investing bodies that they do not retain shares acquired in "new British Aerospace", as a result of the sale.

Risk Assessments

40. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the commissioners' plans to encourage parishes to carry out risk assessments in relation to crime against churches. [82619]

Mr. Stuart Bell: Guidance to parishes on church security is given through the publications of the Council for the Care of Churches. Its booklet "Safe and Sound: a Guide to Church Security", was sent to all incumbents some three years ago. This booklet addresses the complex problems of security in churches, and specifically recommends the establishment of church watch schemes.

In my answer to my hon. Friend on 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 16, I gave details of the Church Risk Management Group in the Diocese of Leicester, which is an admirable scheme for advising parishes on potential risks. Details of the scheme have already been given to other dioceses. Similar schemes are in force in other parts of the country.

Church Repairs

41. Miss McIntosh: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what plans the commissioners have to give assistance to churches for the cost of repairs. [82620]

Mr. Stuart Bell: Responsibility for the maintenance of Church of England churches in use for worship rests with the parochial church councils concerned and not with the Commissioners, who have no general statutory power to assist. The Commissioners main spending priorities are the support of the serving clergy, clergy pensioners and their dependents.

Commission Properties (Essex)

43. Mr. Amess: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what recent representations he has received on the state of the commission's properties in Essex. [82622]

Mr. Stuart Bell: No representations have been received by the Church Commissioners on either their agricultural holdings or commercial properties in Essex.

PRIME MINISTER

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if it is a precondition for a cessation of air hostilities in Kosovo that all Kosovars be permitted a guaranteed return to their place of residence of March 1999. [83729]

The Prime Minister: The NATO Summit statement issued on 23 April spelt out clearly that there could be no compromise on a number of conditions including the need for President Milosevic to agree to the unconditional and safe return of all refugees and displaced persons. The statement said that, as long as Belgrade fails to meet the legitimate demands of the international community and continues to inflict immense human suffering, Alliance air operations will continue. This remains the position.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy on the partition of Kosovo. [83403]

The Prime Minister: We are seeking a political solution to the crisis based on the Rambouillet Accords. The partition of Kosovo is not on our agenda.

Spain

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister for what reason Spain was decided upon as the partner for co-operation in a working group on employment and economic reform; to what extent Gibraltar will feature in this; and what will be the budget. [83742]

The Prime Minister: The Government build alliances with other Member States on a range of issues under discussion in the EU both to deepen bilateral relations and to influence the wider EU debate. Work with Spain on employment and economic reform is one example, reflecting a shared approach on many of these issues. The Working Group was established to bring together various strands of existing collaborative work. There is no requirement for a dedicated budget. Gibraltar will not be a focus of the Group's work.

Romania

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if he discussed Romania's application to join Nato during his recent visit to Bucharest; and if he will make a statement. [83580]

The Prime Minister: In my speech to the Romanian Parliament I said that Romania was at the forefront of the aspiring NATO members, that I wanted Romania to be on a fast track to NATO membership, and that I was confident that Romania would be one of the next countries to be admitted as a full member of the Alliance.

Government Policy Presentation (Europe)

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what instructions he has given to Ministers and civil servants about their influence on public opinion towards (a) the European Union and (b) British membership of the euro; [81431]

(2) what instructions he has given about the media presentation of (a) issues concerning the European Union and (b) British membership of the euro. [81433]

The Prime Minister: Our relationship with our European partners is based upon principles of positive engagement and co-operation. This has enabled us to strengthen our influence in Europe without compromising our national interests.

To help support this new constructive relationship a Ministerial Group for European Co-ordination (MINECOR) was established in December 1998. The members of the MINECOR group are Ministers from all UK Government departments which have an interest in European policy issues. The objective of the group is to achieve greater co-ordination of the presentation of HMG's European policies both within the UK and overseas. To that end, the group considers papers which give guidance to Ministers and officials on the presentation of government policy on Europe. The group also monitors Government efforts to develop closer co-operation with other EU partners and EU applicant countries. The group meets on a regular basis and is chaired by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Ms Quin).

The Government's policy on the euro was set out by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his statement to the House on 27 October 1997, Official Report, columns 583–88.

All contacts with the media and the public are carried out in accordance with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Guidance on the Work of the Government Information Service offers additional guidance on the presentation of Government policy and information through the media, publicity and advertising.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on Government responsibility after 1 July, for the authorisation for disposal of radioactive waste, subject to the Radioactive Substances Act 1993, which originates in Scotland but is disposed of in England. [83710]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the letter I wrote to him on 6 May, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many factory inspectors there are in Northern Ireland; and how many are trained in the health and safety aspects of asbestos removal. [83061]

Mr. Ingram: At present there are 32 Health and Safety Inspectors covering the employment sectors for which the HSENI has responsibility.

Two Health and Safety Inspectors have received training in the safety aspects of asbestos removal, one of whom is the Principal Inspector with responsibility for occupational health issues.

Asbestos Removal Companies

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many certified asbestos removal companies operate in Northern Ireland; and how many were visited by a factory inspector in the last year for which figures are available. [83062]

Mr. Ingram: On 31 March 1999, 23 companies were licensed to undertake work with asbestos insulation or asbestos coating in Northern Ireland.

During the year 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999, 12 of the 23 companies were visited by a Health and Safety Inspector and 23 site inspections were carried out.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many extra inspectors the Health and Safety Executive in Northern Ireland aims to recruit. [83063]

Mr. Ingram: The Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland was established on 1 April 1999. Its board is currently considering the recommendations of the report of a needs analysis carried out by J. Rimington, a former Director General of the Health and Safety Executive. The outcome of these deliberations will advise future policy as regards the recruitment of extra Inspectors.

Planning

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the planning services and procedures for enforcement indicating the priority given to ensuring enforcement of planning conditions laid down by the Planning Appeals Commission. [82920]

Mr. Paul Murphy: It is the responsibility of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland under the Planning (NI) Order 1991, where it considers it expedient to do so, to take enforcement action against all breaches of planning control. Each case is considered on its merits and no special priority is given to ensuring enforcement of conditions laid down by the Planning Appeals Commission.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Planning Appeals Commission's handling of recent cases in Derry. [82903]

Mr. Paul Murphy: In the last year, in the Derry District Council Area, the Planning Appeals Commission (PAC) heard 22 appeals. Of these, 18 were allowed and 4 dismissed. The PAC also held 2 inquiries on which the Department of the Environment (NI) has now made its decisions. In one case, the Department accepted the recommendation of the PAC to grant planning permission; in the other, although the PAC recommended that the application should be refused, the Department, having considered all relevant planning issues, concluded that planning permission should be granted.

The PAC is an entirely independent body and it would not be appropriate for the Secretary of State to comment on the handling of cases by the PAC or on the merits of PAC decisions.

University First Degree Courses

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students, normally domiciled in the Western Education and Library Board area are currently enrolled in full-time university first degree courses; and what is the number of full-time university first degree places in the Western Education and Library Board area. [82921]

Mr. McFall: The information is not available in the form requested. However there are 5,511 students domiciled in the Western Education and Library Board area currently receiving financial support to attend full-time first degree courses at universities in the UK and Republic of Ireland.

The only university site located in the Western Education and Education Library Board is the Magee campus of the University of Ulster. There are currently 1,292 students enrolled on full-time first degree courses at the Magee campus.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Extended Sentences

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many extended sentences have been passed on (a) sexual offenders and (b) violent offenders under the provisions of section 58 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [83346]

Mr. Boateng: Section 58 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 was implemented on 30 September 1998. Provisional information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database indicates that no extended sentences were imposed in the last three months of 1998. This is not surprising as the provisions apply only to offences committed after the commencement date, and therefore, few cases would have concluded in 1998. Data for 1999 are not yet available.

Sex Offender Orders

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many sex offender orders have been (a) applied for and (b) made under section 2 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [83347]

Mr. Boateng: To date, we are aware of three Sex Offender Orders having been granted. No information is held centrally to indicate the number of Sex Offender Orders which have been applied for.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of police officer vacancies of all ranks within the Metropolitan police force; and if he will make a statement. [83370]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan police has provided a comparison between the 31 March 1999 budgeted manpower target levels and actual strengths. It should be noted that the target figures may be varied during any year by the Metropolitan police's Policy Board and this will change the number of vacancies at any one time. Vacancies are filled by recruitment and selection processes.

Rank	Budgeted manpower targets	Strength	Variation of numbers
Commander and above	46	43	–3
Superintendent	172	169	–3
Detective Superintendent	65	58	–7
Chief Inspector	223.5	214	–9.5
Detective Chief Inspector	159	154.6	–4.4
Inspector	914	888.4	–25.6
Detective Inspector	366.5	317.6	–48.9
Sergeant	3,234.7	3,250.68	15.98
Detective Sergeant	1,114	1,072.50	–41.5
Constable	17,356.7	17,797.57	440.87
Detective Constable	2,819.7	2,597.78	–221.92

Computer Technology (Police)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if all police divisions in England and Wales now have computer technology to communicate with each other; and if he will make a statement. [83368]

Mr. Boateng: I am advised by the Police Information Technology Organisation (PITO) that the majority of forces have access to either the X.400 Messaging Service, available on the Police National Network (PNN), or the Internet Mail System. All forces can also access the PNN Telephony Service and the Packet Data Service (X.25) which provides access to the Police National Computer. Internal data communication systems within individual forces vary in size and sophistication.

Corruption

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that (i) Article 2 and (ii) Article 6 of the European Convention on the Fight against Corruption are enforced in United Kingdom law; and which agency will have the task of (a) investigation and (b) prosecution of offences under these articles. [83569]

Mr. Boateng: Arrangements are underway for the United Kingdom to ratify the European Union Corruption Convention in September this year. The Convention does not give rise to the need for legislation in the United Kingdom.

Alleged offences of active or passive corruption of the kind referred to in Articles 2 and 6 of the European Union Corruption Convention are investigated primarily by the police whose role is to investigate offences which are committed within United Kingdom jurisdiction. Prosecutions are carried out by the usual prosecuting authorities, which in the main will be the Crown Prosecution Service. These procedures will continue in force following the ratification of the European Union Corruption Convention.

"Break the Chain" Campaign

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many copies of the leaflet associated with the "Break the Chain" campaign have been printed; and at what cost. [83567]

Kate Hoey: 751,000 copies of the leaflet "Break the Chain: what you can do about domestic violence" have been published in English and 30,000 in Welsh. The costs for the English version were £49,340 and for the Welsh, £5,040.

Prisoners (Self-harm)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of self-harm occurred in prison between April 1998 and March 1999 broken down by (a) age, (b) gender and (c) category of prisoner. [83594]

Mr. George Howarth: Self-harm statistics available centrally do not allow for a break down by age or by individual category of prisoner. The numbers of self-harm incidents reported by Prison Service establishments covering the period September 1997 to October 1998, the last 12 month period for which complete statistics are currently available, and broken down by broad prison category and gender, are given in the table.

Broad category of prison	Number of incidents relating to Female	Male
Closed training prison	279	969
Dispersal prison	0	161
Immigration detention centre	0	6
Local prison	767	3,393
Open training prison	6	10
Young offenders institution	0	1,424
Total	1,052	5,963

Seclusion Rooms (Prisoners)

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for the period April 1998 to March 1999 (a) the number of occasions on which prisoners were placed in seclusion rooms and (b) the average number of hours spent per occasion in seclusion. [83692]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information, for the calendar year 1998, is for those inmates held in protective rooms and special cells for temporary confinement in prisons in England and Wales and is given in the table. Information on the average number of hours spent in such confinement is not centrally available.

Persons held in protective rooms and special cells for temporary confinement in prisons in England and Wales 1998 [1]

Type of confinement	1998
On medical grounds:
Protective rooms for temporary confinement[2]	375
On non-medical grounds:
Special cells/unfurnished cells (other than protective rooms) for temporary confinement[3]	2,557

[1] Provisional data

[2] Under Rule 46(6), Prison Rules 1964, Rule 49(6) Young Offender Institution Rules, 1988. Number of times used where the period of confinement exceeded 24 hours.

[3] Under Rule 45, Prison Rules 1964, Rule 48 Young Offender Institution Rules, 1988. Number of times used.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the terms of reference of the review of the law on retaining personal data relating to DNA profiles taken from persons for elimination purposes; and if the Data Protection Registrar has been asked to contribute to the review. [83797]

Mr. George Howarth: There are no formal Terms of Reference for the review of current legislation. We intend to consult widely on any proposals for change, and this will include an approach to the Data Protection Registrar.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce regulations to prohibit unrestricted transfer of personal data from electoral rolls to persons in countries which offer an inadequate level of protection; what conclusion his departmental working party has reached on access to electoral data for non-electoral purposes; and if he will make a statement. [83796]

Mr. George Howarth: The electoral register is by statute a public document and there is no provision to restrict subsequent transfers of information obtained from it. The Home Office Working Party on Electoral Procedures which I chair is looking at the question of access to electoral data for non-electoral purposes, and I expect it to report to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary later in the summer on this and the other issues it is considering.

Rule 43 Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were serving prison sentences and being held under Rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales on 30 April. [83584]

Mr. George Howarth: The most recent available provisional information is for 31 March 1999. On that date, the number of inmates held on Prison Rule 43 or Young Offender Institution Rule 46 were:

	Good order and discipline	Own protection
Males	305	982
Females	5	17
Total	310	999

Green Transport Plan

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82833]

Mr. Straw: Since last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which set targets for the introduction of green transport plans for Government Departments, we have completed four plans covering all our headquarters and main buildings.

We are developing plans for all other key buildings in line with the target for March 2000, set in the Integrated Transport White Paper.

Road Safety (Lancashire)

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of Lancashire Constabulary's proposal to pilot the Victoria Initiative to improve road safety. [83782]

Mr. Boateng: Proposals from Lancashire Constabulary and Lancashire County Council are under consideration and we expect to reach a conclusion shortly.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much public money was spent in the latest year for which figures are available on experimentation involving animals. [83498]

Mr. George Howarth: Each year, the Home Office makes available to the Animal Procedures Committee a budget to sponsor work aimed at developing or promoting the use of alternatives (which replace animal use, reduce the number of animals used in particular procedures or refine the protocols involved to minimise suffering). Work aimed at improving the environmental conditions in which laboratory animals are kept and transported is also sponsored.

In developing replacement alternatives, animals do sometimes have to be used to produce comparative data that can be used to assess and validate the alternative. Reduction and refinement alternatives will still use animals, but will use fewer animals or cause less suffering to those animals.

Of a total budget of £259,000 for 1998–99, £63,000 was allocated to programmes that involve the use of animals. In each case, the aim of the work was the development of reduction, refinement or replacement alternatives.

We do not have information on the public money spent on animal experimentation by other Government Departments.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Birth Certificates

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list those purposes for which her Department and its executive agencies require a birth certificate to be provided by (a) employees, (b) contractors, (c) those applying for employment or contracts and (d) other persons. [83357]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Government Departments and their respective executive agencies may ask individuals to provide their birth certificate in a range of circumstances. An individual's birth certificate is used for the purpose of providing evidence of their date of birth or identity.

Non-Departmental Public Bodies

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement about the Northern Ireland Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies 1998 Report. [83946]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have today published the NI Executive NDPB 1998 Report (CM 4334) which has been laid before both Houses. This is the first report covering the activities of all Northern Ireland Executive NDPBs with the exception of those which are the responsibility of the NIO, which are covered in the recently published Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies 1998 Report (Command Number 4157). These reports demonstrate the Government's policy of making public bodies more efficient, transparent and accountable.

The Northern Ireland Executive NDPB 1998 Report brings together performance and trend data on the 40 Executive NDPBs sponsored by Northern Ireland Civil Service Departments. Between them these NDPBs have expenditure budgets amounting to £1.3 billion and employ almost 24,000 staff. They provide a range of important services to the public in Northern Ireland and it is appropriate that their performance is reported upon in the same way as for large executive NDPBs in Great Britain.

The individual entries covering key performance measures and business summary data show that some NDPBs are performing well in terms of meeting stretching performance targets and delivering more efficient and effective services. There are some areas of weakness however: not all NDPBs have adequate performance measures in place and, in particular, proper measures of efficiency. While many of the bodies are small both in terms of staff numbers and the amount of taxpayers' money they receive, it is important that all should develop measures of performance and efficiency which demonstrate how well they are working for the community they serve. I trust that the publication of this report will encourage all NDPBs in Northern Ireland to address shortcomings in performance measurement and consider initiatives to secure improvements in overall performance.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal for Young People

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will investigate the reasons for New Deal for Young People participants who joined in July 1998 still being in the Gateway six months later; and if he will make a statement. [82738]

Mr. Andrew Smith: There have been a number of factors contributing to young people staying on the Gateway for longer than four months. In the majority of cases young people have had significant breaks from New Deal or are the subject of sanctions. Reasons for breaks include sickness and short-term employment; if a young person leaves the Gateway and subsequently returns within 13 weeks, they re-enter the Gateway at the point at which they left. Young people who are the subject of sanctions are currently classified as being on the Gateway.

We have taken a concerted series of initiatives with New Deal Personal Advisers and partner organisations designed to reduce further the number of young people staying more than four months on the Gateway, when this is not due to breaks in their participation. We will also be using the provision announced in the budget to pilot more intensive Gateway measures and to enable the fourth month of Gateway to focus more sharply on a job or option-outcome.

PE Teachers

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students on initial teacher training are specialising in PE as part of their course. [83246]

Ms Estelle Morris: There are currently 3,570 secondary physical education initial teacher training (ITT) students and 29,748 primary ITT students in England. Primary ITT students are trained to deliver the whole national curriculum including physical education. Information on the numbers of primary ITT students specialising in physical education is not held centrally.

SSAs (Comparability)

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of school budgets were spent on teachers' salaries in 1998–99 in (a) Northumberland and (b) Slough. [83542]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information about actual, as opposed to budgeted expenditure on teachers' salaries in 1998–99 will not be available until April 2000.

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will list the funding made available in the 1999–2000 standard spending assessment for each (a) primary and (b) secondary pupil in (i) Northumberland and (ii) Slough; [83544]

(2) what factors account for the differences in standard spending assessment funding in 1999–2000 between (a) Northumberland and (b) Slough. [83545]

Ms Estelle Morris: The table sets out the information requested. Slough receives more education SSA funding per pupil than Northumberland mainly because of three factors—area costs, the proportion of children entitled to free school meals and the proportion of children from ethnic minorities.

LEA	Primary SSA per pupil	Secondary SSA per pupil
Northumberland	2,240	2,877
Slough	2,739	3,603

Technology Colleges

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he expects to announce the latest round of successful bids for technology college status. [83467]

Ms Estelle Morris: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to announce the new Technology and Language Colleges in mid-June.

Wirral Metropolitan College

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will place in the Library copies of the draft reports prepared for the FEFC by the inspectors of Wirral Metropolitan College. [83690]

Mr. Mudie: Copies of the FEFC inspection report on Wirral Metropolitan College have been placed in the Library as stated in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend on 21 April 1999, Official Report, column 558.

Headteachers' Pay Awards

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many headteachers will receive the maximum pay award this year. [83757]

Ms Estelle Morris [holding answer 10 May 1999]: Pay awards will vary according to individual circumstances, and will depend on a headteacher's position on the existing pay spine and whether the school will move to a higher range on the new pay spine when its weighted pupil numbers are recalculated in the restructuring. The figure of 9.5 per cent. which has been quoted represents the average increase payable to the 2,970 headteachers of small primary schools with fewer than 100 pupils.

Hackney Education Authority

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what decision he has reached on the proposed intervention in Hackney Education Authority; and if he will publish lists of organisations which may be invited to bid for work as service providers in failing local education authorities. [84049]

Ms Estelle Morris: On 19 March my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to Hackney to inform them that, following Ofsted's second critical report, he was minded to direct the Director of Education to contract out the School Improvement Service (SIS) and the Ethnic Minority Achievement Service (EMAS—formerly the Language and Learning Service) and asked them for their views. KPMG were appointed to draw up specifications for this work and also advise on the case for contracting out the ICT, Finance and Personnel Services. KPMG have now reported and I am today announcing the next steps for Hackney.

I am also publishing the list of organisations who may be invited to bid for work as service providers in failing LEAs and a list of those who may be used for consultancy work. Discussions are continuing with a number of organisations which may be added to the service provider list in the near future.

My right hon. Friend has written to Hackney today to confirm that we have accepted KPMG's advice that the next steps will involve contracting out the work of the School Improvement Service and the Ethnic Minority Achievement Service. The Government are inviting a number of organisations to bid for this work. We aim to have a contractor in place shortly to take on the functions of the SIS. The functions of the Ethnic Minority Achievement Service will transfer to the contractor on 1 April 2000 by which time the LEA will have reorganised this service to take account of the fact that most of the funding for extra teaching support now goes directly to schools.

Following advice from KPMG, my right hon. Friend has decided that ICT, Finance and Personnel should not be added to the package at this stage as the LEA has taken a number of important steps to improve the delivery of these services—including making key appointments and drawing up rigorous action plans. We will monitor these services very carefully and will not hesitate to add them to the contract if improvements are not delivered quickly.

Six organisations will be awarded framework contracts for possible consultancy work relating to LEA interventions. They are KPMG, Lorien, Capita, Office of Public Management, PriceWaterhouseCoopers and Arthur Andersen/Birmingham LEA.

Ten organisations succeeded in gaining places on the current list of those who may be invited to bid for contracts as service providers in LEAs. They are Arthur Andersen/Birmingham LEA/APS Keele, Cambridge Education Associates, Nord Anglia, Hampshire LEA, The Education Partnership, Capita, CfBT, Essex LEA/Windsor and Co., Include and CEM Consortium.

Green Transport Plan

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82835]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Since last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which set targets for the introduction of green transport plans for Government Departments, we have completed five plans covering all our headquarters and main buildings. The Employment Service have also completed a plan covering their headquarters and main buildings.

We are developing plans for all other key buildings in line with the target for March 2000 set in the Integrated Transport White Paper.

WALES

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what role the Environment Agency in Wales plays in monitoring experiments in genetically modified crops. [82221]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: None. The Government are advised on experimental releases of genetically modified organisms by the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE). ACRE carry out an assessment of each application and advise the Government about the risks posed to human health and the environment; whether or not a consent should be granted; and whether any risk management of the release should be required as a condition of the consent. ACRE take a case by case approach to each application, taking into account the specific circumstances of the proposed release or marketing. The consents are enforced by the Health and Safety Executive specialist inspectors.

The Secretary of State for Wales' responsibilities in this area are shortly to transfer to the National Assembly for Wales.

National Assembly (Facilities)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what (a) reciprocal and (b) other arrangements have been made for hon. Members to use facilities at the National Assembly of Wales. [83239]

Mr. Michael: This will be a matter for the Assembly to consider.

NHS (Allocations)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much NHS modernisation fund money has been allocated to the NHS in Wales (a) in total and (b) by health authority; and on what date the allocations were made. [83254]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones [holding answer 4 May 1999]: There is no specific NHS modernisation fund in Wales but, as reported in my right hon. Friend's answer on 31 March 1999, Official Report, columns 719–20, health authority allocations for 1999–2000 are being increased by £168 million.

Following the transfer of functions, this will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Green Transport Plan

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82829]

Mr. Hain: Since last July's Integrated Transport White Paper which set targets for the introduction of green transport plans we have been working on a range of measures to encourage greener travel. These will be included in our Green Transport Plan for Cathays Park which is due to be completed by 31 May.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Freemasons (CPS)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 23 April 1999, Official Report, column 699, on freemasons, what further plans he has in relation to the CPS lawyers who declined to say whether or not they were freemasons and those who did not respond. [83375]

The Solicitor-General: CPS lawyers, in accordance with Government policy, were invited to disclose freemasonry membership. As this was always a voluntary exercise, no further action is intended with regard to those lawyers.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what data he has collated on the possibility that spent nuclear fuel has been imported for the purpose of sham reprocessing at Sellafield as defined by the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's September 1997 report on the Import and Export of Radioactive Waste; in respect of which countries; and if he will make a statement; [83265]

(2) if his Department will conduct a study into how the tests for sham reprocessing recommended in the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee's September 1997 report on the Import and Export of Radioactive Waste might be incorporated into UK law; and if he will make a statement. [82826]

HOUSE OF COMMONS PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES (HANSARD) ● 1998-99
CHADWYCK-HEALEY Vol. 331 cols. WA83 - 272 10 - 21 May 1999

Mr. Battle [holding answer 5 May 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Chaytor) on 10 February 1998, Official Report, column 206.

Wind Generation

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the proportion of UK energy generated by wind turbines in (a) 1999, (b) 2000, (c) 2001 and (d) 2002. [83320]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 5 May 1999]: The Department has estimated that electricity generation from wind turbines will grow from 750 GWh in 1999 to 1,000 GWh in 2000; 1,300 GWh in 2001 and 1,600 GWh in 2002.

Accountancy Regulation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to provide that accountancy firms criticised in DTI inspectors' reports are required (a) to state that they have understood the criticisms and (b) to demonstrate that they have taken steps to deal with shortcomings. [82646]

Mr. Ian McCartney: No. It would be for the appropriate recognised professional body to consider whether any action needed to be taken by a firm criticised in an inspectors' report. The new framework of regulation for the accountancy profession, which I announced recently, will provide for the independent Investigation and Discipline Board to consider such a case where it raises significant issues of public concern.

Intentional Communities

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from Leicester Children's Holiday Centre about the interpretation of an intentional community as defined by the National Minimum Wage Act 1998; and if he will make a statement. [83009]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Low Pay Commission has passed copies of its recent correspondence with the Leicester Children's Holiday Centre (as to whether the Centre might be regarded as an intentional community and thus exempted from the national minimum wage) to my Department.

The Low Pay Commission recommended that members of intentional communities should be regarded as volunteers rather than workers and therefore should not be covered by the minimum wage. The Government accept this recommendation and propose to introduce a suitable amendment to the National Minimum Wage Act 1998 through the Employment Relations Bill which is currently before Parliament.

Officials are considering all representations on this issue. The amendment itself will be drawn as tightly as possible to ensure that only genuine intentional communities are exempted.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd), of 3 February 1999, Official Report, column 622, what intentional organisations currently have immunity from export prohibitions under the terms of the Intentional Organisations (Immunities and Privileges) Act 1968. [83025]

Dr. Howells: Copies of the Orders in Council which confer this immunity are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking on the Low Pay Commission's Review of the National Minimum Wage Accommodation offset, with specific reference to intentional communities. [83010]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We have accepted the Commission's recommendation that there should be no immediate change to the rate of the accommodation offset in the National Minimum Wage Regulations but that the Commission should monitor the use and impact of the offset and report on its future application in their second report.

The Commission also recommended that members of intentional communities should be regarded as volunteers rather than workers and therefore should not be covered by the minimum wage. The Government accept this recommendation and propose to introduce a suitable amendment to the 1998 Act through the Employment Relations Bill which is currently before Parliament.

Military Exports (Yugoslavia)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what applications his Department has received from Allivane for licences for the export of military equipment to Yugoslavia since 1989. [83287]

Dr. Howells: Companies House records have confirmed that Allivane Limited was dissolved on 24 March 1987.

Export Credit Guarantees

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) of 21 April 1999, Official Report, column 552, which British Aerospace contracts were given EGCD guarantees in 1997–98 in Colombia; and what level of cover was involved. [83282]

Mr. Wilson: The British Aerospace contract for business in Colombia in 1997–98 is in respect of the UK share (US$23m) of two Airbus A320–200s. ECGD supported 85 per cent. of the UK share.

World Trade Organisation

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date he expects the European Union to introduce a banana regime which is in compliance with the ruling of the World Trade Organisation. [83310]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 5 May 1999]: It is unclear how quickly the European Union can amend the banana regime to bring it into compliance with the ruling of the World Trade Organisation. The Council has asked the Commission to provide proposals by the end of May. However, the forthcoming elections to the European Parliament are likely to delay their approval of a new regime until at least September. In the meantime, we are pressing the Commission to find an interim arrangement which could be agreed quickly and which would displace US retaliation against EU industries.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate how many British jobs have been put at risk by the trade sanctions of the United States authorised by the Word Trade Organisation. [83311]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 5 May 1999]: In terms of the historical levels of exports to the US in each sector, it is not possible to say what the overall impact on British jobs might be. Much depends on how long the retaliatory measures remain in place, the ability of affected businesses to find alternative customers for their products, the extent to which orders have been brought forward before these measures took effect and local labour market conditions.

Single Market Action Plan

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library the three single market scoreboards published during the Single Market Action Plan. [83399]

Mr. Wilson: All three single market scoreboards referred to have already been placed in the Library of the House. The first, second and third editions of the scoreboard can be found under the references SEC(97)2196, SEC(98)889 and SEC(98)1889 respectively.

EU Competitiveness

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his contribution to the open debate on the competitiveness of EU industry in the light of globalisation, conducted at the Industry Council on 29 April; and what reports he has received about the reaction of other EU Governments to his contribution. [83740]

Mr. Byers: My noble Friend the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe represented the UK at the EU Industry Council held on 29 April.

During the open debate, my noble Friend highlighted what the UK saw as the key themes for the competitiveness of the EU in the face of globalisation. These were the need to improve risk taking and encourage innovation, update the EU patent system, strengthen the Internal Market and improve higher education/industry links. He also commented that to secure progress on all these themes the UK considered that changes in the structure of EU Councils, and of the Commission, were essential to promote greater coherence in decision-making, affecting competitiveness.

These ideas were echoed in many other Ministers' interventions during the debate and were reflected in the Chairman's summing up.

Ilisu Dam (Turkey)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department and the ECGD have taken to investigate the matters highlighted in the independent study of the Ilisu Dam project commissioned by the Swiss Government. [82712]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 10 May 1999]: ECGD are involved in continuing discussions with other Export Credit Agencies, the commercial parties and the authors of the Reports about these matters. They are also consulting experts in the UK.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library copies of (a) the environmental impact assessment produced in 1998 in connection with the Ilisu Dam project in Turkey, (b) the independent study subsequently commissioned in respect of the project by the Swiss Government, (c) the minutes of the meetings of the Export Credits Guarantee Department at which the environmental and social impact of the project was discussed and (d) the current procedures of the Export Credits Guarantee Department for assessing the environmental impact of projects it supports, and for raising awareness of these issues among its customers. [82711]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 10 May 1999]: The Environmental Impact Assessment Report and the independent study commissioned by the Swiss government in respect of the Ilisu project in Turkey are not our documents and can be made available only with the consent of the owners. I understand that it is the intention to make available the Environmental Impact Assessment Report once the contract has been awarded, and I will ensure that a copy is placed in the Library of the House. Minutes of ECGD meetings are not disclosed for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Consistent with the Government's policy on the environment, the Export Credits Guarantee Department (ECGD) is supporting multilateral moves in the OECD to establish common principles, to be adopted by Export Credit Agencies, to take account of environmental factors in export credits. ECGD takes account of environmental factors, particularly in its assessment of large project finance cases, and is undertaking further work, in consultation with environmental consultants and its customers, to determine the best means of further enhancing its policy and procedures, and of raising the awareness of UK exporters, investors and overseas buyers on its approach to environmental issues. Relevant documents will be placed in the Library of the House when this process is complete. It would be premature for me to make a statement at this point in time.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement regarding eligibility for the Shipbuilding Intervention Fund. [83892]

Mr. Battle: I have decided to extend eligibility for the Shipbuilding Intervention Fund immediately to two shipyards: those of FBM Lairdside Ltd. at Birkenhead and Ailsa-Troon Ltd. at Troon. I will consider similar applications from any other yard which is currently disqualified from applying for Shipbuilding Intervention Fund grants.

Access to the Shipbuilding Intervention Fund will enhance the competitiveness of the companies and is a crucial component of the financing packages which are offered to customers. This will enable both yards to compete more effectively in tough international markets and I very much hope it will assist them to secure future orders and jobs.

In making this announcement, I would like to recognise the considerable support the applicants have been given by hon. Members, locally elected representatives and Community Groups.

This announcement is subject to formal approval from the Commission of the European Union.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a copy of the W. S. Atkins reports on the year 2000 preparedness of the oil and gas industry. [83826]

Mr. Wills: Copies of the Executive Summary of both reports were placed in the Library of the House in answer to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, East and Mexborough (Mr. Ennis) on 21 April 1999, Official Report, columns 553–55 and made available to the public on the Internet. These Executive Summaries provide a clear and accurate synopsis of the full reports. To prepare meaningful and accurate assessments it was essential that the industry provided full and frank access to DTI's assessor WS Atkins but the detailed information presented in the full report is commercially sensitive and was made available to the Department on the basis that it would not be published.

Recording Media

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what restrictions he plans to introduce on home taping; [83828]

(2) what plans he has to introduce a levy on (a) video cassettes, (b) video cassette recorders and (c) other audio recording products; and if he will make a statement. [83830]

Dr. Howells: There are no plans to introduce levies in the United Kingdom on blank tapes, other recording media or recording equipment, nor do we have any plans to restrict the "time-shifting" exception in UK copyright law which allows home recording of broadcasts to enable viewing or listening at a more convenient time.

An amendment proposed by the European Parliament to the draft EU Directive on copyright and related rights in the information society would require that right owners receive "fair compensation" where exceptions to rights are provided in national law permitting private copying of protected material on audio or audiovisual recording media. However, we do not consider that a levy or other form of payment would be justified in relation to the UK's limited "time-shifting" exception. We are concerned that the overall approach to exception in the Directive is too prescriptive and we will continue to press for more flexibility for member states in this area.

EU Consumer Guarantee Directive

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the cost to United Kingdom business of the EU Consumer Guarantee Directive. [83829]

Dr. Howells: The Regulatory Appraisal attached to Explanatory Memorandum 9643–96, submitted to Parliament on 3 April 1998, concluded that the average additional recurring costs resulting from the Directive were likely to be up to 0.25 per cent. of consumer expenditure on durable and semi-durable goods; that there would be no change for non-durables; and that non-recurring costs might amount to a further 1–2 per cent. of annual recurring costs.

TREASURY

Money Markets (London)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the daily financial flows through the London money markets (a) in 1982, (b) in 1992 and (c) at the latest available date in (i) cash terms, (ii) current prices and (iii) as a percentage of annual gross domestic product for the year in question. [83244]

Ms Hewitt: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Aviation Taxes

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax yield to the UK Exchequer of imposing VAT on air travel, assuming that with international agreement a similar tax was imposed by other countries. [83351]

Dawn Primarolo: The information is not available.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax yield to the UK Exchequer of imposing VAT on aviation fuel at the same rate as on motor vehicle fuel, assuming that with international agreement a similar rate of tax was imposed by other countries. [83350]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise estimate the revenue gain to the UK exchequer as a result of introducing VAT on aviation fuel to be negligible.

Financial Services Agency

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the basis for his proposal to give the Financial Services Agency and its staff statutory immunity. [83700]

Ms Hewitt: The proposed statutory protection from liability in damages for the Financial Services Authority and its staff for actions carried out in good faith takes forward the existing form of immunity for regulators under the Financial Services Act 1986, the Banking Act 1987 and the Bank of England Act 1998. This was an issue commented on by the Joint Committee on Financial Services and Markets and we are currently considering their recommendations.

Pensions

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 2 March 1999, Official Report, column 642, on pensions, what large financial penalties are currently incurred by members moving from an occupational pension scheme; and how a pooled pension investment could be used to reduce these. [83706]

Ms Hewitt: People who leave defined benefit occupational pension schemes in mid-career get paid up rights or transfer values which, depending on the terms of the scheme, are often worth appreciably less than the pension rights their period of service would have earned at normal retirement age. Those who leave a job after a short period often get nothing.

In contrast, defined contribution pension schemes of all kinds provide individual investors with their own defined pension fund, allowing them to move jobs without these financial penalties. Pooled pension investments will be a particularly transparent vehicle for defined contribution schemes.

CAT Standards

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the charges and tax incentives of CAT marked ISAs to encourage fund managers to provide managed equity funds to savers. [83702]

Ms Hewitt: There are no plans to change the CAT standards, or the tax treatment of CAT standard ISAs. To date, around 400 providers have registered as ISA managers. I expect many of these to sell stocks and shares ISAs which invest in managed funds.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to publicise the meaning of a CAT standard. [83701]

Ms Hewitt: The Treasury press release of 1 October 1998 explained the meaning of CAT standards. The Inland Revenue and the Financial Services Authority have both published guides to ISAs which explain CAT standards, as did the Government's ISA advertising campaign. In addition, FSA requires firms which sell CAT standard products to provide straightforward information in the marketing literature which sets out how the standards are met. Many firms' own ISA guides also explain CAT standards.

Green Transport Plans

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82841]

Ms Hewitt: The Treasury introduced its Green Transport Plan in March 1999.

Landfill Tax Credit Scheme

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the take-up rate for the landfill tax credit scheme has been to date; and how many environmental projects have been funded through the scheme in (a) Coventry and (b) the United Kingdom. [83622]

Ms Hewitt: Persons registered for landfill tax may claim tax credits of 90 per cent. against contributions made to approved environmental bodies, up to a total of 20 per cent. of their annual tax liability, in each 'contribution year'. Credits claimed under the environmental bodies credit scheme since the introduction of the tax on 1 October 1996 to 31 March 1999 amount to £141 million. In the same period, total landfill tax revenue gross of claims to environmental bodies credits was £1.1 billion, giving rise to a maximum credit that could have been claimed of £220 million. Therefore, some 64 per cent. of available credits have been taken up.

The information requested about the number of environmental projects that have been funded is a matter for the Regulator for the environmental bodies credit scheme, ENTRUST Ltd. I have asked them to reply.

Environmental Taxation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce taxation measures designed to promote greater efficiency of resources and reductions in pollution levels. [83621]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's Statement of Intent on Environmental Taxation, published in July 1997, sets out the Government's policy on environmental taxation. It commits the Government to exploring the scope for using the tax system—as one instrument, in combination with others such as regulation and voluntary action—to secure environmental objectives, and details the criteria used to assess environmental taxes.

The March 1999 Budget contained the biggest package of environmental tax reforms ever announced in this country. This will provide continuing incentives for environmental improvement and underlines the Government's commitment to protect and, where possible, enhance our environment.

Details of the Budget 99 environmental tax package are contained in the 1999 Economic and Financial Strategy Report and Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Export Houses

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he took to ensure that each export house was consulted about the proposal to withdraw export house VAT provision. [83831]

Dawn Primarolo: The Consultation Paper was issued directly to all members of the Joint VAT Consultative Committee and to a number of other trade bodies and organisations with an interest in the subject. These included the British Exporters Association, which represents the main body of businesses which act as export houses. The review was also publicised by way of a Business Brief, distributed by the Central Office of Information to the media and to some 900 subscribers representing a variety of business interests.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which countries in the European Union currently allow an exemption from VAT for supplies to export houses; and if he will make a statement. [83836]

Dawn Primarolo: The exemption from VAT on supplies to export houses is an optional measure in EC VAT law and we have very scant information about other countries' use of the measure. Customs and Excise is taking up with the European Commission claims made by a number of British businesses that some other countries operate export house provisions which do not fully comply with EC law.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the organisations which replied to the consultation paper on the withdrawal of export house VAT provisions and indicate which were in favour and which were opposed. [83834]

Dawn Primarolo: As contributors were not advised that their responses would be made public, individual comments must remain confidential. Overall, from all replies received, the balance of representations was weighted equally for and against withdrawal.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the organisations to which the consultation paper on the withdrawal of export house VAT provisions was issued. [83833]

Dawn Primarolo: The organisations to which the consultation paper on the withdrawal of export house VAT provisions was initially issued were the Joint VAT Consultative Committee, the British Exporters Association, the Simpler Trade Procedures Boards (SITPRO) and the United Kingdom Oil Industry Taxation Committee. Subsequently copies were issued to more than one hundred and fifty enquirers, including Tax in Industry and the Institute of Export.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he took to ensure that companies likely to be affected by the withdrawal of the export house VAT provisions were notified of the change in good time. [83837]

Dawn Primarolo: The withdrawal of the export house VAT provisions on 1 April 1999 was publicised in June 1998 by means of a Business Brief and a VAT Information sheet. Each VAT registered trader was advised by means of VAT Notes 2/1998 (June 1998) and further reminded of the impending change in VAT Notes 4/1998 (December 1998).

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to UK export houses of the imposition of VAT on goods purchased for export. [83835]

Dawn Primarolo: It was not possible to arrive at any accurate figures for possible costs to export houses as insufficient evidence was provided in response to the Consultation Paper. However, by opting to change to monthly VAT periods, some export houses may gain a cash flow benefit.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Reproductive Health Projects

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the British Non-Governmental Organisations funded to carry out social marketing programmes in the area of reproductive health services, indicating the countries in which they operate. [83579]

Mr. Foulkes: The following table lists UK non-governmental organisations currently receiving the Department for International Development's support for Reproductive Health social marketing projects, together with a list of the countries in which they are operating:

British non-governmental organisations	Country
Futures Group, UK	Pakistan
Marie Stopes International	Nicaragua
International Family Health	India
Population Services International, Europe	Burma

In addition, a number of developing country based social marketing groups affiliated to UK non-governmental organisations receive bilateral support to implement subsidised marketing projects, including, for example, Marie Stopes International Uganda.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development from which budget lines under which EU directorates funding is available for population, sexual and reproductive health programmes in developing countries, and central and Eastern Europe. [83575]

Mr. Foulkes: The following budget lines are relevant:

B7 210 and B7 214—Humanitarian aid (which includes population, sexual and reproductive health programmes), in developing countries and in central and eastern Europe.

B7 543—Health programmes for the former Yugoslavia.

B7 6211—Programmes for HIV and AIDS related operations.

B7 631—Aid for population policies and programmes in developing countries.

B7 653—Campaign against sex tourism in developing countries.

B7 704—Grants to non-government organisations to promote and protect women's rights.

The non-budget European Development Fund for African, Caribbean and Pacific countries in the Lomé Convention also includes provision for health sector funding.

The Commission Directorates through which these funds are spent are DGVIII (Africa, Caribbean and the Pacific for EDF funds), DGIA (Central and Eastern Europe), DGIB (Asia and Latin America), the Common Service for External Relations which handles project implementation for the external assistance Directorates-General, and the European Community Humanitarian Office (ECHO).

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what family planning and reproductive health assistance is being provided by the United Kingdom Government for refugees from Kosovo in Albania and Macedonia; and if such aid includes emergency contraception for rape victims. [83577]

Mr. Foulkes: My Department is providing reproductive health assistance to Kosovar refugees through UNICEF and NGO programmes of mother and child healthcare. We are ready to consider assistance with specialist care for rape victims if requested to do so.

Street Children

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development from which budget lines under which EU directorates funding is available for street children programmes in developing countries and Central and Eastern Europe. [83574]

Mr. Foulkes: A new over-arching budget line, B7–612 entitled "Preparatory actions undertaken through non-governmental organisations (NGOs) in the campaign against child discrimination" is included in the 1999 EU budget. This appropriation is intended to co-finance NGO activities in support of the Declaration on the Rights of the Child and aims at combating violence against children and the exploitation of child labour and at providing support for schooling, and the provision of food and protection for street children. It will also cover co-financing with NGOs which are members of the European Network on Street Children Worldwide.

However, specific projects aimed at street children would normally be funded from the general budget line for financial and technical co-operation for the geographical area concerned: e.g. B7–31 for Latin America; B7–30 for Asia; B7–4 for Mediterranean and Middle-East; B7–5 for Central and Eastern Europe, New Independent States and Mongolia. In the case of African, Caribbean and Pacific countries, the funds would come not from the budget but from the European Development Fund, except for overarching budget lines such as B7–6 (Other Co-operation Measures) and B7–7 (European Initiative for Democracy and Human Rights) which apply to all countries.

The Commission Directorates through which these funds are spent are DGVIII (African, Caribbean and the Pacific for EDF funds), DGIA (Central and Eastern Europe), DGIB (Asia and Latin America), and the Common Service for External Relations which handles project implementation for the external assistance Directorates-General.

International Conference on Population and Development

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the members of the United Kingdom Government delegations to (a) the International forum on the five year review of the International Conference on Population and Development in The Hague, 8 to 12 February, (b) the Preparatory Committee meeting in New York, 23 March to 1 April and (c) the UN General Assembly Special Session on the ICPD review in New York, 30 June to 3 July; and if she will make a statement. [83576]

Mr. Foulkes: The United Kingdom Government delegations were made up as follows:

(a) ICPD Hague Forum, 8–12 February, 1999:

George Foulkes MP, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, DFID.

Professor John Hobcraft, London School of Economics, Special Adviser.

Ms Sandra Kabir, NGO Representative.

Six DFID officials (varying lengths of attendance).

(b) Preparatory Committee—ICPD+5, New York, 23 March-1 April 1999:

Professor John Hobcraft, London School of Economics, Special Adviser.

Ms Sandra Kabir, NGO Representative.

Ms Dilys Cossey, Parliamentary Adviser.

Five DFID officials (varying lengths of attendance).

(c) The Secretary of State intends to lead the delegation to the UN General Assembly Special Session on ICPD in New York, 30 June-2 July 1999. The remainder of the delegation has yet to be finalised.

Refugee Camps (Communications)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support has been received from British industry in establishing easily accessed communications systems for refugees in the camps of Macedonia and Albania. [83769]

Mr. Foulkes: The International Committee of the Red Cross, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other international agencies are seeking to ensure that refugees and displaced people in the camps have regular access to satellite, mobile and fixed phones as appropriate in order to re-establish family contacts. Where my department has received offers of support from British industry, they have been referred to these agencies.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress is being made in giving deportees in camps in Macedonia and Albania access to phones with which they can try to establish contact with lost friends, family and relatives. [83770]

Mr. Foulkes: The International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) leads on family tracing and reunification; ICRC, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and other international agencies are seeking to ensure that refugees and displaced people in the camps have regular access to satellite, mobile and fixed phones as appropriate in order to re-establish family contacts. The Department for International Development has contributed £2.5 million to ICRC, of which part will be used for family tracing.

Balkans (Family Tracing Schemes)

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps are being taken to support the work of (a) UNICEF and (b) other non-Governmental organisations with their family tracing schemes in the Balkans. [83708]

Mr. Foulkes: Reuniting separated families is an important part of our humanitarian assistance. Part of DFID's contributions of £2.25 million to United Nations children's Fund UNICEF and £2.5 million to the Red Cross are being used for family tracing activities. This will help Kosovar refugees to establish where their relatives have gone, and also to contact family members who have been sent to other countries without their consent.

Green Transport Plans

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for her Department. [82832]

Mr. Foulkes: Following last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which set targets for the introduction of green transport plans for Government departments, we will shortly complete the plan for our London headquarters building.

We are also developing a plan for our other key building in East Kilbride in line with the target for March 2000 set in the Integrated Transport White Paper.

Female Genital Mutilation

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the projects funded by her Department to support communities working to eradicate female genital mutilation. [83578]

Mr. Foulkes: Current DFID supported projects which address female genital mutilation comprise the following:

Countries/region	Project
Gambia	Women's Health Promotion—Genital Mutilation. It aims to mobilise communities in two districts for health promotion activities focusing on FGM. A total of £226,013 was committed.
Horn of Africa	Well woman media project to improve the reproductive health status of the people of the Somali speaking areas of the Horn of Africa, increasing the capacity of women to practise and enjoy safe sexual relationships and reducing FGM. A total of £200,000 was committed.
Burkina Faso	Health an Human Rights Approach to Overcoming Traditional Practices Harmful to Women. A total of £150,000 was committed.
Ghana, Egypt, Kenya, Tanzania, Ethiopia, Cameroon	Development of training materials and training of health care providers on FGM prevention and the management of health complications related to FGM. A total of £140,000 was committed.
Africa	Production and dissemination of a research manual. A total of £8,000 was committed.
Africa	Support to strengthen the Inter-African Committee on Traditional Practices in order to reduce the morbidity rates of women and children through FGM eradication working at the national, regional and international levels. A total of £400,000 has been allocated.

Commonwealth Debt Initiative

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the progress of the Commonwealth Debt Initiative, indicating which countries have received debt relief and the level of that relief. [83404]

Mr. Foulkes: Under the Government's Commonwealth Debt Initiative, we provide debt relief to poorer Commonwealth countries which are committed to the international development targets and are following sound economic policies which benefit the poor, which promote responsive and accountable government, encourage transparency and bear down on corruption. Since the Chancellor of the Exchequer launched the Initiative in September 1997, my Department has provided debt relief on aid loans to the following countries:

Barbados	0.23
Belize	1.15
Dominica	6.60
Grenada	3.31
Jamaica	12.80
Mauritius	1.10
St. Kitts and Nevis	0.43
St. Lucia	2.83
Solomon Islands	4.38
Tonga	0.44
Turks and Caicos	1.88

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Local Authority Spending

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the local authorities to which Ministers have written urging greater spending on local services within their portfolio area. [77957]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 22 March 1999]: None. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to all 149 Library Authorities in England in February 1999 drawing their attention to their statutory obligation to provide a comprehensive and efficient library service. It is a possibility, but by no means a certainty, that in some instances Library Authorities would need to spend more money to fulfil their statutory duty.

Museum Grants

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will establish a grant for museums to be set up in constituencies which are without them; and if he will make a statement on his Department's activities during Museums Week. [83568]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Historically, local museums relate to local authority areas which may cover several constituencies. Boundaries of constituencies change from time to time. What is important is that each community should have access to a local museum.

There are already some 2,500 museums in the UK, and it is the Government's priority to increase access to these museums, rather than to create new ones.

The Museums and Galleries Commission funds the network of Area Museum Councils in England which contributes to the funding of a number of museums and galleries. The Heritage Lottery Fund also provides funding for museums and galleries.

My Department has contributed £25,000 towards Museums Week 1999, which is a key annual event in raising public awareness of museums in the UK. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has written to all MPs and MEPs encouraging them to visit a museum in their constituency to promote the event.

Last year's event was a great success, and I hope that this year's will prove even more successful.

Convalescent Home (Osborne)

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what has been the average bed occupancy rate at King Edward VII convalescent home at Osborne in each of the last five years broken down between (a) residents and (b) convalescents. [83364]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information is as follows:

Percentage

Year	Residents[1]	Convalescents[2]
1994	64	33
1995	68	47
1996	80	53
1998	70	70

[1] Average occupancy per year
[2] Average occupancy per week

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many beds have been available for (a) residents and (b) convalescents in each of the last five years at King Edward VII convalescent home at Osborne. [83363]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information is as follows:

Year	Residents[1]	Convalescents
1994	25	15
1995	25	15
1996	20	20
1997	20	20
1998	30[2]	30

[1] Any unfilled residents beds were offered to convalescents whenever there was a demand.
[2] Registered beds reduced from 40 to 30 in 1998 with no distinction between residents and convalescents.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when it was decided that accommodation at King Edward VII convalescent home at Osborne would be available to other ranks as well as officers. [83361]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Order in Council extending eligibility to other ranks as well as officers was made on 21 July 1998.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many full-time equivalent persons have been employed at the King Edward VII convalescent home at Osborne in each of the last five years. [83360]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The information is as follows:

1998–99: 48.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proposals he has received from English Heritage to date for the future of the accommodation used by the King Edward VII convalescent home at Osborne; and by what date he has asked English Heritage to make any further proposals. [83359]

Mr. Alan Howarth: English Heritage is preparing conservation, management, business and development plans for the whole of the Osborne House estate which will include proposals for opening more of the Convalescent Home accommodation to the public, and offering the remainder for use by a private sector partner. I am expecting English Heritage to come forward with options later this year.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what alternatives to the Civil Service Benevolent Fund his Department has sought to manage the King Edward VII convalescent home at Osborne. [83358]

Mr. Alan Howarth: After very careful consideration, particularly of the question of financial viability, my right hon. Friend decided that it was no longer appropriate to run part of Osborne House as a convalescent home. In the light of this decision, no alternative managers for the convalescent home have been sought.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the Civil Service Benevolent Fund took over the running of King Edward VII convalescent home at Osborne; and what is the nature of their contract or other arrangement with (a) English Heritage and (b) his Department of the occupation of the premises. [83365]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Civil Service Benevolent Fund took over the running of the home on behalf of the Secretary of State on 1 July 1985. The terms under which the home is managed and maintained and the arrangements between my Department, English Heritage and the Civil Service Benevolent Fund are contained in an agreement with my Department which was last revised on 6 December 1996 and in the National Heritage Act 1983 (Osborne House) Directions 1986. English Heritage is responsible for the maintenance of the external fabric of the convalescent home and for the provision and payment of some other services including redecoration and the supply of some equipment.

Analogue Television Transmissions

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on what date analogue television transmissions will be ended. [83887]

Janet Anderson: The Government want to move to as early an announcement as possible of a date for the switch-over from analogue to digital television transmissions. However, this can be done only on the basis of a properly considered strategy set against the background of actual digital services winning public acceptance, and which protects those consumers who wish to receive free-to-air television services as well as those who are potentially excluded from the new technology. The Government expect to say more about the development of a strategy for analogue to digital migration before the Summer recess.

Television Licence Fees

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if it is the Government's policy that the television licence fee for televisions capable of receiving digital transmissions should be the same as for televisions only capable of receiving analogue transmissions. [83825]

Janet Anderson: The level of the licence fee for colour and black and white television sets will be determined until 2001–02 under a five year formula linked to RPI announced in December 1996. The review panel chaired by Gavyn Davies is considering, against an expectation that the licence fee will remain the principal source of funding for public services for the BBC Charter period to 2006, ways in which funding to support public service output can be extended from other sources. The review will report by the end of July 1999 and the Government will then consult on its findings.

CABINET OFFICE

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many applications for information he received under the Open Government: Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83111]

Dr. Jack Cunningham [holding answer 10 May 1999]: For monitoring purposes, the information is collected on a calender year basis. Information for 1997 was published last year in the Open Government: Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report. Between 1 January and 28 July 1998, when the then Office of Public Service (OPS) merged with the Cabinet Office, the OPS received 3 applications for information under the Code, of which 2 were granted. Arrangements are in hand to restore the Parliamentary Commissioner for Adminstration's formal remit to the position before the merger of OPS with the Cabinet Office. The remainder of the Cabinet Office, and the Prime Minister's Office do not come under the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration's jurisdiction are not covered by the Code of Practice.

Green Transport Plans

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) if he will make a statement on his Department's green transport plans; [82702]

(2) if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82837]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Cabinet Office intends to put a green transport plan in place by the end of this month. This plan will cover the headquarters office and the Cabinet Office Agencies.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the number of cases currently covered by legal aid which will not be taken up by solicitors operating under conditional fee agreements as a result of failure to meet risk assessment tests demanding a (a) 55 per cent., (b) 60 per cent., (c) 65 per cent., (d) 70 per cent. and (e) 75 per cent. likelihood of success. [83348]

Mr. Hoon: The Government remain satisfied that lawyers will be prepared to undertake meritorious cases under conditional fee agreements. With the ability, potentially, to double their fees, they can continue to be expected to take on cases which, in their professional opinion, are more likely to have a successful outcome than not. It can be in no one's interest for weak cases to be pursued, especially as the protection in costs afforded by legal aid can force defendants with good defences to offer settlements in the face of what are little more than blackmailing claims.

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to monitor the impact of the Government's decision to abolish legal aid for personal injury claims. [83349]

Mr. Hoon: We will monitor and evaluate the impact of all of the key reforms under the Access to Justice Bill, not just the decision to withdraw legal aid from most personal injury cases. The Legal Services Commission will have a duty to inform itself about the need for services, the provision of services, and the quality of the services provided. Much of this information will be provided by the Regional Legal Services Committees. In addition, we are in discussion with all the major interest groups, including those representing the consumers, the professions, and the insurance industry, about the design of a research project to evaluate all aspects of how conditional fees operate under the reformed law.

Census Returns

Mr. Austin: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what advice he has received from the Advisory Council on Public Records since its October 1998 meeting about the confidentiality period for decennial census returns; and if he will make a statement. [83396]

Mr. Hoon: I have received no such advice.

Green Transport Plans

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82831]

Mr. Hoon: My Department has introduced green transport plans at each of the three headquarters buildings of the Department and its main agencies. We are developing plans for our 53 other key buildings in line with the March 2000 target set in the Integrated Transport White Paper.

Public Record Office

Helen Jones: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the final outcome of the Quinquennial Agency Review of the Public Record Office. [83947]

Mr. Hoon: The Review concluded that the Public Record Office had greatly benefited from agency status and that it continued to perform an essential function of government. It recommended that the Public Record Office remain a Government Department and an executive agency. The Chief Secretary to the Treasury, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and the Lord Chancellor have accepted these conclusions.

The Review also recommended a fresh look at some elements of the Public Record Office's work and the exploration of further opportunities for private sector involvement. These recommendations were, where appropriate, carried forward within the Public Record Office's Comprehensive Spending Review and implemented.

The Public Record Office is now well placed to lead essential changes in the introduction of electronic record keeping in government and the provision of on-line services for the public. It is also leading on improving records management and storage across government. Its education programme is being expanded, particularly in the direction of internet services to benefit schools and lifelong learners nationally.

In the light of the Review recommendations and of the Comprehensive Spending Review, a new framework document has now been prepared to cover the next five years. This concludes the final stage of the Office's Quinquennial Review.

Copies of the Quinquennial Review evaluation report and of the revised framework document have been placed in the Library of both Houses.

SCOTLAND

Green Transport Plans

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82842]

Mr. Macdonald: My right hon. Friend is finalising a green transport plan for Victoria Quay, Edinburgh for discussion with staff representatives. This plan will cover around 1,400 civil servants, almost 40 per cent. of the total Scottish Office core staff. Further site-specific plans will be developed for the remainder of Scottish Officer headquarters buildings.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

PRIME MINISTER

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister how many applications for information he received under the Open Government: Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last Parliamentary Session and how many of these applications were granted. [83104]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 May 1999]: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer given to him today by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

"Rural England"

13. Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the consultation on the document "Rural England". [82793]

28. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the responses to the consultation on "Rural England"; and if he will make a statement on progress in implementing the proposals in the document. [82808]

Mr. Meacher: We have had a very encouraging response to the consultation document "Rural England", with close to 700 written submissions. We will be taking the views and ideas expressed into account as we proceed with work on the Rural White Paper.

London Underground

14. Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the public-private partnership proposals for London Underground. [82794]

Dr. Reid: London Transport have continued to progress the public-private partnership proposals, as set out in the progress report LT published in March. We anticipate bidders being invited to pre-qualify for the PPP competition shortly.

24. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his latest estimate of the date when the public-private partnership for London Underground will become operational. [82804]

Dr. Reid: We have made it clear that we are not going to set a fixed timetable for completing the PPP—our overriding aim is to secure best value.

Housing

16. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the most recent assessment of future requirements for housing in the north-east. [82796]

Ms Armstrong: The latest regional household projections were set out in my Department's press release of 29 March. These projections indicate that the number of households in the north-east at 2021 could total around 1.2 million.

26. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he plans to take to ensure that the planning system assists the creation of affordable housing in the countryside. [82806]

Mr. Caborn: Our policy is set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note 3: Housing, a revised draft of which has recently been issued for consultation, and in Circular 6/98. These provide for village infill and extension to help secure mixed and balanced rural communities and a rural "exceptions" policy where there is a demonstrable lack of affordable housing to meet local need.

36. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will adopt a target for two-thirds of new housing development to be built on brown-field sites; and if he will make a statement. [82816]

Mr. Caborn: The Government's target is for 60 per cent. of additional housing to be built on previously developed land. The draft Planning Policy Guidance note 3, Housing, recently issued for consultation, reaffirms our commitment to that target.

Greater London Authority

17. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress being made towards establishing the new Greater London Authority. [82797]

Mr. Raynsford: A great deal of work is going on across a number of fronts. We have, for example, made recent announcements about the permanent home for the GLA and the appointment of Dr. Robert Chilton to lead a team managing the transition arrangements for the Authority. Last week the GLA Bill successfully completed its passage through the Commons.

Flags of Convenience

18. Mr. Cawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the safety implications of the use of flags of convenience by ship owners. [82798]

Dr. Reid: Sub-standard shipping endangers the lives of passengers and crew and poses an increased risk to the marine environment. The UK Government are determined to tackle this problem by continued international efforts. Many, but not all, of the worst ships are flagged with open registers, and those registers with a poor safety record will continue to be targeted for inspection under Port State Control.

Planning Reform

19. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to reform the planning system. [82799]

Mr. Caborn: 'Modernising Planning: A Progress Report' was published on 12 April. It provides an audit of the large number of initiatives in hand to improve the operation of the planning system at the national, regional and local levels.

21. Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action the Government have taken to assist local authorities to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the local planning process in the north-west. [82801]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government are undertaking a number of initiatives under their "Modernising Planning" programme to assist local authorities in improving the local planning process in the north-west. My Department is committed to delivering a quality planning service which is fast and efficient and my officials will continue to work closely in partnership with north-west local authorities to achieve this.

Road Schemes

20. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions by what criteria he determines which major road schemes are visited by Ministers. [82800]

Dr. Reid: Ministers decide whether to visit a major road scheme on a case by case basis, depending on their diary commitments. They make a judgment on whether seeing the site of a scheme for themselves would be sufficiently useful to make the visit worthwhile.

Railway Bridges

23. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he has taken to improve the condition of railway bridges. [82803]

Dr. Reid: All bridges carrying trunk roads over railways are fit to carry 40 tonne lorries. DETR is continuing to liaise with Railtrack and local authorities to ensure that any necessary strengthening work on bridges carrying local authority roads is completed with a minimum of disruption to road users.

Rural Transport

25. Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from people in rural areas regarding the Government's policies on transport. [82805]

Dr. Reid: We have received representations on our policies on transport from a range of individuals living in rural areas, as well as from representative organisations. Ministers have met representative organisations to discuss their concerns and ideas on the provision of transport in rural areas.

Landfill Sites

27. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of new landfill sites for organic and household waste that will be needed in the next five years. [82807]

Mr. Meale: Arrangements for the provision of individual sites are for Waste Planning Authorities and the private sector.

Road Network

29. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action his Department is taking to improve the condition of the road network. [82809]

Dr. Reid: The Government have made maintenance of trunk roads a top priority and are also committed to restore the cuts in local road maintenance funding. New techniques are being introduced to minimise the need for maintenance and reduce the impact of maintenance works on the motorist.

Bus Companies

30. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce a requirement that bus companies publish their performance against targets for service reliability and punctuality. [82810]

Dr. Reid: I have announced my intention to discuss with the bus industry the establishment of targets for service quality, against which operators would publish information.

Rural Train Services

31. Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to safeguard the provision of rural train services. [82811]

Dr. Reid: The minimum level of service an operator must plan to provide is set out in the Passenger Service Requirement (PSR), which forms a key part of the contract. PSRs for rural services in general were set to reflect closely the level of services being operated by British Rail at the time of franchising. The Franchising Director has powers to enforce compliance with the PSR.

Latex Allergy

32. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about levels of awareness of latex allergy among health care workers. [82812]

Mr. Meale: I have received no direct representations on levels of awareness of latex allergy among health care workers.

However, I am aware that the Health and Safety Executive has received a number of direct inquires about latex allergy. These have included requests for information, complaints and some reports of latex allergy across the health care sector.

Rail Summit

33. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what time scale he is working to for implementation of the decisions made at the rail summit. [82813]

Dr. Reid: The rail industry has committed to year-on-year improvements: this means that within two to three years the railway's performance will be significantly better. Within 10 years, we aim to have one of the best railways in the world.

Ships (Belize)

34. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his assessment of the safety of ships registered in Belize. [82814]

Dr. Reid: The safety record of the Belize register is unsatisfactory. During 1995–97, 139 Belize vessels were inspected by Port State Control authorities within the Paris Memorandum of Understanding area which covers Europe, Russia and Canada. Of these, 84 were detained for faults to be remedied before vessels could safely put to sea. That is a detention percentage of 60.43 per cent. as against an average for all flags of 16.42 per cent.

Road Traffic

35. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his proposals to reduce road traffic levels. [82815]

Dr. Reid: We are making good progress in implementing the package of measures set out in our Integrated Transport White Paper which is needed to reduce traffic growth, and to reduce absolute levels of traffic in those places where its environmental damage is greatest.

Transport Policy

37. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in the implementation of his integrated transport policy. [82817]

Dr. Reid: We are making good progress in delivering integrated transport. We are investing an extra £1.8 billion in local and integrated transport; the shadow SRA is already driving forward changes on the railways, and Local Authorities are working up strategic local transport plans covering all their transport needs.

Local Plans

38. Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the time scale for public inquiries into local plans. [82818]

Mr. Raynsford: The time taken for each local plan inquiry will depend on the number of objections made to a plan and the number of objectors who appear in person at the inquiry rather than submitting written representations. Our proposals for improving the arrangements for the preparation and adoption of local plans (set out in the draft revise of PPG12 published on 17 February) should reduce the number of objections which need to be considered, and hence the length of inquiries.

New Deal (Communities)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress with the New Deal for Communities. [82802]

Ms Armstrong: Under our New Deal for Communities, community based partnerships in 17 of the most deprived neighbourhoods have now taken responsibility for tackling deep-rooted problems of social exclusion and multiple deprivation. Across Government, we will continue to work with those partnerships as they develop plans to deliver lasting change.

Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what independent evaluation there has been of the selection procedure for membership of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment; [76223]

(2) if he will make a statement on the selection procedure for membership of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, with particular reference to (a) the criteria for selecting applicants, (b) the procedure by which individuals are invited to reply, (c) which Government Departments are involved and (d) the extent of public information available about the procedure. [76251]

Mr. Meacher: The selection procedure for membership of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) is carried out in accordance with the Commissioner for Public Appointments Unit's "Guide on Public Appointments Procedure". This document is publicly available and a copy is in the Library.

In selecting applicants, our aim is to produce a committee with a range of scientific and technical expertise that will equip ACRE to deal effectively with its wider remit and the regulatory challenges ahead. In particular we are looking for expertise in the fields of genetics, molecular biology, microbiology, plant breeding, entomology, farmland ecology, wildlife/ biodiversity, agronomy and farming practice. Candidates needed to be acknowledged experts in their fields and be able to contribute effectively at ACRE meetings.

As advertisement was placed in the national press inviting anyone with suitable qualifications or experience to apply. In addition, my officials invited stakeholders to come forward with nominations. All those replying were sent a full application package and all those who subsequently applied were considered by an independent selection panel.

Other Government Departments involved in the procedure are the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Health and Safety Executive, Scottish Office, Welsh Office and the Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland). The appointments are made by the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions acting jointly with Ministers in these Departments.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in relation to the approved field trials of genetically modified crops, what evidence is (a) currently available and (b) in the process of being collected, in respect of (i) pollen transfer, (ii) horizontal gene flow to soil bacteria, (iii) changes in the nature of residues in the final product, with particular reference to neurotoxins, metabolites and those in its transgenic counterpart, (iv) transfer of genes from plants to micro-organisms, (v) transfer of genes between plant species and (vi) the impact on insect and wildlife in the local ecosystem. [78015]

Mr. Meacher: There is no readily available comprehensive list of all this work, though the more relevant papers are referenced in various DETR/Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment publications lodged in the Library or placed on the DETR internet site. Research into details of all the processes is continuing, but mainly in Universities and relevant research institutes. The primary aim of the farm-scale evaluations is to investigate the impacts on wildlife populations and biodiversity in growing these crops on the field scale.

Rural Speed Limits

Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has (a) for the reduction of speed limits on country lanes and in villages and (b) to introduce a network of rural roads on which pedestrians, cyclists and horseriders will have priority over motorists. [83184]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The contribution speed limits can make in effectively managing speed on rural roads is one of the issues being considered within the current speed policy review. Local authorities will soon have the power to make 20mph limits/zones without the consent of the Secretary of State. The new legislation is likely to come into force later this month provided Parliament approves. Evidence suggests these limits are successful only in conjunction with measures that encourage the driver to slow down.

That aside, there is much that can be done within existing legislation and using proven techniques to protect walkers, cyclists and horseriders from the worst excesses of traffic on minor country roads. The Department is working with the Countryside Agency's Countryside Traffic Management Group to develop good practice guidance on rural traffic management designed with sensitivity to the countryside environment.

Environment Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the subjects (a) he plans to raise and (b) he expects to be raised by others at the forthcoming Environment Council of 7 to 9 May. [83286]

Mr. Meacher: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 22 April 1999, Official Report, column 625. We have since been notified that there will also be two brief presentations during the Informal Environment Council, one on the integration of environmental issues into EU policies and the other on EU Enlargement. In addition, there will be opportunities for me to engage in informal discussions with other Environment Ministers on a wide range of current environmental issues.

Millennium Dome (Taxi Ranks)

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to provide taxi ranks at the Millennium Dome site. [83378]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The New Millennium Experience Company will be providing appropriate facilities for both taxis and minicabs at the Millennium Dome site.

Passenger Service Charge

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from the travel industry about the practice by airlines of separately listing the passenger service charge on air passenger tickets; what assessment he has made of the impact of the practice on the level of airfares; and if he will make a statement. [R] [83470]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have received a number of representations on this issue, both from private individuals and from representatives of the travel industry, including the Guild of Business Travel Agents, the Institute of Travel Management, and the Association of British Travel Agents. I am examining, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, whether showing PSC as a tax may be in contravention of legislation on misleading price indications and trade descriptions. The Office of Fair Trading has written to the International Air Transport Association (IATA) about possible effects of separating out PSC and showing it as a tax in the context of the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1994, and has asked IATA to cease representing PSC as a new tax.

Our general policy is to allow air fare levels to be determined by the market place wherever possible. However, before approving the separating out of PSC, the Civil Aviation Authority sought undertakings from British Airways (BA), the only UK airline with sufficient market share to enable it to bring market power to bear on fares, about the effect on fare levels. BA agreed to reduce its lowest fully flexible fare on such routes by the amount of the PSC, thus leaving the fare paid by the passenger unchanged. Within the EU, fares are governed by EC law. Nonetheless, on a number of intra-EU routes BA has undertaken to keep the total amount paid by passengers unaffected by the separation of the PSC. I understand that these undertakings have now been put into effect.

Green Transport Plans

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82834]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Since last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which set targets for the introduction of green transport plans for Government Departments, we have completed 16 plans to cover our headquarters and main buildings and will complete the remaining plan for the QEII Conference Centre shortly.

We are developing plans for all other key buildings in line with the target for March 2000 set in the Integrated Transport White Paper.

Waste

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures the Government are taking to reduce overall waste levels in the United Kingdom. [83624]

Mr. Meale: The Government will shortly be publishing for consultation their draft waste strategy for England and Wales, which will set out our proposed policies for reducing the levels of waste. Scotland and Northern Ireland will be producing their own strategies.

Porpoises

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps his Department has taken to protect harbour porpoises in United Kingdom waters. [82780]

Mr. Meale: The UK is taking measures to protect the harbour porpoise through a number of forums, both nationally and internationally. Areas of concern being addressed include by-catch, disturbance and pollution.

Strategic Rail Authority

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made in establishing the Strategic Rail Authority. [82792]

Mr. Prescott: Good progress is being made in establishing the Strategic Rail Authority. The shadow Strategic Rail Authority came into place on 1 April. A Bill to establish the SRA on a statutory basis will be introduced as soon as Parliamentary time permits.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Human Rights Fund

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funding is available under the human rights fund; and what projects were approved for funding in 1998. [83367]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: For financial year 1999–2000, £5.13 million has been allocated to the Human Rights Project Fund, £350,000 to the fund providing Support for International Human Rights Activities and £200,000 to the Commonwealth Human Rights Fund. A list of projects approved for funding under each of these budgets in financial year 1998–99 has been listed. The list of projects supported from the Human Rights Project Fund updates that given in reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) on 13 July 1998, Official Report, columns 33–37.

Fair Trade Products

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to introduce fair trade products at (a) meetings, (b) events and (c) catering facilities within his Department. [82868]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury, on 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 410.

"Britain, Creativity, Innovation and Quality"

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cost of developing the design guidelines for implementing the proposal for a new identity for Britain, as finalised in the booklet, "Britain, Creativity, Innovation and Quality"; how many booklets were printed; for what audience; and for what purpose. [83747]

Mr. Robin Cook: The total cost of developing the design guidelines for "Britain, Creativity, Innovation and Quality" was £13,506.

10,000 copies of this A4 four page leaflet were produced.

Copies were distributed to all Press and Public Affairs Officers at FCO Posts, The British Council and Information Departments within Whitehall Departments.

The identity and guidelines were intended to augment existing identities to provide an increased level of consistent presentation.

Non-residence Visas

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of non-residence visa applications (a) in 1997 were and (b) currently are, decided within 24 hours; and what extra finances are being directed to meet the relevant key departmental performance target. [83735]

Mr. Robin Cook: 92 per cent. of non-residence visa applications were "processed"[1] within 24 hours in 1997 against a target of 94 per cent.

In April 1998, we changed the bases for calculating performance against this objective, to record the number of applications "decided"[2] within 24 hours.

Under the new system, 86 per cent. of straightforward non-residence visa applications made in person during the period April-December 1998 were decided within 24 hours (target 87 per cent.) The figure for January to March 1999 was 90 per cent[3].

No additional resources have been deployed specifically to meet this target, but the performance of visa sections overseas is kept under regular review to ensure so far as possible that performance targets are met.

[1] "processed" means issued, refused, referred or deferred

[2] "decided" means visas/passports ready for collection

[3] based on monthly reporting from the largest 100 posts.

Minority Ethnic Liaison Officer

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the pay grade of the Minority Ethnic Liaison Officer; and what are his duties. [83730]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Minority Ethnic Liaison Officer works on a part-time, fixed-term contract as a member of the Department's Senior Management Structure. His main objective is to help the Department to develop and implement a strategy aimed at creating an environment within, and an image of, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office which is more attractive to minority ethnic communities and supportive of minority ethnic staff.

Departmental Modernisation Programme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the (a) remit, (b) cost and (c) activity of the working group of young officials to monitor implementation of his Department's modernisation programme; how many times it has met; what documents and recommendations it has produced; and what actions have, as a result, been taken by him. [83731]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Modernisation Group has been tasked with exploring how the FCO could work better, and how it could become a better place to work.

Its costs are minimal. The group does not have a budget.

It has thirty members, five working groups on different subjects, and a mailing list of over a hundred from across the network of posts. It meets at least once every two weeks. I keep in close touch with its work. It has so far produced recommendations on encouraging creativity and on improving personnel management. Implementation of its ideas is already being taken forward. It will soon be sending me a further set of ideas.

Departmental Staff Profile

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of his Department (a) in 1997 were and (b) currently are made up of (i) minority ethnic groups and (ii) disabled people; and what extra funds are being directed to reach the related key performance target. [83733]

Mr. Robin Cook:

(a) As at 1 April 1997:

(i) 3.4 per cent. of FCO staff were from minority ethnic groups

(ii) 2.0 per cent. of FCO staff were disabled.

(b) As at 1 January 1999:

(i) 3.9 per cent. of FCO staff were from minority ethnic groups

(ii) 2.6 per cent. of FCO staff were disabled.

Expenditure in support of the Department's aim of creating a more diverse workforce has been mainstreamed. It is not, therefore, possible to identify what extra funds are being directed to achieving that aim.

Information Technology

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what expenditure has been made on reaching the Key Departmental performance target of upgrading obsolete information technology; to which systems the target refers; and how many units were affected. [83732]

Mr. Robin Cook: Expenditure of £44 million has been incurred on equipment, software and external installation costs to the end of March 1999 on a radical programme to replace obsolete IT and provide a new "Windows" based office automation system and accompanying applications. The system has so far been provided to 5,194 users, including initial installations in the FCO at home.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if (a) GCHQ are promoting the wider use of the encryption services by offering specialised IT security courses, (b) personal data are required to be processed with respect to that promotion and (c) he will make a statement on his Department's application of the provisions of the Data Protection Acts to such processing. [83792]

Mr. Robin Cook: GCHQ's Communications-Electronics Security Group (CESG) offers IT security courses which are designed to match the stated training and awareness needs of government departments and other customers. CESG is the government expert on cryptography and can be approached by official departments should advice be needed.

CESG is a technical authority and its courses make no specific recommendations about personal data as such. The actual type and degree of protection to be afforded to personal data, along with all forms of data handled by the government, is determined by relevant legislation and Cabinet Office guidance. CESG is currently working with CITU and other departments to provide design consultancy and design services that can help protect personal data in the context of modernising government.

It is current policy that any personal data held or processed by the intelligence agencies, in accordance with their respective functions set out in the Intelligence Services Act 1994, are exempt from the relevant provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 in order to safeguard national security.

Al Shifa Plant

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made, following the decision of the US Justice and Treasury departments to unfreeze the assets of Mr. Suleh Idris, of whether Mr. Idris's Al Shifa plant in Khartoum was involved in chemical weapons production. [83728]

Mr. Robin Cook: As the Prime Minister has said on many occasions, the US told us at the time of the strike on Al Shifa that they had compelling evidence that the plant was being used for the production of chemical weapons materials.

Her Majesty's Government have not taken any action against Mr. Idris, nor has it made any allegations against him. The US decision is a matter for the US authorities.

UK Citizens (Overseas Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) male and (b) female UK citizens were being held in overseas prisons on 1 April 1999; and if he will list the countries in which these are being held. [83585]

Mr. Robin Cook: There were 1,805 male and 172 female UK citizens being held in overseas prisons on 1 April 1999 registered in consular records. A list of countries in which these citizens are being held follows.

Green Transport Plans

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82838]

Mr. Robin Cook: Since last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which set targets for the introduction of green transport plans for Government Departments, we have completed a draft plan covering the FCO's UK estate. This covers all headquarters and main building, as well as other key buildings to which the White Paper's March 2000 target applies. The plan will be finalised shortly.

Ascension Island

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the future use of the airfield on Ascension Island and on the level of resulting (a) income and (b) expenditure. [83838]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United States Base on Ascension is provided free from rent and charges to the US Space Command under the terms of the Agreement between the UK and US Governments Concerning the Extension of the Bahamas Long Range Proving Ground by the Establishment of Additional Sites in Ascension Island signed in 1956, as amended.

Wideawake Airfield, which forms part of the US Base, is a key link in the RAF airbridge to the Falkland Islands. We are currently negotiating with the US Government to allow the use of Wideawake by civil charter flights. If these negotiations are successful this will improve access to both Ascension and St. Helena, some 700 miles away.

Until we reach agreement with the US Government over the future use of the airfield no figures on any resulting levels of income and expenditure are available.

DEFENCE

Training Exercises

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many personnel were deployed on the 15 training exercises in Cyprus carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; [72777]

(2) what was the cost of the 15 training exercises in Cyprus carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [72776]

Mr. Doug Henderson: 1,755 personnel took part in the 15 Lion Sun exercises during this period. It has not been possible to identify separately the costs of these exercises.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the infantry company exercise in Kenya carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; what was the cost of the exercise; and which countries had armed forces which took part; [72781]

(2) how many personnel were deployed on the infantry company exercise in Kenya carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; [72782]

(3) what was the cost of, which countries had armed forces involved in, what assessment he has made of the value of, what where the principal benefits of, and how many personnel were deployed on the infantry company exercise in Kenya carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76602]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Exercise Mono Prix 97–98, which took place in Kenya from 29 March to 27 April 1997, involved 140 personnel of No.2 Company 1 Irish Guards. No other personnel were involved. This exercise was designed to enable these personnel to gain extensive and realistic training experience, including live firing and jungle training, in a demanding environment, and I understand that these objectives were achieved. Records for the cost of this exercise are no longer held but the cost of the similar exercise in 1998 was £49K.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what his assessment is of the value of the NATO joint exercise in France carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; [72927]

(2) what was the cost of, which countries had armed forces involved in, and how many personnel were deployed on the NATO joint exercise in France carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76599]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Exercise Strong Resolve, which took place in March 1998 jointly in Norway and in Portugal, and which involved some 50,000 military personnel, consisted of two halves; exercise Crisis South, in Norway, and exercise Crisis South, in Portugal. The pre-training to exercise Crisis South involved a combat enhancement phase which took part in France. The aim of exercise Strong Resolve was to exercise NATO's ability to cope with multiple, simultaneous crises in separate geographic regions, drawing on the resources of both major NATO Commanders, and involving the full spectrum of NATO missions. I understand that the exercise is assessed to have succeeded in its aim. Members of the Armed Forces of the following nations participated in the southern half of Strong Resolve, Crisis South; Belgium, the Czech Republic, the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, France, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Lithuania, the Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Romania, Slovakia, Slovenia, Sweden, Spain, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States. The costs of the combat enhancement phase of Crisis South, which took place in France, are not separately identifiable.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the cost of the NATO joint exercise in Portugal carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; and what was the cost of UK participation; [72836]

(2) how many personnel were deployed on the NATO joint exercise in Portugal carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; and what was the United Kingdom's share of the costs. [72977]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 1 March 1999]: Exercise Strong Resolve, which took place in March 1998 jointly in Norway and in Portugal, consisted of two halves; exercise Crisis North, in Norway, and exercise Crisis South, in Portugal. Some 25,000 personnel were deployed on exercise Crisis South, the total cost of which is not held centrally by NATO. The cost of the UK participation was £80k, excluding the costs of ammunition and spares consumed during the exercise as these costs are not separately identifiable.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries had armed forces involved in, what assessment he has made of the value of, and how many personnel were deployed on the airborne exercise in France carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76601]

Mr. Doug Henderson: 80 personnel from C(Gurkha) Company, 2 PARA trained with the French armed forces during Exercise Quickstep which was held in France from 8 to 16 September 1997. The exercise was designed to train participants in a demanding environment and to expose them to a foreign army's tactics and equipment. I understand that the exercise succeeded in its aims.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of, which countries had armed forces involved in and what assessment he has made of the value of the airborne exercises in Ukraine carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76596]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Exercise Cossack Steppe 97, which took place in the Ukraine between 13 to 21 September 1997, involved personnel from the armed forces of Poland, the Ukraine and the UK. The aim of the exercise was to test the ability of non-aligned forces to operate jointly, and I understand that the exercise fulfilled this aim. The total cost of the exercise is not available, but the cost of the UK contribution, 140 personnel from 2 PARA, was £39K. This cost excludes the cost of movement by RAF transport aircraft to and from the Ukraine, as these figures are no longer available, and also excludes the costs of ammunition and spares consumed during the exercise, as these costs are not separately identified.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of, and which countries had armed forces involved in, the mountain and cold weather exercise in Romania carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76591]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Only UK Armed Forces were involved in this exercise, the cost of which was £22,000, exclusive of the costs of movement by RAF transport aircraft used to and from the exercise and the cost of ammunition and spares consumed during the exercise. These costs are not separately identifiable.

Fair Trade Products

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce fair trade products at (a) meetings, (b) events and (c) catering facilities within his Department. [82863]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to her by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury, on 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 410.

Defence Storage and Distribution Agency

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future location of the headquarters of the Defence Storage and Distribution Agency. [83905]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The formation of the new Defence Storage and Distribution Agency, for the management of non-explosive stores, was announced as part of the Strategic Defence Review. The Agency was formally established on 1 April of this year.

Following consultation with the Trades Unions and other interested parties, I have decided that the headquarters of the new Agency should be established at the MOD's Depot at Bicester in Oxfordshire, which will form a major part of the new Agency.

Service Men (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men who served in Northern Ireland have subsequently been discharged on compassionate grounds in each of the last 15 years. [83384]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Service Men (Absence without Leave)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proportion of soldiers reported absent without leave in each of the past five years were subsequently arrested; what was the average length of time taken to effect an arrest; and what action was taken against offenders; [83386]

(2) how many service men have been reported absent without leave in each of the last 15 years while stationed in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Germany; and what were the figures for the services as a whole. [83385]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to my hon. Friend, and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Glassdrummond Barracks

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what building work at what cost is being carried out at Glassdrummond Barracks; what (a) types and (b) weights of building materials and (c) how many pallets were flown onto the site in April; and at what level of command authorisation was given to issue public statements concerning the building works which were reported in the Press. [83387]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Apart from some routine repair and maintenance tasks, (such as repair of a barbed wire fence) no building work has been carried out at the Glassdrummond base during April 1999. No building materials were flown into the base during that month. However, several septic tanks and around 500 kg of rations were flown in, and these same septic tanks and some empty pallets were flown out.

The Army Information Service at Headquarters Northern Ireland is authorised by the General Officer Commanding to make statements to the media.

Green Transport Plans

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82836]

Mr. Spellar: The turbulence associated with the refurbishment of the Ministry of Defence's main building in Whitehall has made it impracticable to introduce green transport plans for MoD buildings in London. Work involved in their production would inevitably be largely nugatory.

In view of these practical difficulties and the fact that the majority of staff working London buildings use public transport to commute to work, we have decided that the Department's most immediate contribution to reducing vehicle emissions and energy consumption would be achieved by concentrating on more efficient fleet management. This particular emphasis is also more consistent with our approach to green transport plans as part of wider Environmental Management Systems. A switch to ultra-low sulphur diesel for all our wheeled vehicles is already underway and should reduce exhaust emissions in the utility fleet by up to 30 per cent.

Outside London, a draft green transport action plan has been prepared for MoD's Abbey Wood site. Work on green transport plans for other sites is due to start once analysis has been completed of pilot surveys on commuting and duty travel which were recently conducted at three representative MoD sites.

In conclusion, I must emphasis that MoD is not only a department of state but, as demonstrated by the events in Kosovo, also an operational headquarters which must be able to function around the clock and at times when public transport is not an option. Undoubtedly, this adds a further layer of difficulty to the production of green transport plans.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Integrity Project

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what information was used to identify those higher rate Disability Living Allowance claimants who qualified for exemption under the Benefit Integrity Project; [82457]

(2) what definition of severe mental impairment was used to exempt claimants from assessment under the Benefit Integrity Project; [82458]

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of exempt claimants who were contacted in error under the Benefit Integrity Project; [82486]

(4) what categories of higher rate Disability Living Allowance claimants were exempt from assessment under the Benefit Integrity Project. [82487]

Mr. Bayley: The Benefit Integrity Project (BIP) came to an end on the 31 March 1999. During the period of its operation various groups were exempted from the scope of the Project as information became available to show that for some categories of award there was a low rate of change on review. A complete list of those groups exempted from the operation of the Project is listed. No estimate has been made of the number who may have been contacted in error by the Project, however, safeguards were put in place to reduce such a possibility to a minimum. There is a statutory definition of Severe Mental Impairment which is set out. This applies to all Disability Living Allowance (DLA) cases.

Claimants in receipt of higher rate mobility component and either the highest or middle rate care component who were shown to be:

paraplegic

quadriplegic

double amputees

those who are both deaf and blind those who are defined as being severely mentally impaired or those paid under special rules claimants who are aged 65 or over

Claimants in receipt of higher rate mobility component and the highest rate care component who were shown to have:

cystic fibrosis dementia

haemodialysis

hyperkinetic syndrome

motor neurone disease

multiple allergy syndrome

total parenteral nutrition

a learning difficulty

Multiple Sclerosis (MS)

Parkinsons Disease or severe and progressive neurological or muscle wasting disease

All claimants who were in receipt of Attendance Allowance or Mobility Allowance and were converted to DLA in April 1992.

Definition of Severe Mental Impairment (SMI)

A person can satisfy the SMI provisions for the higher rate mobility component of DLA if:

1. they are severely mentally impaired, Sec 73(3)(a) Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act ie they suffer from an arrested development of the brain, which results in severe impairment of intelligence and social functioning, Reg 12(5) Social Security DLA Regs,

and

2. they display severe behavioural problems, Sec 73(3)(b) SS C & B Act ie they exhibit disruptive behaviour which;

   (a) is extreme, Reg 12(6)(a) SS DLA Regs

   (b) regularly requires another person to intervene and physically restrain them in order to prevent them causing physical injury to themselves or another, or damage to property, Reg 12(6)(b) SS DLA Regs,

and

   (c) is so unpredictable that they require another person to be present and watching over them whenever they are awake, Reg 12(6)(c) SS DLA Regs,

and

3. they satisfy both the conditions in Sec 72 (1)(b) and (c) SS C & B Act ie satisfies the conditions for the highest rate care component.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the most recent estimates of pensioners' average incomes in EU countries. [83726]

Mr. Timms: The information is not available.

Pensions

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve the methods of illustrating retirement pensions for members of defined contribution occupation pension schemes in order to make it easier to assess their level of income after retirement. [83703]

Mr. Timms: The consultation document "Strengthening the Pensions Framework", which was issued in December 1998, included proposals to give members of defined contribution pension schemes better and more understandable information about the level of income they are likely to receive in retirement.

We are considering the responses, and will make detailed recommendations in due course.

Green Transport Plans

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82830]

Angela Eagle: Since last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which set targets for the introduction of green transport plans for Government Departments, we have completed 27 plans covering all our headquarters and main buildings.

We are developing plans for all other key buildings in line with the target for March 2000 set in the Integrated Transport White Paper.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Thailand

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the findings of the MAFF Inspectors who visited Thailand to inspect the welfare and hygiene standards of locally raised poultry. [82931]

Mr. Rooker: Shortly.

Meat Inspection Service

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the review of the Meat Inspection Service will publish the representations submitted by the meat industry. [83248]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 4 May 1999]: As is our normal practice, any responses received as a result of consulting the meat industry during the review of meat inspection charges announced by my right hon. Friend on 21 April 1999, Official Report, column 993, will be made publicly available, except for any material identified as commercially confidential.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the final report and recommendations and the decisions on meat inspection charges will be published in full. [83250]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 4 May 1999]: The Government's decisions on these matters will be made public in due course.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the terms of reference of the review of meat inspection charges. [83251]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 4 May 1999]: As announced by my right hon. Friend on 21 April 1999, Official Report, column 993, the review will undertake a close examination of the dynamics of the slaughtering sector, of the impact of all proposed charges on abattoirs and on producers, as well as looking at the EC legislation and the way in which inspections are to be carried out, to ensure that, when charges are set, the costs are as low as possible consistent with maintaining public safety and honouring our obligations under EU law.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he has made for consultations with the meat industry during the review of meat inspection charges. [83252]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 4 May 1999]: A consultation letter was sent to representative bodies, including those for the meat industry, on 7 May, seeking their views and input to the study. Replies have been requested by noon on 17 May. Copies of the letter have been placed in the Library of the House, and it is also available on the MAFF Internet site.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the official status of the review of meat inspection charges; [83325]

(2) who will chair the review of meat inspection charges. [83326]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 5 May 1999]: The review will be conducted by my officials, working closely with the other Agriculture Departments, the Treasury and the Cabinet Office, who, in line with normal practice, will be co-ordinating the work.

Quarantine

Mr. Reed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to complete the review of the inclusion of the USA and Canada in the proposed reforms of the quarantine regulations outlined in the Kennedy report. [83170]

Mr. Rooker: I shall be considering the results of this review shortly, and expect to make an announcement in the next few weeks.

Krebs Trials

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the announcement will be made concerning the triplet sites in the Krebs Trial area of Gloucestershire and Herefordshire; and which will be the control, reactive and pro-active areas in the trial. [83718]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 May 1999]: On the 20 April 1999, in the presence of an independent witness, the treatments were randomly allocated to the areas in the Gloucestershire/Herefordshire trial triplet. The results of the randomisation have not yet been passed to MAFF. For reasons of security and safety of staff, I do not intend to announce the treatment areas in the triplet immediately they are available to MAFF.

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many members of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food Animal Welfare team will be deployed to carry out the Krebs Trial in the two triplet sites within the Forest of Dean constituency. [83717]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 May 1999]: For reasons of security and safety of staff I will not provide advance information on how many of the Department's Wildlife Unit staff will be deployed to carry out particular activities associated with the trial.

Organophosphates

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish the 1995 Institute of Occupational Medicine (Edinburgh) report on the study into organophosphate dips. [83715]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 May 1999]: I understand that the Institute of Occupational Medicine (IOM) will be finalising its report over the next few weeks. I have confirmed that the IOM will publish its report when this process has been completed. The report will be submitted for urgent consideration by the Government's expert advisory committees and our aim is to publish the committees' advice when it is available.

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the results of his Department's latest tests of organophosphate residues in celery. [83779]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 May 1999]: Yes. I have placed copies of the report containing these results, titled Unit to Unit Variability of Pesticide Residues in Celery, Plums and Kiwi Fruit, in the Libraries of the House. These results were announced by a News Release in November 1998 and copies of the report were made available by the Pesticides Safety Directorate at the time.

HEALTH

Physiotherapy

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by region the vacancy rate for (a) physiotherapists and (b) paediatric physiotherapists. [65492]

Mr. Denham: Information on vacancy rates for physiotherapists is not available centrally. For the information that is available on physiotherapy vacancy rates up to March 1997, I refer the hon. Member to the 1998 annual report of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine, copies of which are available in the Library.

Nurse Vacancies

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish data on nursing vacancies in relation to full-time establishments in (a) each hospital trust and (b) each health authority and region. [66051]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally. For the information that is available on nursing vacancies up to March 1997, I refer the hon. Member to the 1998 annual report of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine, copies of which are available in the Library.

Public Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those people he has appointed to public bodies since 1 November 1998, indicating the positions to which they have been appointed and if they receive remuneration. [76418]

Ms Jowell: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue new guidelines on the use of beta interferon in the NHS. [80174]

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make beta interferon universally available on the NHS. [78995]

Mr. Denham: Yes. Health Service Circular 1999/101 will be issued shortly. Copies will be available in the Library.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) for what reasons cystic fibrosis is not exempted from prescription charges; [79162]

(2) if he will exempt cystic fibrosis sufferers from paying prescription charges. [79163]

Mr. Denham: Entitlement to help with prescription charges is based on the principle that those who can afford to contribute should do so. People likely to have the greatest difficulty in paying charges, for example children under 16, people over 60 and those on low income do get their prescriptions free. These arrangements ensure that no one need be deterred from obtaining necessary medication for financial reasons. The current prescription charge exemption arrangements were reviewed as part of the Comprehensive Spending Review. We noted that there was no consensus on what additional conditions might be included in any revised list of medical exemptions, or how distinctions could be drawn between one condition and another.

For these, and other reasons, we concluded that all current prescription charge exemptions would be protected for the rest of this Parliament. We also decided that prescription charges would rise by no more than the rate of inflation over the next three years.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the number of people who are exempt from prescription charges. [83335]

Mr. Denham: It is estimated that about half of the population are exempt from prescription charges.

National Insurance

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the revenue effect of reducing national insurance charges by 0.5 per cent. for those employed by the NHS. [82750]

Mr. Denham: The rate of employers national insurance will be reduced by 0.5 per cent. from April 2000. This will have the effect of reducing the national insurance bill for hospital and community health services by approximately £38 million. The reduction in employers national insurance rates is intended to compensate for the climate change levy announced in the budget. The overall effect of these two policies on the National Health Service is expected to be broadly cost neutral.

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the expenditure plans for each health authority in the Eastern Region, indicating those authorities that are making reductions in service and by how much. [83012]

Mr. Denham: The expenditure plans of health authorities for the financial year 1999–2000 have not yet been finalised.

Competitive Bidding

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many bids by each local health trust were (a) received and (b) successful in each of the competitive bidding processes launched and managed by his Department since May 1997. [82461]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 28 April 1999]: National Health Service trusts were asked to submit bids for two elements of the capital modernisation fund direct to the Department. Details of the numbers of bids to the waiting lists modernisation fund and accident and emergency modernisation fund are contained in the table. NHS trusts are also benefiting from a wide range of bidding exercises, handled through health authorities and the regional offices of the NHS Executive, to fund specially targeted initiatives as part of the Government's commitment to improve services and modernise the NHS.

	Waiting lists modernisation fund		Accident and emergency modernisation fund
Regional Office	Number of bids submitted to ROs	Number of bids approved by Ministers	Number of bids submitted to ROs	Number of bids approved by Ministers
Northern and	86	18	34	15
Trent	56	19	31	6
Eastern[1]	19	21	12	7
London	109	33	44	9
South East	28	28	16	9
South West	19	19	18	7
West Midlands	2	2	21	7
North West	145	25	42	10
Total	464	165	218	70

[1] Having reviewed the criteria, Eastern Regional decided to focus on schemes that would deliver extra capacity. It was expected that the equipment would be bought via an increase in allocations to all waiting lists trusts, hence the increase from 19 bids to 21 approved schemes.
Note:
East Regional Office had flexibility to decide how to manage the bidding process within its region. There were differences in the way ROs invited and assessed bids.

Human Insulin

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the Posner report on genetically engineered human insulin commissioned by the British Diabetic Association in 1993. [83336]

Ms Jowell: The Department and the Medicines Control Agency have evaluated the Posner Report together with all available evidence on the safety of human insulin. The independent advisory body to Government, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, has also fully reviewed the safety of human insulin on several occasions since its introduction, taking into account patient experiences of the effects of human insulin. The Committee has concluded that although some patients have experienced problems on transferring to human insulins and are better suited to animal insulins, there is no evidence of a safety problem specific to human insulin.

Loughborough General Hospital

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to announce the completion of the private finance initiative project to replace Loughborough's general hospital. [83167]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Executive has received a revised Full Business Case from Fosse Health NHS Trust for the scheme to replace Loughborough's General Hospital. The NHS Executive has agreed a deadline for an initial response to the trust of 30 May 1999.

The revised Full Business Case is based on the best and final offer which was received from the preferred bidder on 3 November 1998.

Fosse Health NHS Trust was merged with Leicestershire Mental Health Services NHS Trust on 1 April 1999. The new trust is named Leicestershire and Rutland Healthcare NHS Trust. The merger will not affect the submitted proposals for the scheme.

Fluoridisation (Leicestershire)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about fluoridisation of water in Leicestershire; and if he will make a statement. [83165]

Mr. Denham: The Green Paper Our Healthier Nation invited comments on the contribution which fluoridation can make to improved oral health. Of the 258 comments received from the Trent region, in which Leicestershire is located, 241 were in favour of fluoridation and 17 opposed. We will be announcing our policy on fluoridation in a White Paper on public health, which will be published shortly.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what types of location copies of the leaflet associated with the Breaking the Chain campaign on domestic violence have been placed, and in what numbers. [83566]

Ms Jowell: Distribution agreed by the Department included a broad range of health settings and all social services departments and other voluntary child care organisations. One copy each of the leaflet and poster was sent to all general practitioner practices in England (around 9,500) in the GP pack at the end of March 1999, with the opportunity to request as many more copies as they require.

Ten copies of the leaflet and one of the poster are shortly to be sent to all trust nurse directors in England (402) to be placed in hospital patient information racks, again with a form for ordering additional copies to meet local requirements.

Additional supplies of both leaflets and posters are available from Departmental stores as and when needed within local areas.

NHS Appointments

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS trust and health authority appointments which were not made by the due date and which remained outstanding on 1 May. [83395]

Mr. Denham: All health authority appointments due on 1 April 1999 were completed on time. A small number of appointments to National Health Service trusts and health authorities which expired in 1998 remain vacant. Details are given in the table.

List of health authority and national health service trust appointments which expired in 1998 and for which no appointment had been made by 1 May 1999

Medical Treatment (Hastened Death)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data he has collated on cases in which medical treatment has been given to a patient with the deliberate intention of hastening death. [83394]

Ms Jowell: Medical treatment given to a patient with the primary purpose of hastening death is illegal. Anyone alleged to have undertaken such action would be open to a charge of murder or manslaughter.

It is the responsibility of the police to decide whether to bring charges in individual cases and for the Crown Prosecution Service to decide whether a prosecution should proceed.

Information on such cases is not available centrally.

Junior Doctors

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend the scope of the EU Working Time Directive to include junior hospital doctors. [83776]

Mr. Denham: The European Commission has proposed an extension of Council Directive 93/104/EC, of 23 November 1993, to encompass the previously excluded sectors, which include junior doctors. This proposal is now being considered by the Council of Member States and the European Parliament. When this extension is agreed, it will be adopted into United Kingdom legislation.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase overtime rates for junior hospital doctors. [83775]

Mr. Denham: Pay rates for junior doctors, including rates for out of hours work, known as additional duty hours, are decided by the independent Doctors' and Dentists' Pay Review Body. Their 28th report, published on 1 February 1999, concluded that > "there was no need for changes to the existing working patterns of junior doctors and against that background the existing rates of additional duty hours remain appropriate".

Copies of this report are available in the Library.

Sensolog 2033T

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the first faulty Sensolog 2033T was reported to the Medical Devices Agency; and if he will make a statement. [83587]

Ms Jowell: The first report of an adverse incident involving the Sensolog 2033T pacemaker model was received by the Medical Devices Agency (MDA) on 6 January 1999. MDA has received no other adverse incident reports involving this pacemaker model.

Green Transport Plans

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82839]

Ms Jowell: Since last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which set targets for the introduction of green transport plans for Government Departments, we have completed three plans covering all our headquarters and main buildings.

We are developing plans for all other key buildings in line with the target for March 2000 set in the Integrated Transport White Paper.

Consultant Suspensions

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the report on the handling of consultant suspensions by trusts. [83774]

Mr. Denham: The team reviewing the suspension procedures expects to be in a position to submit its findings soon.

DEFENCE

NATO Exercises (Turkey)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the cost of the NATO artillery exercise in Turkey carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; [72853]

(2) how many personnel were deployed on the NATO artillery exercise in Turkey carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; [72844]

(3) which countries had armed forces involved in and what assessment he has made of the value of the NATO artillery exercise in Turkey carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76595]

Mr. Spellar: NATO artillery exercise Ardent Ground 97, carried out in North West Turkey between 23 April and 19 May 1997, involved the deployment of 2,000 personnel from the following NATO nations; Belgium, Canada, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Turkey, the UK and the US. The aim of the exercise was to practise multi-battery, multi-national firing, training and tactics, in conjunction with close air support, and I understand that the exercise succeeded in its objectives. The total cost of the exercise is not held centrally by NATO but the cost of the UK participation was £623,000, excluding the cost of ammunition and spares consumed during the exercise as these costs are not separately identified.

Departmental Dispositions

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of his Department's (a) military and (b) civilian personnel tasked (i) in the UK and (ii) overseas as United Kingdom contributions to (1) UN missions in former Yugoslavia, (2) the UN Tribunal on Yugoslavia, (3) the UN missions in the former Soviet Union, (4) the UN Special Commission on Iraq, (5) the UN Iraq/Kuwait observation mission, (6) the UN mission for the referendum in western Sahara, (7) the UN Angola verification mission, (8) the UN support mission in Haiti, (9) the UN observer mission in Angola, (10) the UN mission in Central African Republic, (11) the UN observer mission in Sierra Leone, (12) the UN tribunal in Rwanda, (13) the OSCE in Albania and (14) the WEU police mission in Albania. [83631]

Mr. George Robertson: As at 11 May 1999, the numbers of Ministry of Defence personnel tasked to the various operations were as listed in the following table:

Operation	Military personnel tasked in the UK	Civilian personnel tasked in the UK	Military personnel tasked overseas	Civilian personnel tasked overseas
UN missions in the former Soviet Union	0	0	(Georgia) 7	0
UN Special Commission on Iraq	0	2	0	(New York) 2
UN Iraq/Kuwait Observation Mission	0	0	11	0
UN Observer Mission in Sierra Leone	(on stand-by to deploy) 4	0	2	0

Military Exercises

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel were deployed on the NATO joint exercise in Norway carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998; and what was the cost of the exercise. [72833]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 March 1999]: Exercise Strong Resolve, which took place in March 1998 jointly in Norway and Portugal, consisted of two halves; exercise Crisis North, in Norway, and exercise Crisis South, in Portugal. Members of the armed forces of the following nations participated in the Northern half of Strong Resolve, Crisis North; Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States and consisted of some 25,000 NATO personnel. I understand from NATO that the cost to NATO Exercise Funds was £450,000.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of, and which countries had armed forces involved in, the jungle training exercises in Belize carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76606]

Mr. Spellar: The cost of the seven jungle exercises in Belize carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998 was £1.094 million, excluding the cost of ammunition and of spares consumed during the exercise.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of, what assessment he has made of the value of, and how many personnel were deployed on the infantry exercises in France carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998 [76600]

Mr. Spellar: Three infantry exercises were carried out in France during this period. Of the first two, Liberty Bell took place between 11 and 25 July 1997, involved 452 personnel, and cost £169,000; Fraternal Front took place between 5 and 19 September 1997, involved 122 personnel and cost £43,000. The exercises were designed to test core infantry skills and the ability to plan and execute an overseas exercise. I understand that the exercises succeeded in their aims. The third exercise, Team Spirit, took place between 7 and 23 November 1997, involved 68 personnel from the Royal Marines and the French 9th Maritime Infantry Division, and cost £5,934. The exercise was designed to enable the participating units to practise small-scale military alliance operations. I understand that this exercise also succeeded in its aim. All of the above costs exclude the costs of ammunition and spares consumed during the exercise as these costs are not separately identified.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of, and how many personnel were deployed on the infantry exercise in Botswana carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76607]

Mr. Spellar: Exercise Diamond Cutter, which took place in Botswana from 4 February to 20 March 1998, involved 144 personnel from B Company 2 Para and cost £0.324 million, excluding the costs of ammunition and spares consumed during the exercise as these costs are not separately identifiable.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of, which countries had armed forces involved in and how many personnel were deployed on the infantry exercises in the USA carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [76598]

Mr. Spellar: The cost of the infantry exercises in the USA carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998 was as follows:

£ million

Exercise	Cost
Trumpet Dance 1/98	0.256
Trumpet Dance 2/98	0.696

The cost of Trumpet Dance 1/98 excludes the cost of movement by RAF transport aircraft to and from the USA, as these figures are no longer available. The costs of ammunition and spares consumed during both exercises are also excluded as these costs are not separately identified.

Military Headwear

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the policy is on the use of military headwear in Northern Ireland; in what circumstances a local commander would order steel helmets to be worn and on how many occasions such orders have been given since September 1997 broken down by the (a) barracks and (b) regiment from which the patrol was drawn. [83388]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 11 May 1999]: In August 1997, Headquarters Northern Ireland announced that, as a matter of policy, troops operating in support of the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC) would wear regimental headdress instead of helmets, but that local commanders had the discretion to authorise the wearing of helmets for the personal protection of soldiers under their command, taking into account the threat and local operational circumstances. The decisions taken by local commanders as to when they have ordered the wearing of helmets are not held.

Territorial Army

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army infantry battalions and companies there were in (a) May 1998 and (b) May 1999. [83625]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are currently 33 Infantry Battalions and 95 Companies in the Territorial Army. There were also 33 Battalions and 95 Companies in May 1998. However, from 1 July 1999, the date on which converted, reorganised or re-roled units assume their new function and, where applicable, change title following the restructuring of the Territorial Army, the number of Infantry Battalions and Companies will reduce to 15 Battalions and 64 Companies.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Territorial Army centres there were in (a) May 1998 and (b) May 1999. [83626]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The number of Territorial Army Centres in the following years were:

Year	Number
May 1999	454

TA Centres that were vacant, or that housed only cadet units, have been excluded from these figures. Similarly, Territorial Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserve Association (TAVRA) headquarters buildings and stand-alone University Officer Training Corps (UOTC) premises have not been included.

WALES

Fair Trade Products

Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce fair trade products at (a) meetings, (b) events and (c) catering facilities within his Department. [82862]

Mr. Michael: It will be for the Assembly to consider its own arrangements for the future.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Foreign Direct Investment

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will define the terms of the performance target for his Department of securing at least 250,000 UK jobs from foreign direct investment by March 2002; and what assessment he has made of the present number of UK jobs currently maintained by foreign direct investment. [83736]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Department of Trade and Industry share a Public Service Agreement target to maintain the United Kingdom as the prime location in Europe for Foreign Direct Investment (FDI). Figures for the number of jobs secured from FDI are recorded by the Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB), which is jointly run by the two departments. The figures, which cover both jobs safeguarded and new jobs created, are based on information provided by companies at the time of the announcement of the decision to invest and are released annually. The IBB recorded 1,057,700 jobs created or safeguarded by FDI between 1979 and 1998.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to review diplomatic immunity for serious offences committed by families of staff attached to foreign embassies and high commissions. [83366]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: None. The recommendations of the Government Report on Review of the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations and Reply to "The Abuse of Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges", the First Report from the Foreign Affairs Select Committee in the Session 1984–85, of April 1985, remain valid.

Mrs. J. Badar-ud-Din

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the British High Commission in Pakistan is taking to assist Mrs. J. Badar-ud-Din, a British citizen who is in Sheikh Zayed Hospital, Lahore, Pakistan; how many visits staff from the High Commission have paid her; and what representations he has received from her family. [83596]

Mr. Robin Cook: From the time they were told of Mrs. Badar-ud-Din's admission to hospital on 26 February 1999 our consular staff in Lahore and Islamabad were in close touch with her husband. They helped him to arrange for her repatriation to the UK, accompanied by a medical escort, on Saturday 8 May. She is now being cared for in Leicester General hospital.

SFOR (Banja Luka)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if (a) the British Embassy offices and (b) the SFOR offices in Banja Luka are back in use following their occupation by demonstrators on 25 March; and if he will make a statement. [83628]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The British Embassy office, along with other international buildings in Banja Luka, was seriously damaged by vandals during demonstrations organised by extremists in the Serb Radical Party. The office is no longer in use. The SFOR office for Civil-Military Co-operation was slightly damaged but has now been repaired and is operating normally. The main SFOR headquarters were not occupied and have been in continuous use. The security situation is now described as calm. We and our international partners made clear in March that the actions of a minority of extremists would not derail the peace implementation agenda in Bosnia.

HEALTH

Male Health Awareness

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase public awareness of health issues affecting men; and if he will make a statement. [83638]

Ms Jowell: Specific action has already taken place, such as the introduction of the Campaign Against Living Miserably helpline for younger men, as well as support for initiatives such as last year's Europe Against Cancer Week which had cancer in men as its theme. In addition, the Department has provided funding for projects that look at the reasons why men are reluctant to take opportunities to improve their health.

The Government will shortly publish their new strategy for health in England—"Our Healthier Nation"—which will set out how Government, local authorities, health authorities, other local organisations, and individuals can work together in partnership to improve the health of everyone, including men. Reducing health inequalities—including those between men and women—is a key aim in "Our Healthier Nation", and action will focus on heart disease, cancer, accidents and suicides, and particularly opportunities for men's health which has been neglected for too long.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Green Transport Plan

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82845]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 11 May 1999]: Since last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which set targets for the introduction of green transport plans for Government Departments, my Department has completed 2 plans covering all headquarters and main buildings. Plans are being developed for all other key buildings in line with the target of March 2000 set in the White Paper.

Utility Regulation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what environmental appraisal his Department is undertaking of the review of utility regulation. [82855]

Mr. Battle: The review has concluded that Ministers should have powers to give statutory guidance to the regulators on the social and environmental objectives which are relevant to their responsibilities. The Government intend to legislate as necessary on the conclusions of the review as soon as parliamentary time can be made available. We also intend that this legislation should provide enabling powers for energy saving obligations in the gas and electricity industries. When the Government put their legislative proposals before Parliament, they will be accompanied by a suitable environmental appraisal.

Parental Leave

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his estimate is of the numbers and percentages of (a) mothers and (b) fathers who will choose to take their parental leave entitlement. [83808]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 10 May 1999]: We are committed to fostering a workplace culture which recognises the importance of family friendly employment policies, including parental leave, for both men and women in reconciling their work and family commitments. For the purposes of the regulatory impact assessment published with the Employment Relations Bill, we assumed that about 82,000 people would take parental leave each year, consisting of 6,000 men and 76,000 women. Over a five year period, this is equivalent to about 2 per cent. of eligible fathers and about 35 per cent. of eligible mothers.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list (a) the growth rate in and (b) the percentage of power supplied by each renewable energy source in each of the last five years; [81863]

(2) if he will list the types of renewable energy sources currently providing power and the contribution in percentage terms each source makes to the United Kingdom's total energy supply in the most recent year for which figures are available. [81784]

Mr. Battle: The types of renewable energy sources generating electricity in each of the last five years (1997 is the last year for which data are available) are given in the table. The percentages alongside each are the contribution made to total UK electricity supply. To set the figures in context, actual generation of electricity from each source is also given for 1997:

Table 1

In addition, renewable sources generated heat equal to 0.92 million tonnes of oil equivalent in 1997. Thus, in total, renewables accounted for 1.0 per cent. of the UK's total primary energy requirement in that year.

The information requested on the growth rate of renewable energy sources used to generate electricity in the United Kingdom is as follows:

Table 2

	Percentage change on previous year
	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997

Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics 1998

As is said in the discussion paper "New and renewable energy, Prospects for the 21st century", we expect the proportion of electricity from renewable sources to rise to 5 per cent. by 2003. The Government are working towards a target of renewable energy providing 10 per cent. of UK electricity as soon as possible and hope to achieve this by 2010.

Trade Ministers Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those subjects (a) which he will raise and (b) which he expects other states to raise at the Trade Ministers Council of 10 and 11 May. [83818]

Mr. Wilson: The meeting agreed that the EU's objectives in preparing for the next Round of World Trade Organisation talks in Seattle in November should be to secure agreement to:

a new Round of comprehensive multilateral trade negotiations embracing subjects and issues of interest to all WTO members;

a short, time limited Round to be completed in three years;

a 'single undertaking' to ensure that all participants accept the outcome of the negotiations as a whole; specific issues, which are ready for decision at Seattle, such as a binding commitment to provide duty free access for essentially all products from least developed countries, and steps to improve WTO transparency.

There was broad agreement among Member States on the EU's priority areas for future negotiations. These include: agriculture, services, investment, trade facilitation, technical standards, electronic commerce, industrial tariffs, trade and the environment, intellectual property rights, public procurement and trade defence instruments. The meeting emphasised the importance of ensuring that developing countries should play a full part in the Round and that the outcome should reflect their interests.

Accountancy Regulation

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of implementing his Department's proposals on regulation of accountancy; [82546]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of implementing his Department's proposals for regulating auditing; and what proportion of that cost each of the parties will bear. [82547]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The new framework for the regulation of the accountancy profession is non-statutory and funded by the bodies represented on the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies. The Government have not made their own estimate of the costs but the running costs are expected to be of the order of £5 million a year. Since much of the new framework will replace existing regulatory arrangements, the additional costs will be relatively small.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the accountancy firms whose affairs have been investigated following criticisms of their conduct in his Department's inspectors' reports. [82925]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Inspectors' reports published since 1990 which contain criticisms of accountancy firms are set out in the table. Such reports are referred to the recognised professional body of the firm concerned and investigations are a matter for that body.

Fax Surveys

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to regulate the use of fax surveys in cases where replies are charged at premium rates; and if he will make a statement. [83899]

Mr. Wills: Fax surveys where replies are charged at premium rates will frequently constitute unsolicited direct marketing faxes.

As indicated in my written answer of 27 January 1999, Official Report, column 284, the Government have taken steps to address this issue through the Telecommunications (Data Protection and Privacy) (Direct Marketing) Regulations 1998, which came into force on 1 May this year.

The Regulations prohibit the sending of unsolicited direct marketing faxes to private individuals and sole traders in the UK, as well as to partnerships in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. The Regulations also establish an "opt-out" scheme for corporate subscribers who do not wish to receive such faxes. The Office of Telecommunications (Oftel) is responsible for setting up the opt-out scheme and has appointed the Direct Marketing Association to run the scheme following competitive tender.

In addition, where unsolicited direct marketing faxes are sent, the Regulations require those sending such faxes to include their name and either an address or Freephone telephone number on which they can be contacted.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Millennium Dome

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what studies his Department has undertaken or evaluated to assess the impact of the Millennium Dome on the localities of (a) Bermondsey tube station and (b) London Bridge tube station, with particular reference to the Shad Thames development; [82428]

(2) what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the Millennium Dome on the localities of (a) Bermondsey tube station and (b) London Bridge tube station, with particular reference to the Shad Thames development. [82429]

Ms Glenda Jackson: When the Jubilee Line Extension is fully open, it is forecast that 114,590 and 17,102 people per day will use London Bridge and Bermondsey stations respectively. Of these, it is estimated that 2,232 passengers per day will use London Bridge station and 56 passengers per day will use Bermondsey station to travel to the Millennium Dome. Therefore, passengers travelling to and from the Dome will contribute about 2 per cent. of total usage at London Bridge and 0.3 per cent. at Bermondsey.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what studies his Department has carried out or evaluated to assess the impact of the Millennium Dome on the locality of North Greenwich tube station, with particular reference to parking for local businesses and residents; [82426]

(2) what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the Millennium Dome on the locality of North Greenwich tube station with particular reference to car-parking for local businesses and residents. [82427]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. This is a matter for the London Borough of Greenwich, which is implementing the Greenwich Millennium Controlled Parking Zone, which includes specific provisions to accommodate the parking needs of both residents and businesses. Having carried out extensive public consultation on its CPZ proposals, Greenwich's conclusion is that the scheme provides facilities to meet the majority of local parking demands, whilst safeguarding the area from unrestricted and intrusive parking from commuters and visitors to the Millennium Experience and other developments on the Greenwich Peninsula.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if people who are not visiting the Millennium Dome will be able to drive to North Greenwich tube station to deliver or collect passengers. [82420]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the interests of security and pedestrian/visitor safety London Transport is not proposing to open its "Kiss and Ride" facility at North Greenwich station until 2001.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of people, other than Millennium Dome visitors, who will use the Jubilee line tube stations of (a) Bermondsey, (b) London Bridge, and (c) North Greenwich. [82424]

Ms Glenda Jackson: London Transport estimate that the total number of people, other than those visiting the Millennium Dome, who will use (a) Bermondsey, (b) London Bridge and (c) North Greenwich on a daily basis is as follows:

Bermondsey: 17,046

London Bridge: 112,359

North Greenwich: 30,806.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of people, other than Millennium Dome visitors, who will use the Jubilee line between North Greenwich tube station and (a) Stratford, (b) London Bridge, (c) Waterloo, (d) Westminster, (e) Green Park and (f) Baker Street. [82425]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The total number of people, other than Millennium Dome visitors, who London Transport estimate will travel on a daily basis between North

Greenwich and (a) Stratford (b) London Bridge (c) Waterloo (d) Westminster (e) Green Park and (f) Baker Street, are as follows:

Station	To	From
(a) Stratford	4,028	3,663
(b) London Bridge	6,863	2,260
(c) Waterloo	4,890	1,679
(d) Westminster	4,200	1,298
(e) Green Park	3,461	1,145
(f) Baker Street	858	537

The figures quoted above are the number of passenger journeys made directly between North Greenwich and the named station, other than those visiting the Millennium Dome, i.e. on a daily basis, 4,028 passengers will travel to Stratford from North Greenwich and 3,663 will travel from Stratford to North Greenwich.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans have been made for the provision of car-parking for non-local commuters using the Jubilee Line. [82421]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No special provision has been made for car-parking spaces for non-local commuters using the Jubilee Line. However, there are car parks on the Jubilee Line at Stanmore, Canons Park, Wembley Park, Queensway and North Greenwich stations.

GM Crops

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much public money will be spent on trial sites for genetically modified crops in 1999. [83258]

Mr. Meacher: The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions is not spending any public money on the provision of trial sites of genetically modified crops. The Department is however funding two research programmes that are conducted on such trial sites.

The farm-scale evaluations investigating the effect of GM crop management on farmland wildlife are being conducted on sites provided by the industry group SCIMAC (Supply Chain Initiative for Modified Agricultural Crops). The research, costing £233,000 in 1999, is being paid for by DETR with contributions from MAFF and the Scottish Office. Another project, costing £46,353 in 1999, is monitoring for gene flow from GM crops in field trials.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many separate trial sites there will be for genetically modified crops in the United Kingdom in 1999. [83284]

Mr. Meacher: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 27 April 1999, Official Report, column 88.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the scientific design of the field-scale evaluations of the ecological effects of genetically modified crops will be finalised; and if he will make a statement. [83260]

Mr. Meacher: The successful contractors for the research have proposed a methodology for the ecological studies and this will be reviewed by the scientific steering committee. Fieldwork carried out this year will further help the contractors and steering committee to refine the methods to be used for subsequent years. It is envisaged that a provisional methodology will be made publicly available by the contractors and the steering committee soon after the steering group has met in early June. The final agreed methodology will be made available in the Autumn following the results of the first year's studies.

Railtrack

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had about the ability of Railtrack to demonstrate the practicality of its timetable for trains on the slow lines after the Passenger Upgrade II. [83695]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Railtrack has given an undertaking to the Rail Regulator on the capacity that it is committed to provide following the implementation of the Passenger Upgrade II project. I expect the Rail Regulator to ensure that this undertaking is met.

West Coast Mainline

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Railtrack about its ability to demonstrate that it can meet the requirement set by the regulator to provide an extra 42 paths of the slow line of the West Coast Mainline after Passenger Upgrade II. [83694]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Regulator is discussing with Railtrack what it needs to do to demonstrate that it can meet its commitment to provide the extra 42 paths.

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Railtrack about its statements relating to the needs of people travelling on the Euston to Rugby stretch of the West Coast Mainline in the company's network management statement and its capacity study. [83693]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Rail Regulator is considering whether the plans in Railtrack's 1999 Network Management Statement adequately reflect the reasonable requirements of train operators and funding bodies, including train operators serving the Euston to Rugby route. In addition, the Franchising Director has launched an extensive consultation exercise with local authorities and other bodies on the level and type of services which the rail network should provide. This will assist the Shadow Strategic Rail Authority in forming a view on how the network should be developed, including the route between Euston and Rugby.

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made on the West Coast Mainline upgrade; and if the programme is progressing (a) to schedule and (b) to budget. [83696]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Passenger Upgrade II project is a commercial agreement between Railtrack and West Coast Trains Ltd., and as such is a matter for the parties.

However, the Rail Regulator is monitoring Railtrack's compliance with undertakings it has given as to capacity for other train operators and funding bodies.

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to publish the timetable for the proposed development of the West Coast Mainline. [83698]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Shadow Strategic Rail Authority will monitor Railtrack's progress with the modernisation of the West Coast Mainline, and the Rail Regulator will monitor compliance by Railtrack with its undertakings to the Regulator on additional capacity and related issues.

Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to ensure that Railtrack considers the reasonable requirements of train operators for growth on the West Coast Mainline. [83697]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Railtrack has a licence obligation, which is enforced by the Rail Regulator, to meet the reasonable requirements of train operators and funding bodies to the extent reasonably practicable, including those requirements which relate to growth on the West Coast Mainline. I understand that the Rail Regulator is considering whether the plans set out in Railtrack's 1999 Network Management Statement demonstrate compliance with this obligation.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proportion of the proposed climate change levy he plans to redirect to develop energy efficiency measures with particular emphasis on small to medium sized enterprises; and what plans he has to extend the option for negotiating tradeable permits. [83704]

Mr. Meale: In his Budget Statement on 9 March 1999, Official Report, columns 173–190, the Chancellor announced as part of the climate change levy £50 million per annum package to fund schemes aimed at promoting energy efficiency directly including energy efficiency audits/advice, mechanisms to promote low carbon technologies, and additional support for renewable sources of energy. Further details will be set out in the draft UK climate change programme later this year.

The Government recognise that SMEs are a key part of the economy with special needs. They have already therefore designed specific schemes and programmes to help them save energy and money and, importantly from our point of view, do their bit to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. My Department's Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme provides independent advice and information on energy efficiency and support for RD&D projects. Non-domestic energy users including SMEs are an important target audience for the programme. The Department also funds grant schemes specifically for SMEs delivered through the Energy Saving Trust. The experience gained from the Energy Efficiency Best practice programme will provide a good basis for developing further energy efficiency schemes as part of the £50 million per annum package.

On tradeable carbon permits, the Government fully recognise the potential benefits of a carbon emissions trading scheme, particularly in allowing business to deliver greenhouse gas reductions in a cost effective way, and in preparing business and the City for the international emissions trading scheme to be established under the Kyoto Protocol. We also see carbon emissions trading as potentially having a complementary role alongside the climate change levy. We are therefore taking forward the recommendation made by Lord Marshall in his report on "Economic Instruments and the Business Use of Energy", by working with the CBI and ACBE (the Government's Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment) to develop a pilot trading scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the long-term objectives of the proposed climate change levy; and what assessment he has made of the effect the climate change levy will have on non-intensive energy users. [83705]

Mr. Meale: The climate change levy is intended to make a significant contribution to meeting our greenhouse gas targets—an estimated 1.5 million tonnes of carbon per annum. It is one of a number of measures being developed as part of a substantial package to help the UK achieve its climate change objectives and enable the Government to continue to play a leading role in international efforts to tackle climate change.

The climate change levy has been designed to be revenue neutral across the business economy as a whole. Non-intensive energy users will be expected to pay the full rate of climate change levy but, like all sectors of business, they will receive a reduction of 0.5 percentage points in their National Insurance Contributions. In line with the recommendations made by Lord Marshall in his report on "Economic Instruments and the Business Use of Energy", the Government intend to retain an incentive for all users to save energy at the margin. Firms which are non-intensive users of energy but which are labour intensive will tend to be net gainers from the budget package. The accompanying cut in employer National Insurance contributions will encourage employment opportunities, while the additional support for energy efficiency measures will help stimulate the development of new technologies.

The latest forecasts from the Meteorological Office's Hadley Centre estimate that average temperatures will rise by up to 3.5 per cent. by the end of the next century. As part of the international effort to tackle climate change, the UK has signed up to a legally binding target of 12.5 per cent. reduction in greenhouse gas emissions on 1990 levels by 2008–12. The Government propose to go further than this and have set a domestic goal of a 20 per cent. reduction in emissions of carbon dioxide—the most significant greenhouse gas—by 2010.

London Underground

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 13 January 1999, Official Report, column 212, what has been spent to date on consultancy costs for the London Underground public-private partnership. [84207]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand from London Transport that their expenditure on external consultants, from 20 March 1998 (the date of the Government's announcement) to 31 March 1999, for work on the PPP and restructuring London Underground was £18.5 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Self-harm)

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he uses to record incidents of self-harm in prison. [83593]

Mr. George Howarth: Incidents of self-harm are recorded when prisoners in Prison Service establishments require treatment in a health care centre, and are assessed by the clinician to have deliberately injured themselves.

Kosovo Refugees

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to respond to UNHCR's request that national Governments keep formalities to a minimum to speed up the evacuation of refugees from Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [83802]

Mr. Straw: The Government's priority, along with that of our European partners, remains to ensure that as far as possible, Kosovan refugees are cared for within the region so that they can return home when it is safe for them to do so. This is the refugees' overwhelming wish. We have also long made it clear that the United Kingdom stands ready to receive some thousands of refugees from the region on humanitarian grounds and on the basis of criteria agreed with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR). We received the first formal request from the UNHCR to take refugees on 20 April and agreed it within one hour. I announced in the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) on 5 May 1999, Official Report, columns 943–52, that we will be building up to taking around 1,000 refugees a week in the next few weeks.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are in place to assist local authorities and other organisations with the funding of services required in relation to the evacuation of refugees from Kosovo to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [83801]

Mr. Straw: I made clear in the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) on 5 May 1999, Official Report, columns 943–52, that local authorities and the voluntary sector will be reimbursed the additional costs that they incur. The details of that reimbursement are currently being worked out.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are in place for the reception and care of unaccompanied refugee children from Kosovo who arrive in the UK. [83588]

Mr. Straw: Unaccompanied minor children are being looked after in the region as far as possible to facilitate family reunion.

Children who have become separated from their parents have arrived in the United Kingdom in the company of a guardian or close adult relative. Every assistance is given in these cases to trace family in the United Kingdom, and this has been successful in at least one case.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the consultation process in place in relation to the establishment of the Criminal Records Bureau; what representations he has received concerning the establishment of the Bureau; and when the Bureau will be operational. [83709]

Mr. Boateng: A User Group will be established to enable the views of the users of the Criminal Records Bureau's services to be taken into account in its detailed implementation. Wider consultation on, for example, the content of the Code of Practice for bodies to be registered with the Bureau will also be undertaken.

Since the Home Secretary announced the establishment of the Criminal Records Bureau in December 1998 we have received a number of representations. We estimated at that time that it would take some two years to establish the Bureau.

Ms Kingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his current estimate of the impact on the voluntary sector of the proposed charges for criminal record checks at the Criminal Records Bureau. [83572]

Mr. Boateng: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) on 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 103.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each private finance initiative undertaken with his Department; if he will give the date the initiative started, the companies involved and whether any payments have been reduced to reflect performance against the contract; and if he will make a statement. [83707]

Mr. Straw: The available information is as follows:

Description	Start Date (Contract award date)	Company	Reductions in payment
IND Casework Programme	Spring 1996	Siemens Business Services	Yes
Medway Secure Training Centre (STC)	3 March 1997	Rebound ECD Limited	Yes

Wiltshire Police: Air Support	18 December 1997	Police Aviation Services	No
Stretford Divisional Headquarters and Fire Station	4 December 1998	PFF (Stretford Ltd.)	No

Criminal Conviction Certificates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to restrict the use of the criminal conviction certificate to employment purposes; and if he will make a statement on the steps that he is taking to ensure that the availability of criminal conviction certificates will not increase recidivism. [83795]

Mr. Boateng: Criminal conviction certificates will be available to individuals only on application and it will be for the individual concerned to decide to whom to provide the information contained in them. Criminal conviction certificates will give details only of unspent convictions. This is information which applicants can be asked to disclose at the moment. The criminal conviction certificate will allow employers to be sure that the information they have been given is full and accurate. We shall be consulting about guidance on the use of the certificates.

Personal Data

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if (a) the Security Service has taken over the responsibility of promoting the risk analysis methodology CRAMM from the CCTA and (b) personal data are required to be processed in order to promote the software; and if he will make a statement on how his Department will apply to provisions of the Data Protection Acts to such processing. [83798]

Mr. Straw: In 1997, the Security Service took over the management of CRAMM, but the promotion and marketing of the associated software package was undertaken by commercial organisations on its behalf. The Security Service is currently engaged in the transfer of the management responsibilities too, under Government licence, to a commercial consortium. Consequently, the Security Service holds no personal data in connection with the promotion of CRAMM.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Data Protection Registrar (a) on the application of Sections 28 and 29 of the Data Protection Act 1998 to the Security Service and (b) on provisions in Clauses 11 and 12 of the Immigration and Asylum Bill. [83791]

Mr. Straw: The Data Protection Registrar wrote to me, in February this year, concerning the application of the Data Protection Act 1998 to the security and intelligence agencies when it comes into force. I replied that this was still under consideration and that no decision had been made. I said the same to my hon. Friend in my letter of 31 March. This remains the position although useful discussions between the Registrar's officials and mine have taken place.

On (b), the Data Protection Registrar has been consulted about clauses 11 and 12 of the Immigration and Asylum Bill. In the light of discussions with her Office, some additional safeguards have been provided.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the effect of the Data Protection Act 1998 and the Human Rights Act 1998 on the automatic right of access on request to any recorded material taped in a public place by CCTV. [83570]

Mr. George Howarth: We have not received any representations on this issues.

The Data Protection Act 1998 provides a framework for the statutory regulation of public space Close Circuit Television (CCTV) systems. The Act builds upon the regime of the Data Protection Act 1984 but goes further in a number of respects. In particular, it provides enhanced rights for individuals in respect of personal data held about them by data controllers, including rights of subject access.

The Data Protection Registrar has started to develop a code of practice, to be issued under her new powers as Data Protection Commissioner. This code will provide guidance to CCTV operators on how to comply with the Act's requirement.

Paedophilia File

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were listed on his Department's paedophilia file on the latest date for which figures are available. [83586]

Mr. Boateng: The Home Office does not maintain a "paedophilia file".

However, the Sex Offenders Act 1997 requires offenders cautioned or convicted of certain sexual offences, including certain sexual offences against children, to notify the police of their name, address and date of birth within 14 days of caution/conviction. The information is provided to the local police and stored in the Police National Computer.

I understand that, as at 28 February 1999, 8,161 individuals were recorded on the Police National Computer as having notified the police in England and Wales of their details, in accordance with the 1997 Act. A breakdown of the sex of those who have notified the police of their details could, at present, be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Tote

Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the review of the Tote. [84050]

Mr. Straw: The Review of the Tote has been completed. I have considered the Report of the Steering Group which conducted the Review and have accepted the recommendations in it. I am most grateful to Peter Jones, the Chairman of the Tote, who chaired the Steering Group, for his skilful handling of this task. Copies of the Report have been placed in the Library.

The Tote's status as a non-departmental public body has served it well in the past but has become increasingly anomalous as the Tote has become a more commercial operation and developed its non-pool betting activities through acquisition of licensed betting offices. The Review, therefore, concluded that the commercial freedom now required by the Tote would be best provided by transfer to the private sector. This will require legislation and, in view of the time this is likely to take, the Review has made no recommendation as to the precise method of sale. That will need to be determined at the time.

Further work will now need to be undertaken on the various sale options, including the possibility of a sale to racing, in consultation with the Tote, the racing industry and others. The Review also recognised the need to have regard to the interests of the taxpayer, as well as other stakeholders. This means that the Government have rejected the possibility of the tote being transferred to racing without consideration.

Although the Tote's new status will now need to be worked out in detail, the Review has marked out the future path for the Tote which will enable it to develop and operate in a fully commercial way.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Drugs

9. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what role her Department is taking in encouraging developing countries to reduce the production and supply of illegal drugs. [82958]

Clare Short: We recently published a strategy paper on illicit drugs and the development assistance programme. It stresses the need to provide effective support to poor communities that grow narcotics so that other crops offer a better life than the proceeds of narcotic production. I have placed a copy in the Library of the House and will send one to the hon. Member.

Development Projects

10. Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she last met representatives of UK non-governmental organisations to discuss development projects in the poorest countries. [82959]

Clare Short: I met representatives of UK non-governmental organisations (NGO) on 29 April to discuss our proposals for new funding arrangements for UK organisations working to support development. There was a strong welcome for our new proposals which are designed to strengthen support for the development of civil society in the poorest countries, the details of which will be published by the summer.

Balkans Aid

12. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proposals she is evaluating for a reconstruction and development package for Balkan countries following the cessation of hostilities. [82961]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier this afternoon to my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), Official Report, column 303.

18. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement concerning UK assistance to Kosovar refugees. [82968]

25. Mr. Lock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the provision of emergency aid to Kosovo. [82975]

Clare Short: On his recent visit to Macedonia, the Prime Minister announced an increase in British humanitarian assistance to £40 million. This is being spent on relief supplies, logistics, humanitarian experts, medical care, shelter and services in camps, information provision, and family reunification. UK objectives remain to save lives, protect the rights of refugees, encourage tolerance in host countries towards refugees, to plan for new contingencies, including access to Kosovo when the security situation allows, and to plan for refugee return.

22. Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's response to the needs of Kosovar refugees in (a) Macedonia, (b) Albania and (c) Montenegro. [82972]

Clare Short: We have allocated £40 million since March in response to the needs of Kosovar refugees on relief supplies, logistics, humanitarian experts, medical care, shelter and services in camps, information provision, and family reunification.

Our objectives are to save lives and reduce suffering, protect the rights of refugees, encourage tolerance in host countries, and to plan for new contingencies, including the return of the refugees to Kosovo.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the preparations being made to provide assistance to Kosovar refugees over the winter. [82965]

Clare Short: Shelter and heating will be key issues for refugees during the cold weather, after their return to Kosovo and also for those who remain in neighbouring states. The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) is responsible for refugee care in this and other areas. We have offered assistance to UNHCR to help make contingency preparation for future refugee needs, and are ready to respond to requests.

Currency Speculation (Taxation)

13. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will assess the benefits for the world's poorest people of the introduction of a tax on currency speculation. [82962]

Clare Short: The proposal to tax currency transactions is of considerable interest. It could bring benefits in two ways. It could help reduce short term currency speculation, and it could raise significant resources to reduce poverty. Unfortunately, there are serious practical difficulties which stand in the way of implementation: it is difficult to distinguish between currency speculation and necessary currency transactions, and it would be difficult to agree on a satisfactory distribution of revenues. We will continue to study this and related proposals.

Amazonian Rain Forest

14. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support her Department provides for research into the Amazonian rain forest. [82963]

Clare Short: We are currently supporting ten projects in the Amazon basin with a significant research component. These cover research into ecosystems, biodiversity, silviculture, forest management, harvesting for timber and non-wood products, and environmental policy.

The ten projects are:

Bionte biomass and nutrient research project

Rain forest silviculture research project

Central Amazonia flora and vegetation project

Lake Mamiraua ecological station

Piper Hispidervium development project

G7 Pilot Program(G7PP): Science centres of excellence project

G7PP: Natural resources policy project

G7PP: Sustainable management of the varzea (flooded forests)

Ecology and silviculture of Swietenia macrophylla King (mahogany)

Integrated approach to managing Amazon forest biodiversity.

The total committed to these projects is some £22.4 million. The amount being spent on research within the projects cannot easily be disaggregated from other expenditure.

United Nations

15. Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to strengthen the role of the United Nations in development. [82964]

Clare Short: Our plans are set out in a recently published paper "Working with the United Nations for International Development: Institutional Strategy Paper", a copy of which I have placed in the Library of the House and which I have sent to my hon. Friend.

MISC 6 Cabinet Committee

16. Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what mechanism exists to ensure that the views of her Department are represented within the MISC 6 Cabinet Committee. [82966]

Clare Short: This matter is currently under consideration. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Regional Development Banks

17. Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has to strengthen the work of regional development banks. [82967]

Clare Short: We are working to ensure that the focus of the work of the Regional Development Banks is on poverty reduction, and we welcome recent progress on this in the Asian and African Development Banks. We are also urging increased effectiveness in the design, implementation and evaluation of their projects and programmes, and the adoption of appropriate pro-poor and financial strategies. We seek to exert influence at all levels including through contact with the Presidents of these institutions, other members of Bank management and country programme managers and their advisers.

Sustainable Development

19. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to involve the private sector in the promotion of sustainable development. [82969]

Clare Short: Globalisation is creating great wealth but its benefits are unevenly spread. The growing gap between rich and poor can create instability which increases risks for us all. It is both morally right and in business' interests that this wealth is spread more fairly.

Business has a key role to play in helping developing countries achieve the economic growth they need through investment and training. We are working with the private sector to promote a fair and stable operating environment necessary to achieve this. We are also working to promote socially responsible business practice.

Debt Relief

20. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received from supporters of the Jubilee 2000 campaign on the relief of international debt. [82970]

Clare Short: We are in regular contact with Jubilee 2000. I admire the role the churches and NGOs are playing in raising awareness among the public of the effects of high levels of indebtedness on some of the world's poorest people and building support for more debt relief in the run-up to Cologne Summit in June. I receive many letters from members of the public, directly and through their Members of Parliament, indicating their support for cancelling the unpayable debt of the poorest countries.

Multinationals

21. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she last met representatives of multinational companies to discuss the work of her Department. [82971]

Clare Short: We are developing working relationships with a wide range of businesses in pursuit of our poverty elimination objectives. On 20 April I spoke at a Symposium organised by the Prince of Wales Business Leaders Forum and Business in the Community on "Responsible Business in the Global Economy". The Symposium was sponsored by Diageo and BP-Amoco and was attended by over a hundred representatives from blue chip companies and non-governmental organisations. I will send a copy of the speech to my hon. Friend.

Burma

23. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the Government's policy towards aid to internally displaced persons in Burma. [82973]

Clare Short: Since 1996, we have provided almost £1 million of humanitarian assistance for Civil Society and UN agencies working with refugees and internally displaced people along the Burma-Thailand border, the Burma-China border and the Burma-Bangladesh border. We shall continue to respond to appeals for humanitarian assistance where safe and transparent delivery systems are available to ensure that assistance reaches the intended beneficiaries.

Cuba

24. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide assistance towards sustaining the Cuban health and education systems. [82974]

Clare Short: We contribute to Cuba through the European Commission whose humanitarian office (ECHO), focuses on the health and social sectors.

We have no plans to introduce a bilateral aid programme.

Africa

26. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many projects are being financed in African countries; and if she will make a statement. [82976]

Clare Short: We are currently spending £406 million in African countries. We also contribute to Africa through our work in the World Bank, EU, UN and other multilateral agencies. Our country strategy papers for Ghana, Kenya, Malawi, Mozambique, South Africa, Tanzania, Uganda and Zimbabwe have been placed in the Library of the House.

Education

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to press developing countries to increase spending on education, with particular reference to girls. [82960]

Clare Short: World Bank analysis demonstrates clearly that educating girls has major development impact. Our White Paper commits us to work to ensure that the international community achieves its agreed objective of securing quality primary education for all girls and boys by 2015. We have committed over £250 million to primary education partnerships with developing countries since 1997. These are designed to support and encourage these governments in prioritising spending on primary education.

Displaced Persons (Former Yugoslavia)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many refugees and displaced persons have been driven from their homes in (i) Serbia, (ii) Kosovo, (iii) Croatia, (iv) Macedonia, (v) Montenegro, (vi) Bosnia and (vii) Slovenia since 1990 as a result of the civil wars and conflicts in former Yugoslavia; and how much development assistance and humanitarian support has been made available by the British Government to the countries of the regions. [82956]

Clare Short: About 2½ million people have been driven from their homes in the former Yugoslavia as a result of the conflicts since 1991 and an additional 800,000 since March this year. In response, the UK Government have provided over £247 million in humanitarian, reconstruction and development support. We have committed £40 million since March for refugees from Kosovo.

East Timor

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how her Department intends to respond to the signing on 5 May of a tripartite agreement on East Timor by Indonesia, Portugal and the United Nations Organisation. [84031]

Clare Short: We will contribute $1 million to the Trust Fund established to enable the United Nations to conduct a popular consultation and ensure an orderly transition to autonomy or independence. We will support a co-ordinated international effort led by the United Nations, and are exploring how we might also help develop capacity in civil society.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Staff

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff work for his Department and its agencies; and how many did so in 1990. [82554]

Mr. Morley: On 1 April 1990, there were 10,495 staff working in my Department and its agencies. On 1 October 1998 (the latest information available) there were 9,702 staff working in MAFF and its agencies undertaking broadly comparable functions. In addition, there are 1,549 staff working for the Meat Hygiene Service who undertake functions which were the responsibility of local authorities in 1990.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the UN Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries (1995) with the provisions of the Common Fisheries Policy; and if he will make a statement. [83400]

Mr. Morley: The UN Food and Agriculture Organisation's Code of Conduct for Responsible Fisheries is a voluntary instrument which sets out a general framework of principles and standards aimed at ensuring the responsible conservation, management and development of fisheries. It is a wide-ranging document covering the capture, processing and marketing of fish and fish products, aquaculture, fisheries research and the integration of fisheries into coastal state management. The European Community is committed to ensuring that the Common Fisheries Policy, which aims to promote responsible fisheries management and the conservation of fish stocks, is fully compatible with the relevant provisions of the Code.

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for information he received under the Open Government: Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83119]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 May 1999]: For monitoring purposes, this information is collected on a calendar year basis. Information for 1997 was published last year in the Open Government: Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report. In the year ended 31 December 1998 MAFF and its agencies received 41 applications for information under the Code and granted 32 of them.

TREASURY

Tax Avoidance

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what form he proposes to implement his proposals on tax avoidance set out in Inland Revenue Press Release 35. [83371]

Dawn Primarolo: The proposals will be legislated in the Finance Bill 2000. They will provide a mechanism for looking through a contractual relationship, where services are provided through an intermediary, such as a company, but the underlying relationship between the worker and the client has the characteristics of employment. In those circumstances, the engagement will be treated as employment for the purpose of tax and National Insurance.

The Inland Revenue is presently working with interested parties on details of the practical application of the proposals.

Third World Debt

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much third world debt the UK has written off since May 1997; how much remains due to the UK; to whom this is owed; and if he will make a statement. [82957]

Ms Hewitt: The UK has been at the forefront of efforts to improve existing debt relief mechanisms since May 1997. The Chancellor has called on his international colleagues to implement faster, wider and deeper debt relief.

Since 1997, HM Government have written off or committed under existing debt relief mechanisms to write-off around £400 million of debt from developing countries.

The total developing country debt outstanding under current debt agreements is just under £9 billion.

ECOFIN Council

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the ECOFIN Council held in Brussels on 10 May; and if he will make a statement. [83973]

Ms Hewitt: I attended the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 10 May 1999.

There was an orientation debate on the Commission's draft 1999 Broad Economic Policy Guidelines. The draft was broadly welcomed. ECOFIN will agree a text at the 25 May ECOFIN after further discussion at official level.

The Presidency's draft European Employment Pact was discussed. The Pact will be discussed further at official level before being adopted by the joint meeting of ECOFIN and the Social Affairs Council on 25 May. The Employment Pact was also discussed informally over lunch with the Social Partners.

The Commission presented to ECOFIN its preliminary draft budget for 2000, which it had adopted on 28 April. Discussion emphasised the need for budget discipline.

The President of the Economic and Financial Committee proposed a procedure for involving ECOFIN in the formulation of Common Strategies. The proposals were agreed.

I urged the Commission to speed up the disbursement of already agreed funds for the Federal Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and Albania.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

National Curriculum

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the consultation on the national curriculum review will be launched; and if he will make a statement. [84079]

Mr. Blunkett: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority will be carrying out the consultation on the proposed revisions to the national curriculum on my behalf. Sir William Stubbs and I will jointly launch the consultation tomorrow, 13 May. The Consultation will last for ten weeks. All schools will receive information about the consultation, and the full consultation package will also be available on the Internet, at http://qca.org.uk/ncr/ from tomorrow morning. Paper copies will also be placed in the Library tomorrow.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Arts Council

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Arts Council of England regarding the future of its commissioning budget; and if he will make a statement. [83046]

Mr. Chris Smith: I have regular discussions with the Arts Council of England on a wide range of issues. In the case of new music, I understand that the Arts Council and regional arts boards provided £74,000 and £262,515 respectively in 1998–99 for new music commissions. The Arts Council also funds a number of organisations which support new music (the Society for the Promotion of New Music, Sonic Arts Network, London Sinfonietta and the British Music Information centre) adding a further £619,200 to the above figures. Other regularly funded organisations support new music within their grant in aid allocations, and performing groups and composers have also received support through the Arts For Everyone schemes.

Museums

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assistance his Department is providing for local authority administered museums which are seeking to increase and improve their visitor attractions whilst retaining free admission. [83720]

Mr. Alan Howarth: For the first time, my Department is spreading its financial support to museums beyond those which it directly funds by means of a £15 million challenge fund for Designated museums. Of the 43 Designated museums services eligible to apply, 17 are local authority managed. The first awards have also been made from the Heritage Lottery Fund's new £7 million Museums and Galleries Access Fund established to assist Museums and Galleries Commission registered museums with touring exhibitions, transport costs, and other audience development approaches. In addition, a £½ million IT Challenge Fund and a £½ million Education Challenge Fund will be available to Commission registered museums this year and next year to support access, lifelong learning and educational projects.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Planning

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many non-determination appeals have been made to the Planning Appeals Commission for each district in Northern Ireland; how many were upheld; and in how many cases the Commission disagreed with the main recommendations of the commissioner hearing the appeal in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [82904]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The information requested in relation to non-determination appeals is included in the table. The table covers the last five years, and provides information in the format requested.

Police Ombudsman

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she expects to make the appointment of the police ombudsman. [81607]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 29 April 1999]: We intend to re-advertise the post nationally very soon. We hope to appoint a Police Ombudsman designate in late July/early August. Much will depend, however, on the number of applicants, the availability of candidates for interview and the date on which the successful candidate is available to take up post, by Royal Appointment.

Green Transport Plan

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for her Department. [82843]

Mr. Paul Murphy [holding answer 11 May 1999]: Since last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which set targets for the introduction of Green Transport Plans for Government Departments, we are working to complete shortly plans covering all our headquarters and main buildings.

We are developing plans for all other key buildings in line with the target for March 2000 set in the Integrated Transport White Paper.

Police Interview Recordings

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what powers she has to accede to requests from persons interrogated at a holding centre that she listen to RUC recordings of their interrogations; what representations she has received in relation to four men arrested at Drumintee on 13 April; and if she will list the classes of person who may have access to interview recordings, indicating in each case the permission required to effect such access. [83383]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 11 May 1999]: The audio recording of police interviews with terrorist suspects is governed by a Code of Practice, laid in Parliament in draft on 23 February 1999 and on course to become operational on 24 May 1999. The Code of Practice makes no provision for the Secretary of State to listen to the audio recordings; nor does the Secretary of State consider it appropriate that she should intervene in any ongoing police investigation.

On 15 April 1999, representations were received from a firm of solicitors on behalf of three persons arrested on 13 April 1999 under section 14 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 that there was no basis for their detention. The representations included a request that the Secretary of State should listen to the audio recordings of the interviews as a means of confirming this. The Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy), acting on behalf of the Secretary of State and in accordance with S14(5) of the PTA, had earlier approved an application from the police for a two day extension of detention in respect of the persons detained. In light of the solicitors' representations, the Minister further considered the police application and upheld his decision to approve it.

Access to audio recording is as follows:

(i) the detained person may listen to the audio recording, on the authority of the Sub-Divisional Commander;

(ii) a solicitor may listen to the audio recording, on the authority of the Sub-Divisional Commander;

(iii) if a person is charged or informed that he or she will be prosecuted, a solicitor acting for that person may apply to the Sub-Divisional Commander for a copy of the audio recording;

(iv) the Director of Public Prosecutions may listen to the audio recording, on his own authority;

(v) a court may listen to the audio recording, on its own authority;

(vi) the audio recording may constitute evidence on behalf of a party to civil proceedings, if relevant.

Forest Service

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Forest Service for the financial year 1999–2000. [84080]

Marjorie Mowlam: The following Key targets have been set for the Forest Service for 1999–2000.

To achieve 800 hectares of new planting in public and private sectors combined.

To offer for sale 325,000 m^3 of timber.

To maintain visitor numbers in charged areas at above 90 per cent. of the average level achieved over the last 5 years.

To maintain the area of forest under sustainable management.

To respond to 100 per cent. of written correspondence within 15 working days.

To approve (or reject) 90 per cent. of applications under the Woodland Grant Scheme and Farm Woodland Premium Scheme within 8 weeks of receipt of a properly completed application form.

To pay, following planting, 90 per cent. of grant claims within 8 weeks of receipt of a properly completed claim form.

To determine the way forward for long-term partnerships with the wood processing industry (as recommended by the PFI study).

To market test/contract out 15 per cent. of direct costs of forest operations.

To achieve an outturn which meets the targeted net cost of the forestry programme.

To achieve at least 3 per cent. efficiency savings.

To control DRC and programme expenditure to within 1 per cent. of the final control totals.

The Forest Service Business Plan for 1999–2000 will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament at a later date.

Rivers Agency

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Rivers Agency for the financial year 1999–2000. [84081]

Marjorie Mowlam: The following Key Targets have been set for the Rivers Agency for 1999–2000.

To construct or refurbish 0.63 km of urban flood defences.

To increase the length of designated sea defences having appropriate standards of protection to 32.5 per cent.

To accommodate increased storm run-off from 126.5 hectares of development land.

To replace/refurbish 1.616 km of dangerous culverts.

To complete maintenance work on 265 km of urban watercourses and 1,203 km of rural watercourses.

To issue substantive replies to 80 per cent. of written inquiries within 15 working days of receipt.

To respond to 98 per cent. of Schedule 6 applications within 3 months.

To control programme expenditure to within 0.5 per cent. shortfall of the final control total.

To control DRC expenditure to within 1 per cent. shortfall of the final control total.

To achieve 3 per cent. efficiency gains in the 1999–2000 financial year.

The Rivers Agency Business Plan for 1999–2000 will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament at a later date.

Social Security Agency

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Social Security Agency for the current financial year. [84082]

Mr. McFall: The following targets have been set with the objective of improving the service provided to customers. I am satisfied that the targets represent a demanding challenge for the Agency. The targets will be included in the Agency's 1999–2002 Strategic and Business plan, which is due for publication this month. A copy of the plan will be placed in the Library. The targets are as follows:

1. Benefit Accuracy

Disability Living Allowance
to pay the correct amount in at least 87 per cent. of cases.

Incapacity Benefit
to pay the correct amount in at least 94 per cent. of cases.

Income Support
to pay the correct amount in at least 88 per cent. of cases.

Jobseeker's Allowance
to pay the correct amount in at least 90 per cent. of cases.

2. Customer Satisfaction

90 per cent. of customers to regard the Agency's service as satisfactory or better.

3. Financial Recovery recovery of overpayments—£3.2 million.

benefit savings from detection and prevention of fraud—£22.0 million.

4. Resource Management to achieve cash efficiency savings of the order of £1.1 million.

The customer satisfaction target is presently measured by independent survey and usually covers a two year period, in this case 1999–2000 and 2000–01. As such it will be measured again early in the year 2001.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 12 May. [83630]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others and gave a speech in memory of John Smith, my predecessor as leader of the Labour party. In addition to my duties in the House, I have further such meetings later today.

CABINET OFFICE

Government Car and Despatch Agency

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what targets he has set the Government Car and Despatch Agency for 1999–2000. [84172]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I have set the agency the following targets:

Financial

to break even on an accruals basis;

to achieve a sales turnover of £11 million;

to maintain expenditure and receipts within voted provision;

Efficiency

to maintain the gross contribution as a percentage of sales at 1998–99 outturn; to increase the income per pound for labour cost to £2.04;

Quality

to improve customer satisfaction by 2 per cent.

Environmental

to convert to alternative environmentally friendly fuels 50 per cent. of the cars purchased and capable of such conversion.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health and Social Services Estates Agency

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for 1999–2000 for the Northern Ireland Health and Social Services Estates Agency. [84333]

Marjorie Mowlam: The targets, which have been set for 1999–2000, are based on the corporate aims and objectives of the Agency as set out in section 5 of its Corporate and Business Plan and reflect in part a refinement of the previously set targets. The targets are in line with the Government's policy of seeking to improve the service provided to clients in terms of both quality and value for money and I am satisfied that they present a demanding challenge for the Agency. A copy of the Corporate and Business plan will be placed in the Library.

The targets are as follows:

Delivery of Services

1. Provide a regional support service to the HSSE and the Department on embedded systems and medical devices in relation to the Y2K problem in the HPSS estate. As a central part to this support service, obtain the compliance status of Northern Ireland utilities (electricity, water etc.) and provide guidance on the required level of contingency planning recommended for these utility services.
2. Provide the consultation draft of the Review of the Key Management Document in the Firecode suite "Policy and Principles", by March 2000.
3. Provide and Energy/Environment Report for the Minister on the progress of the DHSS and the HPSS is making towards meeting the Government's targets on green issues by November 1999.
4. Assess and advise the HSSE on 60 per cent. of capital investment business case submissions within 20 working days, subject to a maximum 24 business cases per annum.
5. Provide the HSSE with a Defects Centre in relation to the HPSS estate. Investigate and clear (60 per cent.) of all adverse incidents within six months (and 90 per cent. within two years) of notification to Health Estates subject to a maximum of 120 adverse incidents per annum.
6. 80 per cent. of clients to regard the Directorate's Client Support and Project Management Services as satisfactory or better in respect of:

   Two projects being procured by the PFI/PP process with an estimated capital value of £2.6 million.

   Preparation and completion of 5 Outline Business Cases with an estimate capital value of £15.35 million.

   The completion of the tendering and contract award stages of 4 projects with an estimated capital value of £12.25 million.

   Nine projects during the construction/completion stages with an estimated capital value of £134.85 million.
7. Complete 90 per cent. of periodic specialist sterilizer equipment tests by the programmed dates and 100 per cent. within 6 weeks of that date subject to a maximum client request for this service of 500 man days.
8. Complete 95 per cent. of diagnostic equipment and laboratory equipment acceptance tests, and other tests within 4 weeks of receipt of written request and the remainder within 10 weeks.
9. Complete 95 per cent. of the initial evaluations for Diagnostic Imaging Equipment Projects within 4 weeks of receipt of written request and the remainder within 10 weeks. Complete Diagnostic Imaging Equipment Projects within 10 months of clients providing their instruction to proceed.

Financial Management

10. Ensure that the Agency lives within its running cost allocation and demonstrates that its full costs are recovered, on a notional basis, through Service Level Agreements with clients.

Emergency Provisions Legislation

Mr. McNulty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she intends to publish the report by Mr. J. J. Rowe QC on the operation during 1998 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1996. [84334]

Marjorie Mowlam: Mr. Rowe's Report is being published today and copies are being placed in the Library. I note that Mr. Rowe recommends that the legislation be renewed.

The UK's counter terrorism legislation is currently under review. The Government intend to bring forward, as soon as possible, new UK-wide legislation to replace the existing temporary provisions.

In December last year, the Government published a consultation paper entitled, "Legislation Against Terrorism". Around eighty responses have been received. The process of examining each contribution and preparing the Government's legislative response is well underway. The Government have made clear that during the period the new legislation is being prepared it will not leave the people of Northern Ireland without the protection of necessary counter-terrorism measures. For that reason I propose to continue the EPA in force for a temporary period and I shall lay before the House as soon as possible a draft Order for consideration which would have that effect.

The Government are committed to steadily transforming the security environment in Northern Ireland and achieving complete normalisation as part of the implementation of the Good Friday Agreement as a whole. In such circumstances, the Government's position is that there will be no need for any temporary Northern Ireland specific powers. The Government will make a judgment about that nearer the time the new UK-wide legislation is introduced.

Valuation and Lands Agency

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will make a statement on the Review of the Valuation and Lands Agency. [84335]

Mr. Paul Murphy: On 27 February 1998, Official Report, columns 413–14, I announced to the House the Review of the Valuation and Lands Agency. Each Agency undergoes a periodic review to evaluate performance and to reconsider whether agency status is the best way of doing the job.

I am pleased to announce that this Review is now complete. It has found that there have been substantial improvements in productivity and efficiency, and in the overall quality of service to customers. The Review recommends that the Valuation and Lands Agency should remain an Agency within the Department of Finance and Personnel.

The Review goes on to recommend that a feasibility study should be carried out into the possibility of a merger with the Rate Collection Agency. The decision, under devolved arrangements, to transfer the Rate Collection Agency to the Department of Finance and Personnel should facilitate such a study and I have commended the findings in the Review Report to the First Minister (Designate) and deputy First Minister (Designate).

I am placing a copy of the Report in the Library today. Work will continue on a revised Framework Document and this will become a matter for the devolved administration in Northern Ireland to approve in due course.

PRIME MINISTER

Devolution

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to amend the Civil Service Code to take account of devolution for Scotland and Wales. [84171]

The Prime Minister: There will continue, under the Devolution settlements, to be a unified Home Civil Service whose members will serve their respective Administrations in accordance with the well-established principles of integrity, honesty, impartiality and objectivity. A revised Civil Service Code is being issued to all civil servants to reflect the changes brought about by devolution to Scotland and Wales. Copies of the Code have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Prime Minister if the Intelligence and Security Committee has reported to him on Sierra Leone; and if he will publish the report. [84486]

The Prime Minister: The Intelligence and Security Committee sent a Report examining the intelligence aspects of the counter-coup in Sierra Leone to me in February. Following discussions about which parts of the Report must be withheld for security reasons, the Report is being published today. The Government intend to publish a formal response to the Report in due course.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

M11

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the eventual total cost of the M11 Link Road; and on what date it is expected to be fully completed. [83598]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 13 May 1999:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the A12 Hackney to M11 Link Road.

The current estimated total out turn cost of the scheme is £360 million.

We anticipate opening the road to traffic in phases, starting next month. The whole scheme should be open later this Summer, although finishing works will carry on until the Autumn.

Driving Licences

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in how many instances in each of the last five years for which figures are available, a request for change of the sex recorded on a driving licence was (a) received and (b) acted upon. [83571]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No separate record is kept of applications. Provided the application is supported by appropriate documentation, the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency will accept the request.

M6 Corridor

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress he has made in commissioning the M6 corridor transport study; and what timetable he has agreed. [83743]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Lord Whitty announced on 23 March 1999 the start dates for the programme of multimodal and roads based studies. The West Midlands to North West Conurbation Study will begin in Summer 1999. Consultation with the Regional Planning Conferences in both the West Midlands and the North West will start before then, initially on the preparation of the consultants' brief, and will continue throughout the life of the study. As part of the multimodal study, consultants will develop a full range of options to tackle the traffic problems of the corridor, including the possibility of modal shift.

Multimodal Transport Studies

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has issued to prospective consultants in respect of consultation with the public as part of the proposed multimodal transport studies. [83746]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Department is currently preparing guidance on the methodology for the multimodal studies. The guidance will be aimed at consultants undertaking work on the studies and will cover the role of consultation in the study process.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what opportunities there will be for local stakeholders to be involved in drawing up the terms of reference for the proposed multimodal transport studies. [83745]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government Offices responsible for taking forward the multimodal studies will draw up terms of reference in consultation with the local Regional Planning Bodies and agree them with the study steering group.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance he has issued in respect of the geographical scope of multimodal studies; what area the proposed M6 corridor transport study will cover; and which major routes will be included other than the M6. [83744]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The geographical scope of each multimodal study will be set out in its terms of reference, which will be drawn up by Government Offices in consultation with the Regional Planning Bodies.

The terms of reference for the West Midlands to North West Conurbation study have not yet been agreed, but the geographical scope is expected to be the broad corridor along the M6/west coast main line routes, including the A500, A50(M1), A34 and other possible rail and bus routes.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 20 April 1999, Official Report, column 473, on genetically modified crops, if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay between the holding reply and the final reply. [83820]

Mr. Meacher: The sudden upsurge in media and public interest in genetic modification technology earlier this year resulted in a very substantial increase in the volume of Ministerial correspondence, Parliamentary Questions and correspondence from members of the public needing to be handled by officials. My officials have also been required to handle significantly increased levels of briefing resulting from several Select Committee appearances and the general increase in Ministerial activity in this area. This increased level of activity coupled with the need to provide full and considered replies to the large number of sometimes detailed and complex Parliamentary Questions tabled has inevitably resulted in some increase in response time, which I regret.

Concessionary Bus Fares

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he plans to put in place to ensure that local authority transport schemes which currently exceed the proposed minimum standard of half price concessionary bus fares for older people do not reduce their benefits to older people when the proposed national scheme is implemented. [83845]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Beyond the terms of our national standard minimum for concessionary travel schemes for elderly people, local authorities will continue to have full discretion to decide on the terms of their concessionary travel schemes. Local authorities will therefore remain entirely free to provide concessionary fare schemes which are more generous than our proposed statutory minimum. We believe that it is right to maintain the principle that locally elected authorities should consider these matters in the light of local needs and circumstances and their overall financial priorities, and to be locally accountable for the decisions then made.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if his proposed minimum national concessionary bus fare scheme for older people will be applicable to all people aged over 60 years. [83844]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Our proposed national minimum for concessionary fares will be based on the present statutory position, whereby concessionary travel for older people is linked to the state pension age.

Waste

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what impact the landfill tax has had on reducing the proportion of total waste which is disposed of through landfill sites; and what proportion of United Kingdom waste has been recycled in each of the last 10 years. [83623]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 11 May 1999]: The information currently available suggests that the landfill tax has reduced the quantity of material going to licensed landfill sites, particularly construction and demolition waste. There is little statistical information at this stage to support any conclusions as to the extent to which this results from a reduction in the amount of waste generated as opposed to being diverted to different outlets.

The data available for municipal waste only are as follows:

Municipal waste recycling rate

Single Vehicle Approvals

Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress is being made following his consultation on the system of single vehicle approvals. [84208]

Dr. Reid: Changes to the current limit on the number of commercially traded vehicles which can be approved into the UK each year under the Single Vehicle Approval Scheme (SVA) scheme will be introduced from March 2000. The main elements of the changes are:

Progressive lifting of limits on the total number of commercially traded vehicles which can be approved and registered under SVA, starting with 1,000 vehicles in March next year and increasing by 1,000 each month until the end of year 2000 when all limits will be lifted.

Introduction of enhanced technical standards for key environmental, safety and security (anti-theft) items to apply to commercially traded vehicles. The current SVA standards will continue to apply to amateur-built vehicles and genuine personal imports as redefined below.

Complete lifting of limits on vehicles which have been approved to equivalent standards to the enhanced SVA in other European member states.

Tightening of the rules for vehicles to qualify as "personal imports" by requiring importers to have lived abroad for at least 12 months and used their vehicles abroad for at least 6 months.

Transport (EU)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what response his Department has made to the European Commission White Paper establishing a common transport infrastructure charging framework in the EU. [83941]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Commission has not invited member states to comment on its White Paper and neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State nor I have made any formal response. However, as proposed in the White Paper, the Commission has established a committee of experts to develop guidance on methods to estimate the marginal costs of transport, and our officials are participating in that process.

Auditors

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what is the maximum period of time for which an auditor may be appointed by the Audit Commission; [84044]

(2) what powers the Audit Commission has to terminate the appointment of an appointed auditor (a) in general and (b) for professional incompetence; [84045]

(3) what powers the Audit Commission has to vary the personal fee levels of appointed auditors. [84046]

Ms Armstrong: Section 3 of the Audit Commission Act 1998 makes provision for the appointment of auditors by the Audit Commission. There is no prescribed maximum period, but it is the commission's general policy, in accordance with good professional practice, to change a council's auditor at least once every seven years. The Audit Commission may terminate an appointment where the auditor fails to comply with the statutory Code of Audit Practice, or other statutory obligations. Where an auditor is not a Commission employee, section 3(8) provides for the appointment to be on such terms and for such period as the Commission may determine. Such terms include the personal fees payable by the commission to the individual auditor or the firm of individuals.

District Auditor's Inquiry (Westminster)

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received on the impact on Westminster City Council's fulfilment of its statutory functions of the reimbursement of legal costs associated with councillors and officers in connection with the District Auditor's inquiry into designated sales. [84065]

Ms Armstrong: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister is not aware of any such representations.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he proposes to take, in relation to the work of the auditor involved in the inquiry, following the Court of Appeal's judgment reducing the Westminster auditor's calculation of loss in connection with the inquiry into designated sales. [84064]

Ms Armstrong: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has no function in relation to the work of auditors appointed by the independent Audit Commission.

Planning Inquiries

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the average time taken between the completion of a planning inquiry and the announcement of the inspector's decision within the south-west region. [84220]

Mr. Caborn: Such information is available only for Planning Appeals made under S78 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990. In the last year April 1998 to March 1999 the average time taken for cases in the south-west region decided by the Secretary of State was 27 weeks compared with a national average of 34 weeks.

Rents

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what were the average rents in each year since 1989 for (a) local authority properties, (b) housing association properties and (c) private properties. [84047]

Mr. Raynsford: The average weekly rents for England are as set out. These averages take no account of differences in the size, age or location of dwellings covered under the three tenures.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Community Legal Service

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department when he proposes to publish the Community Legal Service consultation document. [83822]

Mr. Hoon: I expect to publish the document shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the current caseload of the Serious Fraud Office. [83889]

The Solicitor-General: The current caseload of the Serious Fraud Office is 66 active cases. Caseload figures for the three previous financial years, as set out in the SFO Annual Reports, are as follows: 70, 82 and 78 (for 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 respectively).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Fraud

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) discussions he has had and (b) proposals his Department has put forward at Council of Ministers' meetings in respect of EU fraud; and if he will make a statement. [77775]

Ms Quin: [holding answer 19 March 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Treasury on 19 March 1999, Official Report, column 858–59.

European Commission

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, column 505, for what reason he has not received from the European Commission the information requested by the hon. Member for Ludlow on 13 January. [81980]

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 20 January 1999, Official Report, column 505, on the European Commission, what steps he has taken to secure the information requested from the European Commission. [82179]

Ms Quin: I have written to the right hon. and hon. Members. A copy of these letters has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the proposals which he has made at the Council of Ministers for the reform of the European Commission. [82482]

Ms Quin: The UK has shared with partners a number of specific reform ideas aimed at making the Commission more efficient, transparent and accountable. These include changes to Commission internal management structures, personnel policy and financial control. Some progress has already been made. For example, the Council is expected shortly to approve plans for an independent fraud investigation office within the Commission, the make-up of which will owe much to UK ideas.

EU Council Meetings

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the average proportion of the agenda for European Union Council meetings attended by his Ministers which change in the period between his monthly announcement of the proposed agenda and the actual meeting. [82296]

Ms Quin: The agendas for EU General Affairs Councils (GACs) are subject to changes in the run-up to the meetings: Ministers often need to react quickly to events. Over the last six months, I estimate that the agendas for the GACs have changed by up to 50 per cent. between the monthly announcements and the actual meetings.

As part of the Parliamentary process, my department provides the Scrutiny Committees with updated agendas for the GACs two weeks in advance of the meetings, which are updated thereafter if there are further significant changes.

EU Treaties

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish as a single paper the texts of the revised Treaties on European Union and the European Community as coming into effect on 1 May together with all the protocols and declarations contained in their component treaties and showing for each article therein references to earlier numbered Articles related to those now current. [83819]

Ms Quin: I refer my hon. Friend to Command Paper CM 3780, presented to Parliament by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary in October 1997. The consolidated version of the Treaty on European Union begins on page 110, that of the Treaty establishing the European Community on page 130. This text also includes references to the previous numbering of articles.

Peacekeeping (UN)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 421, on UN peacekeeping, if he will list the cases which have arisen, other than in Kosovo, when in the light of all the circumstances a limited use of force has been deemed justifiable under international law in support of purposes laid down by the Security Council. [84066]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: A limited use of force was deemed justifiable in support of the purposes laid down by the Security Council but without the council's express authorisation in order to avert a humanitarian catastrophe in Iraq shortly after the Gulf War. The No Fly Zones were established in 1991 (northern Iraq) and 1992 (southern Iraq) in support of UNSCR 688 which called on Iraq to end its brutal repression of the civilian population: coalition aircraft help protect the interests of the Shias in the south and the Kurds and other minorities in the north by ensuring Iraqi aircraft cannot fly below the 33rd or above the 36th parallel.

Military Exports (Yugoslavia)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of British military equipment exported to Yugoslavia since 1989 on the present conflict. [80160]

Mr. George Robertson: I have been asked to reply.

Since the introduction of UN and EU arms embargoes in 1991 we have no evidence of UK companies, either directly or through intermediaries, supplying the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia with any military equipment prohibited by the embargoes. Details of military equipment exports during the period 1 January 1989 to July 1991, when the EU embargo was applied, were published on 16 February 1993, Official Report, columns 124–32, in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith). These included military aircraft component spares, which were short term consumable items and are unlikely to still be in service. We assess that they have had little direct impact on operations.

Radar equipment and spare parts to support the civil/military radar system were also supplied. Many of these assets have been attacked and damaged or destroyed by NATO air-strikes. We believe that some UK supplied equipment is continuing to contribute to Serbia's remaining air surveillance capability.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

SOLOTEC (Chief Executive)

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the reasons for the financial compensation package paid on the resignation of the Chief Executive of SOLOTEC. [83377]

Mr. Mudie: The Board of SOLOTEC is responsible for setting the terms and conditions of SOLOTEC's staff. I understand that the Board decided last summer to vary the then Chief Executive's terms of employment to incorporate the severance payment he has since received. I further understand that the Board at the time believed that the financial compensation package was necessary to retain the services of the Chief Executive. When the Board subsequently decided to part with the Chief Executive, they decide to make the payment in full.

The compensation package was agreed and paid without the knowledge of the Department. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made clear our view that there are no circumstances in which a payment of this size could be justified for any TEC employee.

Latin American Students

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the (a) number of and (b) origin of students studying at British universities from the countries of Latin America. [83369]

Mr. Mudie: The latest available data are given in the following table:

Number of higher education students from Latin American countries studying in higher education institutions in Great Britain 1998–99

Country	Number of students [1]
Argentina	365
Bolivia	35
Brazil	1,046
Chile	202
Colombia	475
Costa Rica	25
Cuba	10
Ecuador	50
El Salvador	15
Guatemala	12
Honduras	6
Mexico	1,056
Nicaragua	8
Panama	27
Paraguay	15
Peru	120
Uruguay	43
Venezuela	279
Total	3,789

[1] Full-time, part-time, undergraduates and postgraduates

Mature Students

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish figures from the Higher Education Statistics Agency showing the numbers of part-time and full-time mature students who entered higher education in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 1998. [83590]

Mr. Mudie: Information for the three years requested is given in the table.

Mature [1] entrants to UK higher education institutions

Year	Full-time	Part-time	Total
1996–97	172,100	226,000	398,100
1997–98	170,400	230,800	401,200
1998–99	168,700	250,100	418,700

[1] Mature entrants are defined as students in their first year of study aged 25 and over on postgraduate courses and aged 21 and over on undergraduate courses. The numbers cover home and overseas domiciled students and are taken from HESA December Student Record datasets.

Note:

Comparisons between 1997–98 and 1998–99 are affected by a change in the basis for identifying first year students used by the Higher Education Statistics Agency (HESA). Adjusting for this change gives a growth rate of -4 per cent. in full-time entrants (rather than -1 per cent. suggested by the unadjusted numbers) and +5 per cent. in part-time (rather than +8 per cent. suggested by the unadjusted numbers).

The figures show that the numbers of mature students have increased since the introduction of tuition fees. The tendency for more mature students to opt for part-time rather than full-time study began before tuition fees were introduced for all categories of student and has continued since.

Brain Drain

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the proportion of UK citizens with post-graduate degrees obtained at British universities who have subsequently taken up employment abroad; and if he will make a statement. [83356]

Mr. Mudie: The available information relates only to the destinations of individual cohorts of postgraduate qualifiers six months after qualification.

The latest figures relating to 1996–97 show that of the 17,367 UK domiciled full-time postgraduate qualifiers from GB higher education institutions for whom we have destination information, 1,100 (or 6 per cent.) are reported to have taken up employment overseas.

Wirral Metropolitan College

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will call for a report from the FEFC on the decision of the previous directors of Wirral Metropolitan College to award an enhancement of eligible service to the recently retired Principal of Wirral Metropolitan College; [83689]

(2) what external advice he (a) sought and (b) received about the appropriateness of the retirement package of the recently retired principal of Wirral Metropolitan College. [83691]

Mr. Mudie: The retirement package was a decision made by the previous governors of Wirral Metropolitan College. The decision was made in line with guidance provided by the FEFC in its financial memorandum to colleges. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked the FEFC to review the advice it gives to colleges to ensure that careful consideration is given to the guidance so that it is appropriate in different circumstances.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Romania

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will set out her Department's planned financial assistance towards orphanages in Romania in the financial year 1999–2000. [83965]

Clare Short: We have no plans to provide financial assistance for orphanages in Romania for the financial year 1999–2000. We are considering a request from the Romanian Department for Child Protection which may include support for orphanages.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Macpherson Report

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the findings of the independent investigation into the leak of material relating to the report by Sir William Macpherson into the death of Stephen Lawrence. [84332]

Mr. Straw: I have now received from my Permanent Secretary the report of the independent investigation into the leak, carried out following longstanding practice by a member of the panel maintained by the Cabinet Office. The summary findings of the report are as follows:

Information deriving from the draft report of the Judicial Inquiry was leaked to the Sunday Telegraph on 21 February. The most likely route for the leak was not the draft Report itself but a summary of its findings and associated commentary which were internal to Government. The leak is not, therefore, thought to have come from the Inquiry team or from the printers.

Appropriate security arrangements were instituted by the Home Office to control tightly the handling of the draft Report and related papers. They excluded advance briefing of the media. The handling procedures and the restriction on briefing of the media were observed. All copies of the relevant papers were accounted for. No-one was found who had had unauthorised access to the material. Despite intensive investigation, it has not been possible to establish who deliberately leaked the story to the Sunday Telegraph.

I regret that it has not been possible to trace the originator of this deplorable leak. I had access myself to the papers, and I have already given in my Statement to the House on 22 February 1999, Official Report, columns 21–34, my personal word that I was not responsible. The only other Minister with relevant access was my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office, the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) who has asked me to relay to the House a similar absolute assurance which he has given me and which I fully accept. The number of officials and advisers who also had access to the relevant papers is small, and I do not intend therefore, to publish their names which would only serve to throw suspicion unfairly on them as a group when there is no evidence that identifies any individual as responsible.

Cigarette Lighters

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate his Department has made of the number of house fires which are caused each year by faulty cigarette lighters; and if he will make a statement. [83813]

Mr. George Howarth: In 1997, there were 527 fires caused by cigarette lighters which resulted in 10 fatal and 265 non-fatal casualties. The statistics do not specify whether or not the cigarette lighter in question was faulty.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the financial costs to the Metropolitan Police of the additional security arrangements in London in response to the recent nail bomb attacks; and what additional financial provision he proposes to make to cover these costs. [83888]

Kate Hoey: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that the estimated cost of the enhanced high visibility policing provided to reassure the public, in particular, in policing in areas populated or frequented by all known minority groups, as part of the measures to combat the recent nail bombings, is £1,435,144. The figures do not include policing of the bomb scenes themselves.

These policing operations were of the character for which the funding of the Metropolitan Police already provides.

CCTV

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the benefits of compulsory registration of privately operated CCTV systems with the local police. [83886]

Mr. Boateng: There is no requirement for owners of privately operated Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) systems to register with the local police, nor are there any plans to assess the benefits of requiring them to do so.

The Data Protection Act 1998 provides a framework for the statutory regulation of CCTV systems. Their controllers will be required to notify details of their processing of personal data to the Data Protection Commissioner who will make them publicly available in a register. They will also have to comply with a set of enforceable principles of good data handling practice.

Our recently published White Paper on the statutory regulation of the private security industry would require those operating CCTV systems to be licensed.

Case Allocation Unit

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the throughput of files achieved by the case allocation unit for the latest available period. [83954]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: During the week ending 8 May, the case allocation unit allocated a total of 3,563 files to Case Management Units. A further 1,545 files were sent to other locations.

Prison Visitors

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions he has had with the National Association for lay visiting about custody suites at police stations regarding (a) length of service of lay visitors, (b) retirement age of lay visitors and (c) the future of the lay visitors scheme; [83967]

(2) what representations he has received from (a) the West Midlands Police and (b) other organisations regarding proposed changes by the West Midlands Police Authority to the lay visitors scheme; [83969]

(3) what role he has in approving changes in the operation of the West Midlands lay visitors scheme; [83971]

(4) what discussions he has had with the police authorities regarding the National Association for Lay Visiting schemes for custody suites at police stations with reference to (a) length of service, (b) retirement age and (c) the future of the lay visitors scheme; [83968]

(5) what proposed changes to lay visitors schemes have been notified to him by the West Midlands Police Authority. [83970]

Mr. Boateng: Lay visiting to police stations is a non-statutory function which is the responsibility of police authorities. The National Association for Lay Visiting (NALV) is an independent voluntary organisation which works to support and promote lay visiting to police stations. The Home Office has issued guidance to police authorities on the operation of lay visiting schemes.

This guidance states that visitors should be independent persons of good character, able to make informed judgments which the community and the police will accept, and that as far as possible they should be representative of the community in terms of age, gender, race and so on.

The Home Office guidance makes no reference to any age limits for the appointment of lay visitors. However, the separate guidance issued for the Metropolitan Police area currently states that persons who are under the age of eighteen or over the age of seventy will not normally be appointed. This guidance is shortly to be reviewed and the upper age limit likely to be removed.

Although the guidance for police authorities outside London does not mention age limits, it suggests that lay visitors should be appointed for a fixed term. The reason for this is the desirability of lay visitors not becoming too closely associated or over familiar with their local police stations. On the other hand, it is necessary to take into account the need for lay visitors to gain sufficient experience to make an effective contribution. By way of example, the guidance mentions that in London, lay visitors are appointed for a three-year term of office, with the possibility of renewal for a further final three-year term.

The implementation and interpretation of guidance issued by the Home Office is a matter for individual police authorities. In practice, it has been recognised from the earliest days of lay visiting that individual schemes must evolve to suit local circumstances.

There have been no recent discussions between the Home Office, NALV and police authorities regarding lay visiting, but the Home Office shortly expects to discuss with NALV the recommendations arising from research commissioned by the Home Office on lay visiting. The Home Office will then consider the issue of fresh guidance to police authorities. The research report has already been copied to police authorities.

The Home Office has become aware of proposed changes to the lay visiting scheme operated by the West Midlands Police Authority through correspondence from Members of Parliament.

DEFENCE

Animal Experiments

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when live firing experiments using animals were last carried out (a) in the UK and (b) involving UK personnel. [82521]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Michael Hancock, dated 13 May 1999:

I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question about live firing experiments using animals. My reply refers to the arrangements at DERA as we undertake, on behalf of MOD, the majority of work involving the use of animals.

DERA, or one of its predecessors, has conducted research into the prevention and treatment of physical injuries certainly since the mid 1970s. Over the course of the last year live firing experiments using anaesthetised animals were carried out in the UK involving UK personnel during May, June, July, September and November 1998 and February 1999.

Recent areas of research include:

the use of anaesthetised pigs to develop enhanced blast protection for military personnel and to validate physical and computer models of chest injury from blast waves.

work on anaesthetised rats to determine the pathophysiology of abdominal and thoracic injury from blast waves and the development of treatment strategies for injured military personnel.

I hope the above is helpful.

Research Spending

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's planned spending on research broken down by category in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03; and what was actual spending in 1998–99. [83473]

Mr. Spellar: Planned defence expenditure on major customers' research budgets for 1999–2000 is £453 million as set out in the Government's Expenditure Plans 1999–2000 to 2000–01, Cmnd. 4208, published in March 1999. Actual spending in 1998–99 is estimated at £460 million. The main categories within this expenditure are the Applied Research Programme, about £325 million in 1998–99, and the Corporate Research Programme, about £120 million. A similar breakdown is expected to apply in 1999–2000. Total figures for subsequent years will be published in subsequent editions of Government Expenditure Plans.

Territorial Army

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many individual members of the Territorial Army are currently serving with British forces in the Kosovo theatre; and with which units they are serving. [83627]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 12 May 1999]: 19 individual members of the TA are serving in Macedonia with the following units:

HQ 4 Armd Bde: 9

2 Sqn RAF: 1

HQ UK NSE: 3

21 Engr Regt: 4

28 Engr Regt: 1

23 Para Fd Amb: 1.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is departmental policy to refer to the "New Territorial Army" in official communications or publications. [84098]

Mr. Spellar: No.

SCOTLAND

Census Records

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are (a) the storage space occupied by the enumerators' books for the post-1920 decennial censuses for Scotland and (b) the estimated costs of micro-filming each of these census records. [83772]

Mr. McLeish [holding answer 10 May 1999]: (a) The census returns for Scotland which remain closed to the public occupy approximately the following amounts of shelving in secure storage belonging to the Registrar General for Scotland.

		Linear metres
1901 Census	776 volumes	18.3
1911 Census	1,225 volumes	38.3
1921 Census	1,720 volumes	39.2
1931 Census	1,175 volumes	34.8
1939 National Registration[1]	2,087 volumes	91.0
1951 Census	3,720 binders	247.1
1961 Census	10,800 binders	591.1
1966 Sample Census	3,528 binders	146.2
1971 Census	19,279 boxes	1,290.2
1981 Census	19,150 boxes	1,666.1
1991 Census	12,852 boxes	1,863.5
All closed censuses		6,025.8

[1] No census of the population of Scotland was taken in 1941. Instead, shortly after the outbreak of World War II in September 1939, the Registrar General undertook 'national registration', which amounted to a census of the population for the purposes of conscription and the rationing of food etc. The original paper volumes remain in the ownership of the Registrar General and are treated essentially as if they were closed census returns.

(b) No estimates are available of the costs of either photographic microfilming or digital imaging of these closed records. Since closure is for 100 years it is likely that, with changing technologies, such estimates would be out of date before the need to release the records to the public made their imaging necessary. A pilot exercise has however begun to provide information about the most appropriate methods, and the costs, of imaging the 1901 closed census returns. This set of census returns is due for release to the public on 1 January 2002.

From 1 July 1999 this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Vaux Brewery

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will commission an independent assessment of the advice given to Swallow plc regarding the asset value of Vaux brewery. [79361]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 30 March 1999]: I refer my hon. Friend to the comments I made during his Adjournment debate on this on 29 April 1999, Official Report, columns 596–600.

Law Commission Report (No. 227)

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's policy with regard to the report from the Law Commission (1994 No. 227), entitled "Restitution: Mistakes of Law and ultra vires Public Authority Receipts and Payments". [82307]

Mr. Byers: This is primarily a matter for the Lord Chancellor's Department, and I refer the hon and learned Member to the reply given by the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department on 29 April 1999, Official Report, column 245.

Oil and Gas Industry (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the prospects for the oil and gas industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [82728]

Mr. Battle: Work is being carried out or is planned to be carried out under landward licences held over acreage in North and South Wales.

I expect to be able to offer further licensing opportunities for onshore areas in due course which will allow further appraisal of the hydrocarbon potential in and around Wales, including coal gas related prospects.

Industry Council (Luxembourg)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the Industry Council held in Luxembourg on 29 April; and if he will make a statement. [83263]

Mr. Byers: My noble Friend the Minister for Trade and Competitiveness in Europe represented the UK at the EU Industry Council held on 29 April.

The Council reached political agreement on a common position on a late payments directive. The purpose of this directive is to deter late payment by giving all businesses a right to statutory interest on debt not paid on time, regardless of where the debtor is based in the EU. Now that Ministers have reached a political agreement, a common position will be finalised for communication to the European Parliament for the Directives second reading.

Council conclusions were agreed on shipbuilding which sent a strong message of support to the European shipbuilding industry, given the lack of orders for European yards so far this year. In particular, the Conclusions provided a mandate for Commissioner Bangemann's forthcoming discussions with South Korea. The Commission also presented the third monitoring report on aid to German and Spanish shipyards.

The Council had an open debate on globalisation and competitiveness. Ministers spoke on a wide range of themes. The Presidency summed up by identifying the key themes arising from the discussions: venture capital, take-up of university research, intellectual property, strengthening the internal market to create the framework conditions for the information society training and the global context of competition policy and liberalisation. The Presidency concluded that the Council saw itself as having a co-ordinating role in updating EU industrial policy, and there was a need for further rationalisation of Council structures.

The Council adopted a Resolution settling the outstanding issue of ownership and administration of the assets of the ECSC after the expiry of the Treaty in 2002. The Resolution reflects agreement reached by member states by which the assets will be transferred to the ownership of the remaining Communities, while being ring-fenced from other Community funds. The Commission also presented the latest monitoring report on past steel aid cases and noted that there were no particular problems.

A lunchtime discussion was held on industrial aspects of enlargement of the EU. There was agreement that enlargement should not lead to competitive distortions, that effective implementation of the EU acquis was essential, and that restructuring would be needed in several sectors. A meeting of representatives of such sectors and Ministers from candidate countries would be held in Estonia in the autumn, to help them learn from EU experience.

Agreement was reached on two amending regulations which would allow the Commission to bring forward a new block exemption policy for dealing with vertical agreements between companies. The Presidency also noted agreement of a Council declaration on the essential elements that the new block exemption should contain. The Commission undertook to take on board the content of the Council declaration and made its own declaration to this effect.

The Presidency withdrew its proposed Council Conclusions which encouraged the Commission to bring forward and adopt its White Paper on the Modernisation of Competition Policy, following the Commission's adoption of the White Paper on 28 April. The White Paper is intended to bring about debate on the future implementation of Articles 85 and 86.

The Council also adopted Conclusions on benchmarking, sustainable development, the Business Environment Simplification Task Force (BEST) Report and the Commission's White Paper on Commerce.

The Commission gave presentations on the economic situation in the EU and its Communication on Tourism and Employment.

Competitiveness

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 26 March 1999, Official Report, column 444, on competitiveness, on what basis he has defined productivity performance. [83316]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 5 May 1999]: Labour productivity can be measured by value added per worker or by value added per hour worked. Irrespective of the measure chosen, the UK's productivity performance is disappointing. The Analysis and Background document, which was published along with recent Competitiveness White Paper (Cm 4176), showed that only Japan has lower productivity as measured by value added per hour worked, and that the UK lags all of the G7 on a per worker basis. Both documents are in the Library of the House.

Assisted Areas Map

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what joint meetings he has attended with the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and the Deputy Prime Minister to discuss the Assisted Areas Map. [83619]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 10 May 1999]: I meet my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on a regular basis to discuss a range of issues including the Assisted Areas Map.

European Space Agency

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent Ministerial Council of the European Space Agency. [84387]

Mr. Byers: My noble Friend the Minister for Science and Space was invited to chair the Ministerial meeting held in Brussels. At the meeting the UK led its partners in the European Space Agency (ESA) to embark on a new £400 million programme of environmental research. The "Living Planet" programme will help scientists to understand and predict the Earth's environment and humankind's effects upon it. For example, it will monitor the effect of global warming on the polar ice caps and measure soil moisture and other factors that are essential to the accurate modelling of climate systems.

We have announced £67 million investment in the programme by the British National Space Centre (BNSC). The UK has taken a strong lead in devising this programme. Our scientific community has worked closely with the BNSC in identifying how to deliver a challenging value-for-money initiative, using state of the art equipment and know-how. The agreement we secured is the first step towards providing an assured long-term programme of scientific research which looks at the Earth and its environment from space. We are putting Earth sciences on an equal footing with ESA's traditional areas of scientific research—astronomy and planetary exploration.

We also announced further commitments of around £40 million to other new ESA programmes in satellite multimedia and global navigation satellites. These were coupled with renewed commitments of around £46 million per year to existing science and facility investment programmes.

The Government's support for space has allowed the UK to make major commitments not only to science, where the substantial increase in funding in the recent Comprehensive Spending Review is already bearing fruit, but also to the continued health of the UK space industry. Our subscriptions to the satellite multimedia and navigation programmes will position our companies at the forefront of the knowledge-driven economy and give them the opportunity to maximise their share in global markets that will be worth around £65 billion a year within the next decade.

I am confident that, with the current spirit of co-operation between the member states of ESA, we will now be able to press ahead with the exciting missions of ESA's Horizons 2000 programme, such as Planck/FIRST, and that we will be able to include the unique Mars Express mission. This is a new chapter, opening a period of great potential for European space.

Export Licensing

Mr. Kemp: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if errors have been identified in the information on export licensing decisions included in Part II of the Government's Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls; and if he will make a statement. [84388]

Dr. Howells: Regrettably, a small number of recording errors and omissions have been identified. These errors were identified in the course of work carried out to compile certain information requested by the quadripartite committee established to carry out a joint inquiry into the Government's first Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls. As was noted in the Report, human error cannot be eliminated altogether in the compilation of such a large body of data.

The recording errors identified are as follows:

Eleven refused applications were omitted from the data published in the Report. These did not cover goods specified as subject to control in the relevant legislation but goods subject to the end-use control because of concern about their use in weapons of mass destruction programmes.

One licence, covering military imaging equipment, was described as covering exports to China but should have been described as covering exports to Taiwan.

Two items for which a licence was refused were in error included in the list of military equipment licensed for export to Turkey.

There was some duplication in a Table in the Report giving information on the coverage of Open Individual Export Licences issued during the period. The final, correct ratings of the goods concerned were given in the Table, but the original, incorrect ratings were not removed.

Some destinations excluded from the coverage of 2 Open Individual Export Licences during the period were omitted from the relevant Table in the Report, as were some of the ratings of the goods covered by 1 such licence.

Errata sheets will be placed in the Library of the House, and arrangements are being made to ensure that these sheets accompany all copies of the Report disseminated in future. The procedures for recording export licensing information and checking such records prior to publication are being reviewed with the aim of ensuring that these errors do not occur in future.

Sub-postmasters (Remuneration)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of sub-postmasters' remuneration is accounted for by (a) sale of postal services and (b) payment of benefits. [84058]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that around 25 per cent. of sub-postmasters' remuneration is accounted for by the sale of postal services and around 35 per cent. is accounted for by the payment of benefits. The remainder of their post office remuneration derives from banking, bill payment and other financial and licensing transactions.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current hourly target rate of remuneration for sub-postmasters. [84057]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Sub-postmasters are not employees of the Post Office but are independent business people who provide post office service on an agency basis.

The Post Office makes payments to sub-postmasters based on the amount of transactions they perform, plus some core payments and allowances. The concept of an hourly rate of remuneration is therefore not applicable.

Because of their contractual position, sub-postmasters are able to—and typically do—operate a private retail business from the same premises as the sub post office. This enables them to gain income from the private business as well as from the post office, whilst sharing overheads.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which employment sectors are currently excluded from the 48-hour week provision of the Working Time Directive; for which of them Her Majesty's Government have tabled alternative proposals; and what maximum hours respectively are suggested in these proposals. [83839]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The employment sectors currently excluded from the Working Time Directive are air, rail, road, sea, inland waterway and lake transport, sea fishing, other work at sea (essentially the offshore oil and gas industry) and doctors in training.

It would not be appropriate for the Government to discuss specific details of its negotiating position. However, the Government are not opposed to the extension of working time in principle, although we want to ensure the new measures accommodate our concerns and do not adversely affect the competitiveness of industry or the delivery of healthcare within the NHS.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will modify the Working Time Regulations to take into account hours at work spent not continually working on account of machine breakdown, supply difficulties or for other reasons beyond the direct control of management. [83840]

Mr. Ian McCartney: There are no plans to amend the definition of working time in the Working Time Regulations. Under the Regulations working time is defined as time when a worker is 'working, at his employer's disposal and carrying out his activities or duties'. For time to be working time all three elements must be satisfied.

Post Office

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to (a) introduce and (b) modify minimum standards of service for the Post Office, with particular reference to deliveries. [83841]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The targets for the percentages of first class mail delivered the next working day after posting and second class mail delivered within three working days of posting are set by the Post Office in consultation with the Post Office Users' National Council. The targets to achieve first delivery in urban areas by 9.30am and to achieve delivery in rural areas by 2.00pm are set internally by the Post Office.

A key element of the package of Post Office reforms announced last December is the creation of an independent regulator to protect consumers' interests including standards of service. It is also planned to give the Post Office Users' National Council a more central role and increased powers. Together with the other elements of the reform package these changes will ensure that service standards will improve over time. Further details will be set out in a White Paper shortly.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to publish the Post Office White Paper. [83842]

Mr. Ian McCartney: It remains my expectation, as I told the Trade and Industry Select Committee on 9 December, that the White Paper will be published in the first half of the year.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) Crown post offices and (b) sub-post offices have shut during the last 12 months. [84055]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I understand from the Post Office that there has been a net reduction of one Crown post office and 232 sub post offices in the 12 months to the end of March 1999.

The Crown office reduction was the net result of merging two nearby offices in London when the opportunity was taken to open a new flagship Crown office in their place.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of sub-post offices is located in rural areas. [84053]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Post Office classify approximately 50 per cent. of sub-post offices as being in rural areas.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Correspondence

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, the hon. Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle), will respond to the letters from Mr. P. Pritchard of Eastbourne dated 21 January and 5 March. [83159]

Angela Eagle: We can find no record of Mr. Pritchard's correspondence from January and March. The last recorded correspondence for Mr. Pritchard was in November 1998 in response to a letter from the hon. Member. If the hon. Member could forward copies of Mr. Pritchard's correspondence we will reply urgently to his concerns.

Ancillary Workers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance has been issued to Benefits Agency Offices on the payment of those ancillary workers affected by the Social Security Commissioner's decision CIS/14661/1996 of December 1997, who had been advised not to sign on with the Employment Service for the period of their unpaid leave. [83903]

Angela Eagle: Since Social Security Commissioner's Decision CIS/14661/1996 was made on 21 August 1997 (received by the Department on 13 September 1997), guidance has been issued to Benefits Agency and Employment Services staff explaining that Jobseeker's Allowance cannot be paid under normal rules to those who did not claim at the relevant time.

It is, however, sometimes possible for ex-gratia payments to be made to people in these circumstances. Agency staff have been asked to keep a note of those ancillary workers who have inquired about such payments so that consideration can be given to their requests.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, under the proposed reforms to Incapacity Benefit, persons who have their entitlement reduced to zero by their level of pension will continue to receive national insurance credits. [83721]

Mr. Bayley: People who have their entitlement to Incapacity Benefit reduced to nil under the proposed reforms will qualify for national insurance credits for each week they remain incapable of work.

Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reason the Green Paper, "Beating Fraud is Everyone's Business: Securing the Future", is no longer available on his Department's website. [84042]

Mr. Timms: Following the wide endorsement of the proposals in the Green Paper, we have set out how we are putting our plans into action in "A New Contract for Welfare: Safeguarding Social Security" which is available on the website.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of housing benefit claimants are unemployed. [84048]

Angela Eagle: About 12 per cent. of Housing Benefit recipients are unemployed and claiming Jobseeker's Allowance.

Notes:

1. Data used to calculate the answer is provisional.
2. The data refers to benefit units and has been rounded to the nearest whole percent.
3. The data is for those Housing Benefit claimants who are unemployed and claim Jobseeker's Allowance.

HEALTH

Testicular Cancer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for improving public awareness amongst men of the benefits of self-testing for testicular cancer, with particular reference to the highest-risk age group; and if he will make a statement. [83597]

Ms Jowell: The Department encourages men to consult their doctor as soon as they notice any unusual changes in their testicles.

Leaflets produced by the Department and by the Health Education Authority draw attention to testicular cancer, particularly for men in the 20 to 35 year age group who are potentially most at risk, provide advice on self-examination and re-emphasise the importance of early reporting of possible signs of cancer to a general practitioner. GPs are bound by their terms of service to carry out all appropriate health promotion and prevention activities and are generally well aware of this risk to health in young men.

The "Our Healthier Nation" health strategy is designed to improve the health of the whole population, including men. The strategy highlights cancer prevention as one of the main areas for action.

Medicinal Products (Registration)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made with plans to hold an international conference for the Harmonisation of Technical Standards for the Registration of Medicinal Products. [83789]

Ms Jowell: The International Conference on Harmonisation of Technical Requirements for the Registration of Pharmaceuticals for Human Use (ICH) was established in 1990 as a joint regulatory/industry project. The aim of the project is to improve, through harmonisation of the regulatory requirements, the efficiency of the process for developing and registering new medicinal products in Europe, Japan and the United States, in order to make these products available to patients with a minimum of delay.

The Fourth International Conference on Harmonisation (ICH 4) was held in Brussels, 16–18 July 1997. Plans for a fifth phase are currently under discussion.

Licensed Medicines (Children)

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that the issue of establishing a proper licensing system for medicines used in the treatment of children is given the highest priority at a European level; [83788]

(2) what steps he plans to take to examine the experience of the United States in the licensing and regulation of medicines used on children; and if he will make a statement; [83790]

(3) what steps he is taking to press the European Commission to monitor the implementation of EU guidance on the licensing of medicines used in the treatment of children. [83787]

Mr. Hutton: The United Kingdom took the lead in revising the European guideline and is committed to working closely with the European Commission and other Member States to monitor the effectiveness of its operation. The Government are committed to ensuring that the regulatory system within Europe effectively addresses the licensing of medicines for use in children. We will work with other Member States to press the Commission to take further action should this prove necessary.

We intend to monitor closely the combination of financial incentives and legislation which has now been introduced in the United States. We will keep the Commission informed of the effectiveness of the US initiative, and its suitability or otherwise for replication within the European Union.

Iophendalyte

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much iophendalyte was purchased by the National Health Service in each financial year from 1969–70 until 1987–88. [83793]

Ms Jowell: As with other pharmaceutical products purchased by National Health Service trusts this information is not available centrally.

Cigarette Lighters

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the forthcoming White Paper, Our Healthier Nation, will include measures aimed at preventing injury from accidents caused by unsafe cigarette lighters; and if he will make a statement. [83814]

Ms Jowell: Accidental injury was one of the four national priority areas in the "Our Healthier Nation" Green Paper, published last year. It set out the framework for a range of measures to be carried out by the many Departments and agencies with a role to play in reducing death and injury from accidents. Although product safety and fire safety issues are integral to this overall effort, the White Paper, to be published later this month, will not include an exhaustive list of measures relating to the safety of specific product types, such as cigarette lighters.

Beta Interferon

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue new guidelines on the use of beta interferon in the NHS. [80174]

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to make beta interferon universally available on the NHS. [78995]

Mr. Denham [pursuant to his reply, 11 May 1999, c. 131]: I regret that the reply I gave was misleading. It should read:

The Department will shortly be consulting interested parties on a draft health service circular on the prescribing of beta-interferon for people with secondary progressive multiple sclerosis.

CABINET OFFICE

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many times Ministers in his Department have met their counterparts in the US Government since 1 June 1998; and if he will list the dates and locations of each meeting, the Ministers involved on each occasion and the name of the US counterpart at each meeting. [82266]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Ministers have had the following meetings with members of the US Government:

Minister	Date	Location	Counterpart
Minister for the Cabinet Office	14 January 1999	Washington	Al Gore: Vice President
Minister for the Cabinet Office	28 November–2 December 1998	Washington	Al Gore: Vice President
			Janet Reno: Attorney General plus senior officials including General Barry McCaffrey: Director, Office National Drug Control Policy
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster	21–24 June 1998	Washington	Senior officials only

WALES

New Deal

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the number of 18 to 24-year-olds who have entered (a) further education, (b) training and (c) employment programmes under the New Deal in Wales. [83767]

Mr. Hain: The latest information from the Department for Education and Employment indicates that, by the end of February 1999:

just under 2,200 young people had entered the Full-time Education and Training Option of the New Deal for 18–24s in Wales (separate totals are not available to show numbers entering Education or Training); almost 1,500 young people had entered subsidised jobs under the Employer Option of the New Deal for 18–24s in Wales.

A further 1,900 young people had entered a period of work experience with either the Environment Task Force or the Voluntary Sector.

Rail Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has in respect of the improvement of North-South rail services; and if he will make a statement. [84296]

Mr. Hain: I consider that a better rail service between North and South Wales is essential for the economic and social cohesion of Wales. The Welsh Office is now working in partnership with the North Wales Economic Forum to secure two return services a day via Wrexham, and to reduce the fastest journey time between Bangor and Cardiff by half an hour. I expect to see the new services in place by the summer timetable next year.

Following the transfer of functions, the National Assembly will take a close interest in rail services in Wales. Responsibility for the regulation and financial support of the railways will remain with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions.

Owen-Corning

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect on employment at Pentre, Deeside, of the decision not to allow Rockwool to take over the Owen-Corning's plant. [83982]

Mr. Hain: My hon. Friend, the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs published the report of the Competition Commission, 'Rockwool Ltd. and Owen-Corning Building Products (UK) Ltd.; a report on the proposed merger' on 7 May, and a copy is in the Library of the House.

As part of the report, the Commission considered that the most likely outcome of prohibiting the merger would be that Owen-Corning would sell the Queensferry plant to another party.

TREASURY

Road Fuel Duty

13. Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the level of road fuel duty per litre of diesel in (a) the UK and (b) other EU member states in 1999–2000. [83201]

Ms Hewitt: The rate of duty on ultra low sulphur diesel in the United Kingdom is 47.21 per litre and on standard diesel the rate is 50.21 per litre.

The latest available rates of duty in the other member states range from about 18 per litre in Luxembourg and Greece to 28 per litre in Italy.

Pension Funds

14. Dr. George Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of Government economic policy on the overall value of UK pension funds. [83202]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are pursuing policies to promote economic stability and raise productivity, and so enhancing the worth of pension fund investments.

Financial Support (Families)

15. Mr. Healey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the measures he is taking to increase financial support to families. [83203]

Mr. Gordon Brown: All families will have benefited from the increase in child benefit for the eldest child which came into force in April and from the above-inflation increases announced for next April. Following the introduction of the new children's tax credit in April 2000 a family with one child receiving this and child benefit will get double the support for their child, £23 a week, compared with their position in May 1997 when they would have received £11.40 a week.

In addition, the working families tax credit will be introduced in October this year and will benefit 1.5 million families. It will provide a guaranteed minimum income of £200 for a family with someone in full-time work on the national minimum wage.

The WFTC and related increases to the child premia in income related benefits will ensure that all low-income families benefit from the increased support for children. Overall, as a result of the last two budgets, families with children will, on average, be £740 a year better off. As a result of the budget measures, 700,000 children will be lifted out of poverty. The tax rate for a family on average earnings with two children will be cut to its lowest level since 1972.

FTSE Index

16. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account he takes of the level of the FTSE index in devising economic policy; and if he will assess its accuracy. [83204]

Mr. Milburn: The Government take account of all relevant economic and financial information in devising economic policy, including the level of stock market indices.

National Insurance

17. Mr. Syms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the change in levels of national insurance paid by the self-employed in 2001–02 as a result of the March Budget. [83205]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that the self-employed will pay about £420 million less in National Insurance contributions in 2000–01, but £520 million more in 2001–02 as a result of the March 1999 Budget.

19. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions his Department has had with the Department of Social Security in respect of practices adopted by some companies to avoid paying national insurance contributions. [83207]

Dawn Primarolo: One of the benefits of transferring the Contributions Agency and policy responsibility for National Insurance to the Inland Revenue is that the Departments will be able to combine their efforts in detecting and preventing artificial avoidance of National Insurance which cost the National Insurance Fund hundreds of millions of pounds a year in lost revenue.

In my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget we announced a further move. We shall be bringing forward legislation shortly to counter avoidance in personal service provision.

Ms Stuart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his reform of national insurance contributions. [83197]

Mr. Milburn: In March 1998 the Chancellor announced the most radical restructuring of the National Insurance system for 20 years, in line with the recommendations of the Taylor Report, 'The Modernisation of Britain's Tax and Benefits System'.

These reforms will improve work incentives by reducing burdens on the lower paid thereby encouraging people to move from welfare to work and simplify the structure of the National Insurance contribution scheme for both employees and employers.

Debt Relief (Poor Countries)

18. Ms Drown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will report on progress made on debt relief for poor countries at the International Monetary Fund and World Bank spring meetings. [83206]

28. Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will report on progress made on debt relief for poor countries at the International Monetary Fund and World Bank spring meetings. [83216]

Mr. Gordon Brown: At the Spring meetings of the IMF/World Bank last month I took forward proposals for faster, deeper and wider debt relief. There was general consensus on the need for an enhanced initiative.

I am now hopeful that we can resolve to:

cut the burden of unpayable debt by at least 50 billion dollars in the year 2000; sell IMF gold to help pay for this;

increase the aid for health, education and economic development;

give a billion through our own charitable giving.

Duty-free Sales

21. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future of duty-free sales. [83209]

Dawn Primarolo: Duty free sales on journeys made wholly with the European Union are due to end from 30 June as a result of a decision taken by the Council of Finance Ministers in 1991. The Government are pressing for an extension to allow time to work out better duty paid arrangements. However, we have never underestimated the difficulty of this task as it requires unanimity among member states. The Government will continue to press for the best and most sensible deal possible for the UK. Duty free sales on journeys made to countries outside the EU will continue unaffected after 30 June 1999.

Objective 1 Projects

22. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to provide funding to allow objective 1 EU projects to proceed. [83210]

Mr. Milburn: The funding arrangements for EU projects are a matter for the Departments, and devolved administrations, which administer the Structural Funds programmes as well as the individual project applicants. Departments' and devolved administrations' overall expenditure is decided in the Comprehensive Spending Review.

Business Taxation

23. Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on the level of tax paid by business from 1999–2000 to 2001–02 of the March 1999 Budget. [83211]

Mrs. Roche: All companies who pay tax will benefit from the cuts in Corporation Tax that were announced in this year's Budget and in previous Budgets.

Intrastat Returns

24. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to enable companies to make Intrastat returns electronically. [83212]

Dawn Primarolo: Companies have been able to submit Intrastat returns using Electronic Data Interchange (EDI) since the start of the Single Market on 1 January 1993. This allowed companies to send in their data on floppy disk, tape or via the Value Added Network.

In December 1998 two further methods of submitting Intrastat data electronically were introduced using the internet. A third method of submitting data via the internet, of particular benefit to smaller companies, will be considered later this year.

Savings Ratio

25. Mr. Norman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his projections for the saving ratio in 2001–02. [83213]

Mr. Milburn: The Government's forecast for the saving ratio is set out in the March 1999 Financial Statement and Budget Report. This shows the saving ratio rising from 7 per cent. in 1998 to 7½ per cent. in 1999 and beyond.

Single Currency

26. Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he made of the prospects for the UK joining the single currency (a) at the time of the announcement of the five tests and (b) at the most recent date. [83214]

Ms Hewitt: In his statement to the House of Commons on 27 October 1997, Official Report, columns 584–88, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that, barring some fundamental and unforeseen change in economic circumstances, making a decision, during the lifetime of this Parliament, to join the single currency was not realistic. But preparations should be made so that Britain would be in a position to join a successful single currency early in the next Parliament, should Government, Parliament and the British people agree. This position was restated by the Prime Minister in his statement to the House of Commons on 23 February 1999, Official Report, columns 179–83.

Sixth VAT Directive

27. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met EU Finance Ministers to discuss the sixth VAT directive. [83215]

Dawn Primarolo: The last occasion was at a meeting of ECOFIN on 15 March, when a European Commission proposal for the introduction of an experimental reduced VAT rate on labour intensive services was briefly considered.

Household Incomes

29. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of (a) children and (b) adults in households whose income will increase to above half average income in each of the next three years as a result of measures introduced in each of his Budget statements. [83217]

Ms Hewitt: As a result of tax and benefit measures announced in the last two Budgets, 1¼ million people—700,000 of them children—will no longer be living in households below half the average equivalised income after allowing for housing costs.

Company Values

30. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the Government's monetary policies on the value of companies quoted on the London stock exchange. [83218]

Mr. Milburn: Maintaining low and stable inflation is the best contribution monetary policy can make to the Government's goal of high and stable levels of growth and employment. Economic stability is good for companies' performance and may be one of several factors behind recent equity market valuations.

Global Economic System

31. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet European Finance Ministers to discuss the global economic system. [83219]

Ms Hewitt: ECOFIN was asked by the Vienna European Council to produce a report on reform of the international financial architecture for the Cologne European Council starting on 3 June. The draft report is expected to be discussed by EU Finance and Economic Ministers at the 25 May ECOFIN.

Taxation Changes

32. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the changes in taxation paid in 2001–02 as a result of Budgets since July 1997. [83220]

Dawn Primarolo: Costings of the measures in the July 1997, March 1998 and March 1999 Budgets can be found in tables 2.2, 1.3 and 1.3 of the respective Financial Statement and Budget Reports.

Work Incentives

33. Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his measures to increase the financial incentive to work. [83221]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are determined to make work pay through reforms to the tax and benefit system aimed at alleviating both the poverty and unemployment traps. From April this year a new 10p rate of income tax was introduced, this will halve the tax bill for 1.5 million low-paid workers. It will be complemented by a series of reforms to National Insurance Contributions which will take 900,000 low-paid workers out of NICs altogether and reduce burdens on employers and employees alike. The Working Families Tax Credit will be introduced in October 1999. It will increase the return to work for at least 1.5 million people. In combination with the National Minimum Wage and other tax and benefit reforms the WFTC will provide a minimum income guarantee for families with someone in full-time work at the national minimum wage of £200 a week.

Financial Services and Markets Bill

34. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the report of the Joint Committee on the draft Financial Services and Markets Bill. [83222]

Ms Hewitt: We commend the Committee for a very thorough inquiry, and are grateful to the many organisations which gave evidence. The Committee has broadly endorsed the approach to reform set out in the draft bill published last year, and the improvements announced in the light of public consultation. They have also made constructive recommendations for further improvements, which we will consider carefully before responding.

Married Couple's Allowance

35. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people aged 55 to 63 are eligible for the married couple's allowance in 1999–2000. [83223]

Dawn Primarolo: We estimate that there will be 1.8 million claims to the married couple's allowance from people aged 55–63 for 1999–2000. Around 200,000 of these claimants will not have sufficient income to be able to benefit from the allowance.

Individual Savings Accounts

36. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of new savers who will open individual savings accounts in the current year. [83225]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 3 March 1999, Official Report, column 810.

Vehicle Excise Duty

37. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from the road haulage industry on (a) vehicle excise duty and (b) duty on diesel. [83226]

Ms Hewitt: The Government have received a number of representations in writing from the road haulage industry about vehicle excise duty and fuel tax.

Representations are also being made through the new Road Haulage Industry Forum which had its first meeting on 8 April and which brings together Transport, Treasury and Trade and Industry Ministers with industry and union representatives. The Government hope that the Forum will provide a helpful dialogue on the issues facing the haulage industry and give hauliers an opportunity to put across their concerns in a constructive way.

Working Families Tax Credit

38. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons (a) working families tax credit is classified as negative income tax and (b) mortgage interest tax relief at source is not so classified. [83227]

Dawn Primarolo: The Working Families' Tax Credit will be paid by the Inland Revenue through pay packets as an income tax credit, and will be regarded as such by families. Mortgage interest tax relief is officially classified by the Office for National Statistics as public spending.

Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the numbers of households which will be eligible for the working families tax credit which are (a) single parent families, with the woman the sole earner, (b) single parent families, with the man the sole earner, (c) couples, where the male is the sole earner, (d) couples, where the female is the sole earner and (e) dual-income families. [83807]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 10 May 1999]: Estimates for 2000–01, the first full year of the Working Families Tax Credit, are given in the table:

Family Type	Number of recipients
Lone Parent
Female	580,000
Male	30,000
Couples
Male sole earner	480,000
Female sole earner	100,000
Dual-earners	210,000
Total	1,400,000

Euro

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the difference in the estimate between the number of euro coins required for UK participation in the single currency set out in the Outline National Changeover Plan and that indicated in his answer of 18 June 1997, Official Report, column 239, on the Euro. [83734]

Ms Hewitt: The estimated coin requirement set out in the Outline National Changeover Plan relates to the initial quantities needed to launch euro coins on the first day of their circulation, should the UK decide to join the single currency. The higher figure quoted in 1997 was the estimated total needed to replace all the coins in circulation. The preferred timing for the introduction of euro coins would be when coin demand is seasonally low, and for up to six months euro coins would be circulating in parallel with sterling coins.

The estimates for both the initial launch quantities and the ultimate total coin requirement are subject to ongoing review with the banks and other interested parties.

ECOFIN Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the agenda for the ECOFIN Council of 10 May. [83817]

Ms Hewitt: The agenda for the 10 May ECOFIN, as finalised by Coreper on 6 May, listed the following substantive items for discussion:

(a) the European Commission's recommendations for the 1999 Broad Economic Policy Guidelines;

(b) the Presidency's draft for an European Employment Pact;

(c) the Preliminary Draft Budget for the financial year 2000;

(d) European Union common strategy on Russia: Economic and Financial aspects.

ECOFIN Ministers also had lunch with the Social Partners.

European Community Pension Scheme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the new European Community pension scheme will be privately funded; what liabilities currently exist; and if he will make a statement. [83931]

Mr. Milburn: There is no new European Community pension scheme. Any changes to the pension arrangements for the staff of the European Community institutions would need to be proposed by the European Commission, and they have not made any proposals for a new pension scheme.

Income Tax

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for the current tax year (a) the number of people in work whose marginal income tax rate will be 10 per cent., (b) the number of people in work whose marginal income tax rate will be 23 per cent. and (c) the proportion of group (b) whose marginal income tax rate would have been 20 per cent. had the income tax rates remained the same and the thresholds been increased in line with statutory indexation only. [83761]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimated numbers of people in work with 10 per cent. and 23 per cent. marginal tax rates in 1999–2000 are shown in the table.

	Marginal rate (%)	Numbers (million)
(a)	10	1.4
(b)	23	18.4

Around 3.3 million of those with a 23 per cent. marginal rate would have had a marginal rate of 20 per cent. had income tax rates remained the same as in 1998–99. However, these are people with taxable incomes of between £1,500 and £4,500 and overall they will pay between £150 and £60 less income tax per year as a result of the introduction of the 10p starting rate.

Low-income Families

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the gain from work for a one-earner couple on £200 per week with two children under 11 years (a) previous to the 1998 Budget, (b) after the 1998 Budget and (c) after the 1999 Budget. [83762]

Dawn Primarolo: The data requested is given in the table:

Gain from work for a one-earner couple on £200 per week with two children under 11 years

£ per week

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Gross earnings	200.00	200.00	200.00
Net earnings after FC/WFTC	185.65	189.29	232.90
JSA	110.95	113.60	121.05
Gain from work	74.70	75.69	111.85

Notes:

1. Net earnings are gross earnings minus income tax and National Insurance plus Family Credit/Working Families Tax Credit.
2. Income tax payments are calculated on the basis that the household receives no tax relief other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment.
3. All earners are assumed to pay Class 1 national insurance contributions at the contracted-in rate.
4. 1999 net earnings assume all tax and NIC measures announced in the 1999 Budget and due to be introduced after 1999–2000 are already in place.
5. For the calculation of JSA both members of the couple are assumed to be 18 years or over.
6. Net income is before housing costs.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Research

Ms Drown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much the Government spent on research and development relating to (a) organic farming, (b) genetic engineering biotechnology and (c) agricultural biotechnology at 1999 prices, in each of the most recent 10 years for which figures are available. [83241]

Mr. Rooker: Details of how much Government spent on the research and development of (a) organic farming, (b) agricultural genetic engineering and (c) agricultural biotechnology are shown in the tables. All the figures are given at 1999 prices.

(a) Organic farming

£000

Year	MAFF	SOAEFD	BBSRC	Total
1994–95	1,030	161	42	1,233
1995–96	950	178	14	1,142
1996–97	1,173	183	0	1,356
1997–98	954	192	0	1,146
1998–99	1,576	240	0	1,816

(b) Agricultural genetic engineering (including risk assessment research)

£000

Year	MAFF	DETR	SOAEFD	Total
1994–95	377	531	183	1,091
1995–96	1,827	419	625	2,871
1996–97	1,769	371	1,045	3,185
1997–98	1,876	647	1,618	4,141
1998–99	2,718	856	2,230	5,804

BBSRC could not provide figures for agricultural genetic engineering because it proved too difficult for them to separate agricultural genetic engineering from biotechnology.

(c) Agricultural biotechnology (excluding agricultural genetic engineering)

Year	MAFF	SOAEFD	DANI	BBSRC	Total
1994–95	17,347	4,002	unavailable	unavailable	21,349
1995–96	18,260	6,393	unavailable	unavailable	24,653
1996–97	21,173	6,805	1,000	unavailable	29,029
1997–98	23,339	7,429	1,000	[1]13,800	46,318
1998–99	26,191	5,729	1,200	[1]14,500	48,415

[1] As explained in (b), the BBSRC figures do not distinguish between agricultural biotechnology and agricultural genetic engineering

Further information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

BSE

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on whether the rendering process carried out by approved rendering plants guarantees the denaturing of the prion thought to be responsible for BSE/nvCJD. [83741]

Mr. Rooker: MAFF commissioned two major studies on rendering processes. One examined the inactivation of the BSE agent by rendering procedures (see D. M. Taylor et al. Veterinary Record 1995. Vol. 137, 605–610) and the second examined the effects of rendering procedures on the scrapie agent (see D. M. Taylor et al. Veterinary Record 1997. Vol. 141, 643–649). The results of these experiments resulted in European Commission Decisions 94/382 and 96/449 being made, which set standards for the rendering of mammalian animal by-products throughout the European Union. This European legislation is currently implemented in the UK in the Specified Risk Material Regulations 1997 and the Animal By-Products Order 1999 and all approved UK rendering plants operate to these standards.

BSE is a notifiable disease in the UK. Cattle showing clinical signs suggestive of BSE are slaughtered on farm and sent for incineration. They are not rendered.

Correspondence

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire can expect a reply to his letter of 18 March to the Minister of State on behalf of his constituent Mr. Marshall. [83751]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 10 May 1999]: I received the right hon. Gentleman's letter on 23 April. I replied on Monday 10 May. This was well within the Department's published target for the return of replies.

Food (Supply and Demand)

Mr. Beard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the current worldwide balance of supply and demand is for food; and what estimate he has made of what it would be if Northern American and Western European agricultural demand switched to organic produce in the proportions (a) 5 per cent., (b) 10 per cent. and (c) 20 per cent. [83891]

Mr. Morley: Details of current and future trends in global production and consumption of agricultural commodities can be found in the OECD publication 'Agricultural Outlook 1999–2004'.

Aspects of possible futures for agriculture in 2020 and 2050, including different levels of low-input and organic farming, are being addressed as part of a project at Sussex University. The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions is funding the researchers to develop a number of socio-economic scenarios as an aid to climate change studies. The work is due to report by autumn this year.

Green Transport Plan

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82840]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 11 May 1999]: Since last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which sets out targets for the introduction of green transport plans for Government Departments, my Department is finalising four plans covering all of our London headquarters buildings and our York building, which houses two of the Ministry's Executive Agencies. We are developing plans for our remaining 19 sites in line with the target for March 2000 set in the Integrated Transport White Paper.

GM Foods

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from consumer groups and individuals in relation to the details of genetically modified flavourings and additives to be included on food labelling; and what actions are being taken by his Department in pursuance of this. [83783]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 12 May 1999]: I have received a number of representations requesting that GM additives and flavourings be labelled. We are pressing the European Commission to bring forward proposals in this area as quickly as possible.

Meat and Bonemeal

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress made in disposing of meat and bonemeal derived from the over thirty month scheme. [83781]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 11 May 1999]: Over 27,000 tonnes of MBM from OTMS animals has now been burned in the high temperature waste incinerator at Fawley.

The Intervention Board announced the first contract for the large scale incineration of MBM with energy recovery in October 1998. Burning under the contract is subject to the company, Fibrogen Ltd. obtaining the necessary planning and environmental consents in accordance with normal procedures. Following a detailed technical assessment of, and extensive consultation on, Fibrogen's application, the Environment Agency granted an authorisation to burn waste MBM under Section 6 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 on 26 April 1999. Fibrogen are considering whether to mount an appeal following the decision by North Lincolnshire Planning Committee on 12 March 1999 to refuse planning permission to change fuel from poultry litter to MBM, which has delayed tangible progress.

The Intervention Board has completed its evaluation of the costed proposals received for the balance of its OTMS MBM incineration requirement and contract negotiations are on-going. Details of the companies will be announced when contracts are signed. These companies will also need the necessary planning and environmental consents from the relevant authorities before the burning of MBM can commence.

Written Answers to Questions

DEFENCE

Reservists

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are in place for calling up regular reservists as individual reinforcements. [82345]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 27 April 1999]: Depending on the requirement for reservists in any particular operation, Personnel and Record Offices trawl the records of members of the ex-regular reserve forces. Those who are identified as qualified, and, in the case of a voluntary call out, who have also indicated their willingness to be called out, are served a call-out notice. This notice requires them to report to a mobilisation centre where they are accepted into service on completion of various administrative procedures. The call-out order made on 31 March 1999 under section 54 of the Reserve Forces Act 1996 allows the further call out of members of the ex-regular reserve forces as well as members of the volunteer reserve forces to support operations in the former republic of Yugoslavia and in the region of Iraq. During the year 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999 some 30 per cent. (155) of the Army's reservists who were called out and accepted into service came from the Army's ex-Regular Reserve Force.

Porton Down

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions the Minister for Defence Procurement has visited the Chemical and Biological Defence Unit at Porton Down; and when he will next visit the establishment. [84118]

Mr. Spellar: Once. My noble Friend the Minister for Defence Procurement has no immediate plans for a further visit.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Kosovar Refugees

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations her Department has made in the past three weeks to the European Commission about its aid programme for Kosovar refugees. [83966]

Clare Short: We are in close contact with the Commission over its assistance programmes for the Kosovo refugees, both in Brussels and in the region. A Department for International Development representative attended the Humanitarian Aid Committee meeting on 7 May, which approved proposals from the EC Humanitarian Office for the allocation of a further 150 million euros of humanitarian assistance, in addition to the 32 million euros already allocated. We are pressing to ensure that those funds are disbursed quickly. We have also spoken with the Commission about the need to accelerate its planning for refugee return.

WALES

Air Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to promote north-south air services; and if he will make a statement. [84355]

Mr. Hain: I am keen to improve public transport links between North and South Wales, including air services. Work is currently under way on an air services study for Wales, in line with the commitment which I gave in the Welsh transport policy statement 'Transporting Wales into the Future'. This study is focusing on the scope for new and enhanced services as well as the role of airports in economic development. It will be for the National Assembly, in collaboration with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, to decide how to take forward the findings of the study.

Road Traffic (Deeside)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance he has provided to the local highways authority to reduce road traffic on Deeside; and if he will make a statement. [84356]

Mr. Hain: Flintshire County Council is receiving Transport Grant support of £500,000 in 1999–2000 towards its Deeside Integrated Transport Strategy and has been provided with indicative allocations of £300,000 and £125,000 for 2000–01 and 2001–02 respectively. The Council has also been allocated £39,000 in 1999–2000 towards its Safe Routes to School project covering a number of schools in the Deeside area. This support builds on £480,000 that the Council was allocated towards its Integrated Transport Strategy in 1998–99.

Following the transfer of functions, future bids for Transport Grant support will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Job Creation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of new jobs created since 1 May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [80846]

Mr. Hain [pursuant to his reply, 20 April 1999, c. 502]: I regret that there was a computer error at the Office for National Statistics. Revised figures are as follows: Seasonally adjusted figures show that between March 1997 and December 1998 the number of employee jobs in Wales increased by 16,000 to 997,000.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Licences

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what his estimate is of the current time taken by his Department in considering export licences for goods with a possible military application; and what steps he is taking to speed the process up; [82439]

(2) in each of the last five years for which he has figures, (a) how many applications for export licences for goods with a possible military application his Department has considered and (b) what the average time was for considering each application. [82440]

Dr. Howells: The Export Control Organisation's computer databases have been interrogated and the following results were obtained for applications:

Year	Standard or Open Individual Export Licences were received
1994	17,187
1995	15,247
1996	14,153
1997	12,679
1998	11,799

This information should be considered in light of the answer given by the then Minister, my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) to my hon. Friend the Member for Don Valley (Caroline Flint) on 30 October 1997, Official Report, columns 870–71.

As regards the average time for considering an application I refer my hon. Friend to my answer given to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 22 February 1999, Official Report, column 87.

Finally, on 1 March 1999 the Export Control Organisation introduced the new ELATE database for Standard Individual Export Licence applications which should, among other advantages, improve the exchange of licensing information between Departments and is intended to enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of the licensing process.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) of 1 February 1999, Official Report, columns 501–03, if he will provide a detailed description of the military equipment licensed for export to Indonesia between 10 May 1998 and 31 December 1998 under ratings (a) ML4, (b) ML5, (c) ML6, (d) ML9, (e) ML10, (f) ML11, (g) ML14, (h) ML15, (i) ML21, (j) ML22 and (k) PL5017. [83024]

Dr. Howells: Inquiries are being made under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. As confidential information is involved, the parties concerned will be asked if they consent to its disclosure and this may take some time. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible and place a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Military Exports (Yugoslavia)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library a list of the documents held by his Department on military exports to Yugoslavia. [83291]

Dr. Howells: While the DTI's Export Control Organisation maintains records of export licence applications, it does not compile records of licensed exports. I also refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Ann Clwyd) on 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 414.

Energy Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the agenda for the Energy Council of 11 May. [83816]

Mr. Byers: I have today placed copies of the agenda for the 11 May Energy Council in the Libraries of the House. The agenda can also be found on the DTI in Europe page of the Department's website (www2.dti.gov.uk/).

EU Copyright Directive

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the implementation of the EU Copyright Directive. [83827]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 11 May 1999]: The draft EU Directive on copyright and related rights in the Information Society is still under discussion in a working group of the Council of Ministers. The Opinion of the European Parliament was given in February but the common position of the member states is not expected for some time owing to the complex and controversial nature of some of the proposals. Only when the Directive is finally adopted will we prepare the necessary implementing legislation for approval by Parliament, and we shall wish to consult widely before doing so.

The electronic environment necessitates international harmonisation of copyright laws and the Government have welcomed the broad thrust of the draft Directive. We are pressing for rapid adoption of the proposal, which will also enable the UK and the rest of the EU to ratify two new international treaties. However, there are concerns about certain aspects of the draft Directive including the treatment of temporary copies, the approach on exceptions to rights for a broad range of users, and provisions on technical measures. We are actively pursuing these issues in the Council and, in particular, continuing to press for more flexibility for member states in the area of exceptions. We are seeking to maintain a fair and reasonable balance between the interests of all the key players.

Owen-Corning

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his decision relating to the proposal by Rockwell to take over Owen-Corning's plant at Pentre, Deeside, Flintshire. [83981]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 13 May 1999]: On 7 May I announced that I had decided to prohibit the proposed acquisition by Rockwool Ltd. of the stone wool manufacturing business of Owens-Corning Building Products (UK) Ltd. My decision was in accordance with the recommendation of the Competition Commission and the advice of the Director General of Fair Trading.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on Michelin Tyre plc's application to build a new combined heat and power gas-fired power station at their Stoke-on-Trent tyre factory. [84622]

Mr. Battle: I have today granted consent under Section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 to Michelin Tyre plc for construction of a 58 MW gas-fired Combined Heat and Power station at its tyre factory in Stoke-on-Trent Council. The station has also today been given clearance as a gas-fired station under Section 14 of the Energy Act 1976 and planning permission has been deemed to be granted, subject to 50 planning conditions agreed with the City of Stoke-on-Trent Council. The decisions have been taken in accordance with the policy set out in the White Paper entitled 'Conclusions of the Review of Energy sources for Power Generation and Government response to fourth and fifth Reports of the Trade and Industry Committee' (Cm 4071).

Copies of the Press Notice and decision letters are being placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will announce his decision on Rolls-Royce Power Venture Ltd's notification to build an open cycle gas turbine power station at Croydon. [84621]

Mr. Byers: I have decided not to issue a direction under section 14(3) of the Energy Act 1976 to stop Rolls-Royce Power Ventures Ltd. building a new 49MW gas-fired power station at Croydon. In taking my decision I concluded that the contribution to providing future diversity of technology by allowing the commercial demonstration of this innovative development is such that it would have been inappropriate to issue such a direction.

Although new natural gas-fired generation would normally be inconsistent with the Government's energy policy concerns relating to diversity and security of supply, the Energy White Paper indicated that there may be a few exceptional examples which might merit support so as to help provide future diversity of technology. The White Paper also emphasises the importance of long term diversity of technology (together with diversity of fuels and sources of supply) in promoting flexibility and an ability to adapt to an uncertain future. I have concluded that the need for Rolls-Royce's Industrial Trent turbine to be commercially demonstrated, and so ensure the future diversity of technology, is such that it is appropriate for the proposal to be carried out.

Copies of this Press Notice and decision letter are being placed in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many heavy goods vehicles are receiving the reduction in vehicle excise duty announced in his Budget statement following a reduction in the amount of their exhaust emissions. [83823]

Ms Glenda Jackson: As of 30 April 1999, 120 heavy goods vehicles were licensed in the Reduced Pollution tax classes. This figure does not take into account any operators who obtained a Reduced Pollution Certificate in April and waited for the end of the month before relicensing at the lower rate.

A370

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received calling for the installation of speed cameras on the A370 between Weston-super-Mare and Congresbury. [84181]

Ms Glenda Jackson: No representations have been received calling for the installation of speed cameras. The installation of speed cameras on the A370 is for North Somerset Council to consider in its role as the local highway authority. The Secretary of State's consent is not required.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for new safety measures on the A370 between Weston-super-Mare and Congresbury. [84182]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The A370 is a local road for which North Somerset Council is the local highway authority. It is for the local authority to determine the need for new safety measures on this road.

Water Charges

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what his definition is of homes which have been substantially altered, as it relates to his Department's report, Water Charging in England and Wales: Government Decisions Following Consultation, page 7, paragraph 24. [84224]

Mr. Meale: I will write to the hon. Member.

Westminster City Council Inquiry (Fees)

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) how much the Audit Commission has paid to Mr. Tony Childs, the Westminster Auditor's legal representative, for his professional fees incurred over the period 18 July 1989 to 30 April 1999 in connection with the Auditor's inquiry into Westminster City Council's designated sales policy; [84119]

(2) how much the Audit Commission has paid to Mr. John Magill, the Westminster Auditor, in professional fees over the period 18 July 1989 to 30 April 1999 in connection with his inquiry into Westminster City Council's designated sales policy; [84120]

(3) how much the Audit Commission has paid to Mr. John Howell QC, for his professional fees incurred in representing Westminster City Council's appointed Auditor at (a) the Divisional Court hearing in 1997, (b) the Appeal Court hearing in 1999 and (c) since he was first consulted in connection with the Auditor's inquiry into Westminster City Council's designated sales policy. [84121]

Ms Armstrong: The cost of investigations carried out by auditors appointed by The Audit Commission are borne by the authority concerned. The Commission indemnifies the auditor for the cost of any court proceedings resulting from such investigations. Under the indemnity the Commission has met, in relation to the Westminster designated sales inquiry, costs of £2,997,000 incurred by the auditor in respect of his costs, and those of his solicitor and barrister.

Strategy for Sustainable Development

Mr. Patrick Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to publish the revised UK Strategy for Sustainable Development. [84538]

Mr. Prescott: "A better quality of life—a Strategy for sustainable development for the UK" will be published on Monday 17 May. Copies will be placed in the House Libraries. It will also be available on my Department's website at www.detr.gov.uk.

The aim of sustainable development is to deliver a better quality of life for everyone, now and for generations to come. That means building economic prosperity in a way that protects our environment and shares that prosperity more widely. It means creating "livability"—towns, cities and rural areas which are based on sustainable communities, offering a better quality of life for all. The Sustainable Development Strategy will provide the framework for meeting those objectives, by tackling problems in a co-ordinated way and by linking local, national and international action. The Strategy will look at the overlapping themes of a sustainable economy, sustainable communities and managing the environment and resources, with the challenges and opportunities each represents. It will include indicators as a means to measure progress, including a set of headline indicators.

The Government will lead in putting the Strategy into practice. But it will be important for each sector—and all of us as individuals—to pull in the same direction. The Strategy is therefore being supported by the launch of the next phase of the "Are you doing your bit?" advertising campaign, to communicate key elements of sustainable development to everyone.

Smoke Alarms

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the number of lives that would be saved each year if every local authority dwelling in England was fitted with a smoke alarm. [79606]

Mr. George Howarth [pursuant to the reply, 13 April 1999, c. 62]: I have been asked to reply.

The previous reply provided figures for fire casualties in all households in England; a separate estimate is not available for local authority dwellings. Fire statistics do not reveal whether the dwelling in which the fire occurred was owned or rented in the private or public sector, although it is known that 17 per cent. of all households in England are in the ownership of local authorities.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what additional costs there will be for the pensions schemes for the Police and Fire Services as a result of the changes contained in the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill to incapacity benefit for claimants with occupational pensions; and what other public service schemes will be similarly affected. [84043]

Mr. Bayley [holding answer 13 May 1999]: Currently Police, Fire and other public service pensions awarded on injury grounds are abated to take account of benefits. The Regulatory Impact Assessment published with the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill made it clear that there may be some additional costs for such schemes from the proposal to take pension income over £50 a week into account for future Incapacity Benefit claims. But until the schemes consider the implications in detail, the scale of these costs cannot be assessed.

ICL Pathway Project

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what compensation his Department has (a) sought and (b) received as a result of the delays to the ICL Pathway Project; [84250]

(2) what the original timetable was for automation of post offices for computerised delivery of social security payments under the ICL Pathway Project; and what delays are now forecast; [84252]

(3) what savings have occurred under the pilot scheme for the ICL Pathway Project; [84254]

(4) what estimate he has made of the savings as a result of the ICL Pathway Project once all post offices are automated as planned. [84251]

Angela Eagle: The Benefits Agency, Post Office Counters Ltd. and ICL Pathway continue to work together to progress the project. Contractual and commercial matters remain confidential to the parties.

When the project was let in May 1996, it was assumed that all post offices would be automated by the end of 1998. To date, 204 post offices have been automated in the North East and South West of England. On current plans, automation will be completed int he next two years.

The payment card is estimated to have resulted in £91,000 fraud savings up to the end of March 1999. The order book control service, which enables bar-coded order books to be identified by the system, has resulted in £1.6 million in fraud savings over the same period.

It is estimated that when paper based methods of payment are fully automated, £189 million savings per annum will be achieved.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mr. Patrick Finucane

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will investigate the statements made by her Department on the (a) extent and (b) thoroughness of the original inquiries of the RUC into Mr. Finucane's murder. [83405]

Marjorie Mowlam: A summary of Mr. Steven's first inquiry, indicating the extent and thoroughness of that inquiry, was published. In light of this, my hon. Friend may wish to direct my attention to any statements by my department which he thinks I should investigate.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions (a) she and (b) officials in her Department have had with the Chief Constable of the RUC concerning Mr. John Steven's statement on his authority in relation to investigating the murder of Mr. Patrick Finucane. [83406]

Marjorie Mowlam: Operational policing, including the request to Mr. Stevens to investigate the murder of Mr. Finucane, is a matter for the Chief Constable. The Chief Constable keeps me informed about important developments by discussions with me and with my officials.

TREASURY

Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions since 11 November 1998 he has met the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) to discuss matters within his remit which might be taken forward in policy development terms through the Joint Cabinet Consultative Committee mechanism. [69335]

Mr. Gordon Brown [holding answer 4 February 1999]: None.

Stamp Duty

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are to take place in the treatment for stamp duty purposes of leases under which the rent is to be adjusted in the light of changes in the retail prices index; and if he will make a statement. [84623]

Ms Hewitt: In the light of recent legal advice given to the Inland Revenue, the treatment of these leases for Stamp Duty is to be changed.

When a new lease is taken out, Stamp Duty is charged by reference to both the premium and the rent under the lease. The premium attracts duty at the same rates as the selling price on the sale of a freehold interest. The premium gets the benefit of the £60,000 nil rate band provided that the rent does not exceed a ceiling, currently £600 per annum. The average annual rent is charged at rates of between one per cent. and 24 per cent., depending on the length of the lease.

Many leases provide that the rent is to increase by a fixed percentage at annual or other intervals—or they lay down the actual amounts of the increases. The average annual rent, and therefore the Stamp Duty, is straightforward to calculate in these cases. But if future rent levels are expressed in terms of future movements in an index, like the RPI, it is less clear how a figure for the average annual rent can be calculated at the time the lease is taken out. In the light of representations, the then Economic Secretary made a statement to this House by way of Written Answer on 6 November 1996, Official Report, columns 541–43, setting out how the Stamp Office would apply Stamp Duty in such cases for the future, on the basis of legal advice. Broadly, where the rent under a lease was to be adjusted by reference to future changes in an index, Stamp Duty would be calculated by reference to changes in that index during the year ending with the date of execution of the lease.

However, the legal validity of this approach has been challenged. Further legal advice given to the Inland Revenue is that the current system of applying a formula to allow for increases in an index number after the date of execution of a lease is not appropriate. So this practice will cease.

In future, where there is a formula expressed in the lease for rent reviews based on the RPI, only any change in the RPI up to the date of its execution will be taken into account for Stamp Duty purposes. This is expected to result, in most cases, in the average rent being little more than the initial rent.

This change means that people who have paid Stamp Duty on this type of lease may have paid more duty than they should have done. The Inland Revenue will invite those who paid duty on a lease of this kind to contact the Stamp Office and claim any repayment due to them. Details of the arrangements for repayments are set out in an Inland Revenue Press Release and on the Inland Revenue website.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

"People in Britain"

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors decided which Labour candidate's photograph to use as demonstrative of the UK electoral process in the section rights and responsibilities of his departmental publication "People in Britain". [83948]

Mr. Robin Cook: A picture researcher is appointed to find pictures to illustrate the text. A selection of suitable photographs is supplied to the designer who picks the best quality shots for reproduction. The only political consideration is balance. The booklet was produced in 1996.

Pre-Accession Advisers (EU)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the (a) role, (b) budget and (c) fees for the pre-accession advisers funded under the EU twinning programme with candidate countries in central Europe; who will select them; on what criteria; and if he will make a statement. [83928]

Mr. Quin: The UK is actively involved in the European Commission's new twinning programme under which experts from Member States are seconded to Central European Candidate Country Ministries to help them prepare for accession to the EU.

The role of Pre-Accession Advisers (PAAs) is to help Central European (CE) Ministries adopt the legislative and administrative changes that are necessary in order to join the EU. PAAs work full-time for at least one year within a CE Ministry to implement a twinning project. This includes the support and co-ordination of any short-term expert missions and training activities within the project.

Funding for PAAs is set as part of the individual budget for each twinning project. The Commission estimates an approximate budget of 200,000 euro per year for each PAA.

The Pre-Accession Adviser continues to be paid his/her normal civil service salary throughout the project. The Commission then reimburses the cost of the salary to the Member State Department concerned. The PAA receives a per diem allowance, as well as housing, removal costs and school fees, where appropriate. The remuneration of PAAs is similar to that of other Commission funded secondees such as Detached National Experts (DNEs).

PAAs are selected by the Member State Ministry or mandated body when preparing a bid to meet the requirements of a specific twinning project. The qualifications of the proposed PAA are an important factor in the final decision of the Central European Candidate Countries when they consider twinning bids from Member States. PAAs must therefore have the relevant skills to carry out the project. For example, the DTI have seconded the Deputy Head of their State Aid Policy Unit to help the Czechs on a State Aids project; and the Home Office are seconding the Head of International Section in Policing Organised Crime Unit to help Poland with an organised crime and border management project.

MEP Statute

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of (a) the draft MEP statute agreed by the Council of Ministers, (b) the proposal from the European Parliament set before the Council and (c) the European Parliament Legal Affairs Committee report on the Council amendments; what assessment he has made of the prospects for agreement being reached on an MEP statute; what action his Department is taking to reach such an agreement; and if he will make a statement. [83944]

Ms Quin: The first two documents have already been sent to the House Scrutiny Committee. I shall arrange for further copies to be deposited in the Library. The European Parliament Legal Affairs Committee proposed a resolution which was adopted with some amendments by the plenary on 5 May. I will also arrange for the resolution to be deposited in the Library.

In the resolution, the European Parliament did not consider the draft Statute agreed by the Council and reaffirmed the Parliament's text on 3 December 1998. The Council is continuing to talk to the European Parliament to resolve outstanding issues. But in view of the imminence of the June European elections prospects for adoption of a Statute during this European Parliamentary term are uncertain. Agreement would have to be sought with the new Parliament. In the meantime, existing arrangements for MEPs would continue.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the discussions at the General Affairs Council of 26 and 27 April concerning European Court of Justice preparations for implementation of the Amsterdam treaty. [83929]

Ms Quin: There was no substantive discussion on the European Court of Justice's (ECJ) preparations for the implementation of the Amsterdam Treaty at the General Affairs Council on 26 and 27 April. The Dutch delegation did, however stress the need for the ECJ to prepare for the extra workload.

The ECJ is expected to produce a review of its operation and procedures shortly.

East Timor

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what records his Department has (a) from August, September and October 1975 of communications between Britain and (i) Australia and (ii) Indonesia in those months, (b) from 1975 and 1976 of communications between Britain and (i) Australia, and (ii) Indonesia concerning the invasion of East Timor and (c) of the visits to his Department in London by (i) Jose Ramos-Horta in February 1976 and (ii) James Dunn in early 1977; when each of these sets of records was last consulted; and who has access to them. [83958]

Mr. Robin Cook: The information requested is not held centrally and to provide it would incur disproportionate cost.

Ilisu Dam (Turkey)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the proposal for Her Majesty's Government to support the construction of the Ilisu Dam in Turkey meets the criteria of the Government's ethical foreign policy. [83920]

Ms Quin: No decision has yet been taken on the provision of export credit cover for the Ilisu Dam project. In assessing the arguments whether or not to provide export credit cover, we and other Government Departments are examining carefully all aspects of the project's potential impact. We will examine in particular the likely environmental impact, the issue of resettlement of local communities, the riparian rights of neighbouring states, and the impact on the region's cultural heritage, as well as any likely economic and social benefits the project may bring about.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department was first informed by the Department of Trade and Industry of its proposal to support the construction of the Ilisu Dam in Turkey. [83945]

Ms Quin: The Export Credits Guarantee Department first informed the Foreign and Commonwealth Office of the application for export credit cover in respect of the proposed contract to build the Ilisu Dam on 12 January 1999.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Syria and the Government of Jordan, representing Iraq, on the proposals of the Government of Turkey to construct the Ilisu Dam. [83921]

Ms Quin: The State Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Syrian Arab Republic raised the issue of the Ilisu Dam project with our Ambassador to Damascus on 4 March.

We have had no discussions with the Government of Jordan on this issue.

Child Soldiers (Ethiopia and Eritrea)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the use of child soldiers in (a) Ethiopia and (b) Eritrea. [83923]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Both sides have alleged the other is using child soldiers, but we have seen no firm evidence to support these allegations. Both insist that their policy remains not to recruit anyone younger than 18.

We remain concerned and will continue to monitor the situation.

Overseas Territories (Homosexual Laws)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in changing the laws on homosexual acts in the overseas territories since publication of the White Paper on dependent territories. [83940]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The White Paper on Britain and the Overseas Territories makes clear, in keeping with our commitment to a modern relationship based on partnership and responsible self-government, that we would prefer for these reforms to be enacted by the Overseas Territories Governments themselves. Discussions with the Overseas Territories on a wide range of issues covered in the White paper are continuing.

Entry Clearance Refusals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he proposes to appoint a new Chairman of the Independent Monitor of Entry Clearance Refusals. [84269]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Independent Monitor's current contract expires in November this year. No decision has yet been taken on the appointment of a new Independent Monitor.

Canadian SFOR Armoured Vehicles

Mr. Alan Johnson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the proposed export of spare parts for Canadian NATO Stabilisation Force (SFOR) armoured vehicles in Bosnia. [84546]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government have granted a licence for the export to Bosnia of spare parts for armoured vehicles deployed by the Canadian NATO Stabilisation Force (SFOR). We were glad to approve this export licence in view of the need for SFOR to maintain its vehicles so that it can carry out its peace-keeping activities with the maximum degree of safety.

Falklands

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ilford, North (Ms Perham) of 28 April 1999, Official Report, column 180, on the Falkland Islands, at what time and on what date he spoke to the Chilean Foreign Minister to disagree with the decree issued by that Government suspending Lan Chile's flights to the Falklands; and to whom the Minister of State reported on 19 April the issue of the decree. [84183]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend spoke to the Chilean Foreign Minister on the telephone on 27 April. I reported the issue of the decree in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) on 19 April 1999, Official Report, column 406.

Correspondence

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place a copy of his letters to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham of 30 and 28 April in the Library. [84184]

Mr. Robin Cook: Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Al Shifa Plant

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 May 1999, Official Report, column 120, on the Al Shifa plant, what steps Her Majesty's Government took to check the Americans' evidence that the plant was being used for the production of chemical weapons materials. [84223]

Mr. Robin Cook: It is established practice under Section 1(c) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose or discuss information received in confidence from foreign governments.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Kosovo Refugees

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate have been assigned to work on the evacuation of refugees from Kosovo to the United Kingdom. [83803]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A unit has been set up within the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to facilitate the entry of persons coming to the United Kingdom under the United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) humanitarian evacuation programme and to expedite the processing of asylum applications from nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. At present, some 24 people are directly involved, with support from others when necessary. Immigration Service staff are also involved at the point when the evacuees arrive at United Kingdom airports.

Arrangements have been made to assist the UNHCR in its task of processing applications from Kosovars in the camps to come to the United Kingdom under the Humanitarian Evacuation Programme. The first team under the leadership of Richard Tilt, the recently retired Director General of the Prison Service, flew out to Macedonia on 9 May and further teams will be going out on a rolling basis.

Immigration Detention Centres

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were held in detention centres for immigration offences on 30 April. [83589]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There were 418 males and 40 females detained solely under Immigration Act powers in immigration detention centres in the United Kingdom on 30 April 1999. These figures exclude persons detained in Prison Service establishments and, other than at Dover, in police cells.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reached a decision on the possible use of HMP Aldington and HMYOI Hatfield as immigration detention centres; and if he will make a statement. [84280]

Mr. George Howarth: Following a review of the projected future requirements of both the Prison Service and the Immigration Service, it has been agreed that Her Majesty's Prison Aldington should be closed by the end of August 1999 and the site handed over to the Immigration Service to pursue its development as an immigration detention centre. This will provide an opportunity to build a centre designed for the needs of immigration detainees as part of the Government's White Paper commitment to reducing the use of Prison Service accommodation. It is planned to re-deploy the staff of the prison elsewhere within the Service and no compulsory redundancies of mobile grades are envisaged as a result of this closure. We will also make every effort to avoid any redundancies for non-mobile grades. The Unions will be closely involved in those arrangements.

The future of Her Majesty's Young Offender Institution Hatfield is still being considered, but I expect to be in a position to announce a decision shortly.

Asylum Seekers (Yugoslavia)

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia currently detained under Immigration Act powers have applied for asylum in the United Kingdom since 24 March. [83799]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: New data are currently being collated. I will write to my hon. Friend shortly.

UK Passport Agency

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff in each of the last three years (a) in total and (b) broken down by grade were employed in each office of the UK Passport Agency. [83917]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The table shows the average staffing in each office of the UK Passport Agency for the last three years, in total and broken down by grade.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the UK Passport Agency performed against its targets in 1998–99; and what are the targets set for the Agency in 1999–2000. [83908]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK Passport Agency's targets for 1998–99 and its performance against these targets were as follows:

Target

To process properly completed straightforward applications within a maximum of 15 working days in April, and 10 working days for the remainder of the year.

Performance

April: 15

May: 18

June: 26

July: 23

August: 22

September: 15

October: 18

November: 17

December: 25

January: 27

February: 26

March: 34.

Target

In seeking to meet this target, the Agency will give priority to customers' travel needs, aiming to meet declared travel dates for at least 99.99 per cent. of passports issued.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in each of the last three years for which figures are available the UK Passport Agency has not met the declared travel dates for issue of passports; and what is its current target for meeting declared travel dates. [83907]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Figures are available only from 1998–99 when the UK Passport Agency's standard of service target first included meeting customers declared travel dates. Available information indicates that there were 95 cases in 1998–99 where the UK Passport Agency has been made aware that declared travel dates were not met.

The Agency's current target for meeting declared travel dates is to meet those dates for at least 99.99 per cent. of passports issued. This target was achieved in 1998–99.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many restricted validity passports have been issued by the UK Passport Agency in each month for each of the last three years. [83918]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested on restricted validity passport issues is shown in the table.

Immoral Earnings (Imprisonment)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women were sentenced to imprisonment in 1998 for living on immoral earnings. [83912]

Mr. Boateng: Information for 1998 will not be available until the summer. The table gives equivalent data for 1997.

Number of persons sentenced to immediate custody at all courts for offences of living on immoral earnings of prostitution, by sex, England and Wales, 1997

Refugees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refugees have entered the United Kingdom since 1 January; and if he will make a statement. [83910]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Between 1 January and 31 March 1999, 5,905 applications for asylum were made by persons arriving at ports in the United Kingdom. In addition to this, 8,035 applications were received from persons already within the United Kingdom making a total of 13,945 applications for asylum received in the first three months of 1999.

Asylum Support System

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the number of staff to be employed in the administrative machinery for the proposed Home Office asylum support system. [83955]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Consultants, KPMG, have recommended that the Asylum Support Directorate should have 298 staff in 2000–01 and 323 staff in 2001–02. We are still considering this recommendation.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been undertaken by his Department into the levels of support that will need to be available to dispersed asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement. [84040]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The proposed levels of support we have announced are the result of detailed discussions with other Government Departments, the local authority associations, individual local authorities and the voluntary sector. No formal academic research has been undertaken.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what transitional arrangements he will put in place under the Immigration and Asylum Bill to deal with existing asylum seekers who are waiting for their applications to be processed; and if he will make a statement. [84037]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Local Government Association and the Association of London Government are jointly developing new arrangements for supporting asylum seekers which mirror the support system which is due to come into operation on 1 April 2000 and which will, therefore, ease the transition to the new system. It is proposed that the Immigration and Asylum Bill will give statutory backing to these transitional arrangements with effect from Royal Assent.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from (a) refugee organisations and (b) other agencies since the assessment of the level of cash support available to asylum seekers proposed under the Immigration and Asylum Bill; and if he will make a statement. [84039]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A number of refugee organisations and other agencies have commented on the proposed cash allowances for asylum seekers. We are now considering these comments.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedures he plans to introduce to allow asylum seekers of school age to claim free school meals; and if he will make a statement. [84036]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: If they are of compulsory school age, the children of asylum seekers who are being supported by the Home Office will, if eligible, be entitled to free school meals.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the procedures are for informing applicants of exceptional delays in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. [84270]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The recent disruption to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate's (IND) caseworking operation has meant that some applications are taking longer to process than would normally be the case. A number of measures have been taken to alert applicants. Letters, warning of possible delays, together with an explanatory leaflet, are now enclosed with all application forms. Leaflets have also been distributed widely among representatives, user groups and agencies in order to publicise the changes in IND as widely as possible.

HM Inspectorate of Constabulary

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are employed in HM Inspectorate of Constabulary. [84268]

Mr. Boateng: As of 12 May 1999, 84 persons were employed at Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary.

The total number of current staff is as follows:

1 Chief Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary

5 Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary

2 Assistant Her Majesty's Inspector's (Police)

2 Assistant Her Majesty's Inspector's (Non Police)

32 Seconded Police Officers

4 Seconded Civilians

32 Home Office employees

6 Staff contracted to Home Office.

Additionally, there are currently seven vacancies in the group "Home Office employees" with these staff, there would be a total establishment of 91.

Mr. Tom Neil

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons Mr. Tom Neil of Hillbrook Road, Totnes (a) has not received confirmation of his visa status in the United Kingdom and (b) has been informed that, should he leave the United Kingdom at any time, his application would be cancelled. [83900]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Mr. Neil was granted an extension of stay in the United Kingdom and his passport returned to him on 12 May. I am sorry that this had been delayed. Under Paragraph 34 of House of Commons paper 395, Mr. Neil's application would have been treated as withdrawn had he requested the return of his passport before his application had been dealt with.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Schoolteachers

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average annual cost of employing a schoolteacher in 1998–99 in (a) Northumberland and (b) Slough. [83543]

Ms Estelle Morris: The average cost of employing a schoolteacher in a Local Education Authority depends on the average salary levels of those teachers currently employed within that Authority.

The estimated average cost of employing a full-time teacher (including heads and deputies) in the maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special sector in Slough and Northumberland in 1998–99:

	Slough	Northumberland
Average salary[1]	23,800	24,000
Employer costs[2]	3,500	3,500
Total cost	27,300	27,500

[1] Average salaries at local education authority level are likely to vary for a number of reasons, including the grade structures required by the mix of school sizes, teachers average length of service and payment of recruitment and retention points. The estimate takes account of the staged pay award in 1998–99, 2.0 per cent. in April with the full 3.8 per cent. paid in December.

[2] Includes 7.6 per cent. National Insurance contributions and 7.2 per cent. pension costs.

Note:

All figures are rounded to the nearest hundred pounds.

CSE/GCSE Examinations

Sir Geoffrey JohnsonSmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils were entered for CSE/GCSE examination papers, in 1997–98; how many sat for only one subject paper and failed to pass it; and at what cost. [83281]

Ms Estelle Morris: The number of pupils in schools in England entered for CSE/GCSE examination papers in 1997–98 was 659,300. Of these 9,300 sat for only one subject paper and failed to pass it, with an estimated examination fee cost of £150,000.

Class Sizes

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many classes for five to seven-year-olds in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire had over 30 pupils in each year from 1992 to date; and if he will make a statement. [83962]

We have recently approved Shropshire Education Authority's class size implementation plan, which will mean that no infant pupils in Shropshire will be in classes of over 30 from September 2000. To support that plan in 1999–2000 we have allocated to Shropshire £540,000 for additional teachers and £249,000 for extra classrooms.

National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish the report of the National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education. [84620]

Mr. Blunkett: I am pleased to announce that today the National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education published their report "All our Futures: Creativity, Culture and Education". Copies have been placed in the Library and the report is also available on my Department's website, www.DfEE.gov.uk.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Research Spending

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's planned spending on research broken down by category in (a) 1999–2000, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03; and what was the actual spending in 1998–99. [83472]

Mr. Rooker: Our outturn spend on research and development in 1998–99 is estimated at £125 million. Following the Comprehensive Spending Review, we are examining the R and D programme spend for 1999–2000 to 2001–02 in the light of our new policy aim and objectives. An announcement will be made in due course.

GM Foods

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safety measures and regulations his Department has implemented in relation to genetically modified food products on sale in the UK; and what proposals he has to extend these regulations. [83784]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 14 May 1999]: All GM foods for sale in the UK are first assessed for safety in accordance with the requirements of the EC Novel Foods Regulation (258/97). Those that are approved must then comply with the labelling requirements contained in this regulation and, where appropriate, the EC Regulation on the labelling of GM Soya and Maize (1139/98). The Government took steps in March to ensure that the provisions in the latter Regulation also applied to foods sold in catering establishments and similar premises. The UK is the only country in Europe to have done this so far.

HEALTH

Remand Fostering Schemes

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to change the funding mechanisms for remand fostering schemes; [83896]

(2) what studies he has commissioned into the relative cost and efficacy of (a) remand fostering schemes for juveniles and (b) remand in (i) secure units, (ii) young offender institutions and (iii) prisons; [83897]

(3) what plans he has to encourage wider use of remand fostering for juveniles. [83898]

Mr. Hutton: Every local authority determines its own need for remand fostering schemes. Funding for this and other special fostering schemes is found from within existing annual budgets. There are no plans to change this.

In 1994, the National Foster Care Association (NFCA) published a report "On Remand: Foster Care and the Youth Justice Service". This national survey of remand fostering provision identified 29 local authorities operating such schemes. A 1998 NFCA report "Focus on Teenage Fostering" found that provision for remand fostering has since increased.

The Government have not commissioned any relative cost and efficacy studies into the areas referred to. However, one of the objectives of the Quality Protects programme launched in September 1998 is to increase placement choice for all children in local authority care. This will include provision for remand fostering.

The Youth Justice Board (YJB) for England and Wales has a development fund of £85 million over the next three years. The YJB will make grants to local authorities and other agencies for the development of good practice in the provision of youth justice services and in other work to help prevent youth offending. £35 million has been earmarked for bail support and supervision schemes and for other remand-related initiatives, which could include the development of good practice in remand fostering work. The YJB would be interested to receive bids in this area.

Berkshire Health Authority

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he expects the funding for Berkshire Health Authority to be fully on the basis of the weighted capitation formula for the first time; [84178]

(2) if he will estimate the accumulated difference between the funds which would have been provided to Berkshire Health Authority under the weighted capitation formula when the formula was introduced and the amount actually provided. [84179]

Mr. Denham: Allocations have been made directly to health authorities since 1996–97.

We remain committed to the principle of achieving equity in resource allocation based on weighted capitation as soon as practicable. Health authorities are brought closer to their target fair share by a process of levelling up. Under target health authorities such as Berkshire will therefore be brought to target over time. In 1999–2000 Berkshire Health Authority's allocation was £15.62 million or 3.50 per cent. below target.

It is possible hypothetically to calculate the additional resources Berkshire Health Authority would have received if they had been funded to target. This can be done by aggregating the health authority's distances from target of each of the years since 1996–97 which gives a cumulative total of £58 million.

Newbury Hospital

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further information he requires before he can authorise a start to the building of the new Newbury Hospital. [84180]

Mr. Denham: Following discussions about the legality and accounting correctness of the proposed arrangements, the South East Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive and trustees of the charity are currently preparing advice to Ministers.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Albania

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the budget for her Department's office in Tirana, Albania; how many staff are in post and at what grades; who is the budget holder in Tirana and what is his authorised level of expenditure; what is the role of the Crown Agents; and if she will make a statement. [84125]

Clare Short: Monthly running costs for the DFID Tirana office are £75,000 (inclusive of staffing, rent and utilities). There are currently 10 British recruited and one locally recruited members of staff: the head of office, specialists in camp planning and development, logistics, health, NGO liaison, and an administrator. The head of office holds an initial budget of £1 million for projects with delegated authority of up to £100,000. The Crown Agents are providing, under contract to DFID, the emergency logistics team who are managing the office. Crown Agents may also be used for procurement and other services.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Schengen

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 4 May 1999, Official Report, columns 340–41, if the letter from the Dutch Government of 16 July 1997 on the Amsterdam treaty negotiations was referred to during Council discussions on the Home Secretary's proposal to join elements of the Schengen system. [83963]

Ms Quin: No.

MEPs' Interests

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place (a) the Register of MEPs' interests and (b) the guidelines for MEPs registering interests in the Library. [83942]

Ms Quin: The register of MEPs' interests is held by the European Parliament in Brussels and Strasbourg where it is available for inspection by the public.

The guidelines for MEPs registering interests are contained in Annex 1 of the European Parliament's Rules of Procedure, copies of which are available from the European Parliament or on the Internet (www.europarl.eu.int).

Kosovo (Ethnic Mix)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the pre-conflict Kosovan ethnic mix in (a) percentage and (b) numerical terms; and what measures he is planning to guarantee the security of non-Albanians in post-conflict Kosovo. [83926]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Definitive statistics for Kosovo's pre-March 1999 ethnic make-up do not exist. On the available information, we estimate that Albanians represented between 70 per cent. and 90 per cent. of Kosovo's pre-March 1999 population (approximately 1.6 million). The remainder of the population consisted of Serbs and Montenegrins (perhaps 150,000), Muslims (up to 100,000), and Turks, Romanies and a group known as 'Egyptians' (probably less than 50,000).

Our aim is a post-conflict administration of Kosovo that safeguards the security of all its people, irrespective of ethnic origin. That can be achieved only by means of a strong international military presence with a NATO core.

Biological and Toxic Weapons

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) progress has been made and (b) issues remain unresolved in the negotiations concerning a protocol to the Biological and Toxic Weapons Conventions. [84210]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: Since 1995 an Ad Hoc Group of States Parties has been meeting in Geneva to consider measures to strengthen the 1972 Biological Weapons Convention. The United Kingdom is responsible for the key sessions on compliance measures and is playing a leading role in the negotiations. The Ad Hoc Group has made considerable progress and is now working on the text of a draft Protocol to the Convention. 1999 has already seen a significant intensification of this work with a total of 16 weeks available for the negotiations, the largest ever number. Much detailed work remains to be done, primarily on the technical aspects of the Protocol, but the UK, together with its EU partners, believes that an effective package of measures can be agreed during 2000. As an indication of the priority the UK attaches to its early and successful completion, we have offered to host the signing ceremony of the Protocol in London.

Arms Sales

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if a country may be admitted to the European Union without becoming a signatory to the European Union code of conduct on arms sales. [84257]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: In practice we would expect all EU member states to adhere in full to the Code of Conduct, including through participation in the information exchange and consultation mechanism established in the operative provisions of the Code.

The Associated countries of Central and Eastern Europe, the Associated country Cyprus, and Iceland and Norway have already aligned themselves with the criteria and the principles contained in the EU Code on Arms Exports.

Visa Applicants (Islamabad)

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visa applicants in 1998 were turned away from the Islamabad High Commission by the pre-sift process before their formal application had been considered. [84327]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Fiona Mactaggart) on 26 April 1999, Official Report, columns 32–33.

Sudan

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent contact there has been with the Government of Sudan about the bombing by the USA of the factory in Khartoum; and if he will make a statement. [84227]

Mr. Robin Cook: We have been in regular contact with the Government of Sudan since the withdrawal of staff from Khartoum last August. Discussions have covered a whole range of issues, including Al Shifa. We are hopeful of a return to normal relations with the Sudan.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government to support the action of the USA in bombing the factory in Khartoum, Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [84226]

Mr. Robin Cook: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave his support to the US action last August as action against international terrorists. As Her Majesty's Government have said on many occasions since, the US told us at the time of the strike on Al Shifa that they had compelling evidence that the plant was being used for the production of chemical weapons materials.

CABINET OFFICE

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office, pursuant to his answer of 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 709, on Special Advisers, if he will give the total travel cost of each occasion when a Special Adviser travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997 and the place visited. [82434]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: For the period 2 May 1997 to 31 March 1999, Special Advisers in this Department accompanied me or my predecessor overseas in an official capacity on six occasions to the USA, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and Italy. The cost of this travel was £19,091. In addition, the UK anti-drugs co-ordinator and his deputy have travelled overseas in an official capacity on eight occasions to the USA, Canada, Austria, Czech Republic, Saudi Arabia and Pakistan. The cost of this travel was £18,178. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent guidance has been given to colleges of further education concerning the attendance of members of the governing body; and if he will make a statement. [R] [84385]

Mr. Mudie: Further Education Corporations are required by their instrument of government to hold meetings at least once in each term. They may remove any governor from office who fails to attend meetings over a period of six months without their permission. The Further Education Funding Council will be issuing comprehensive new guidance for governors later this year.

Unemployment (Coventry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps the Government are taking to improve the effectiveness of measures aimed at reducing the level of long-term unemployment among the over 25-year-olds in Coventry. [83972]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Building on the New Deal for people aged 25 and over, which was introduced in June 1998 and gave those who had been unemployed for at least two years new subsidised employment and training opportunities, we introduced pilot schemes in 28 areas of Great Britain in November 1998. These have been designed to allow local partnerships more flexibility to try innovative ways of helping this age group back into work. One of these pilots is operating in Coventry, and is using a collaborative approach to delivering services through a range of partner organisations including the local city council. We are supporting their initiatives in helping long-term unemployed people find work, and will be evaluating this and the other pilots to see what works best and how help can be delivered most effectively in future for the benefit of unemployed adults in Coventry and elsewhere.

Islington Local Education Authority

Mr. White: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the report on the Ofsted inspection of Islington Local Education Authority is to be published. [84731]

Ms Estelle Morris: The report is to be published by Ofsted tomorrow morning. Copies of the report and the Secretary of State's response will be placed in the Library tomorrow morning.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list for the week ended Saturday 1 May (1) the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many involved (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican groups; [83893]

(2) the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishment shootings which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many in each category were committed by (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [83894]

Mr. Ingram: The number of security incidents during the period 25 April-1 May 1999 are as follows:

Shooting incidents: 3
Bombing incidents: 3

The number of casualties as a result of paramilitary-style attacks during the period are as follows:

	Loyalist	Republican
Assaults	Nil	1
Shootings	1	Nil
Total	1	1

Note:
1. Figures may be subject to minor amendment
2. The shooting and bombing incidents cannot as yet be attributed to a grouping although 2 of the bombing incidents have been claimed by the Orange Volunteers.

International Fund for Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what advice her Department gives to applicants to the International Fund for Ireland on how to accommodate the McBride principles in their applications. [83355]

Mr. Paul Murphy: As my hon. Friend may know, the International Fund for Ireland is administered by an independent Board jointly appointed by the two Governments and all matters pertaining to the handling of applications are a matter for the Board.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Luton Bypass

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assistance the Government are giving towards the Luton north bypass. [83142]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Luton Northern Bypass is a major long-term local authority scheme. Bedfordshire County Council and Luton Borough Council are currently working on a joint 5-year local transport plan submission for the area.

In the Trunk Road Review, the A5 Dunstable Bypass and the M1 Junction 6A-10 Widening were included in the London to South Midlands Multi-Modal Study—which is in Tranche 2 of the study programme starting in 2000–01. The study will address a range of issues including motorway congestion, development pressures, the contribution made by a shift to other modes of transport and access to major urban areas such as Luton and Dunstable.

Capital Housing Receipts

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the total amount of capital housing receipts that have been released to Shrewsbury and Atcham borough council for each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [83924]

Mr. Raynsford: The following capital allocations have been made to Shrewsbury and Atcham under the Capital Receipts Initiative. Allocations are made in the form of Supplementary Credit Approvals.

Year	£
1997–98	219,000
1998–99	757,000
1999–2000	685,000

These are available for spending on housing and housing related regeneration projects which meet local priorities.

Council Tax Fraud

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what procedures are available to a local authority to take action against individuals who wrongly claim the single person's household council tax discount; and what monitoring he undertakes to ensure that local authorities check the validity of those claiming such a discount. [84034]

Mr. Meale: Billing authorities are under a duty in relation to each financial year to take "reasonable steps" to ascertain whether any discount applies to a dwelling before calculating the bill. It is for individual authorities to decide what action to take in the light of local circumstances but it usually takes the form of a written request for information from each household. Authorities also have powers to request information from certain public bodies such as the electoral registration officer. If a person receiving a discount fails to notify the authority that he is no longer (or never was) eligible for it he may be subject to a penalty of £50. It is for the local authority's auditor to satisfy itself that the local authority has the necessary procedures in place to fulfil its statutory duties.

Aircraft Fuel Reserves

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many investigations have been held in the past year into aircraft arriving at UK airports with a fuel level lower than that required; how many have been in respect of aircraft landing at (a) Heathrow, (b) Gatwick and (c) Stansted; if he will investigate recent reports concerning an aircraft from Malaysia Airlines with nearly empty fuel tanks; and if he will make a statement. [84033]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the past year, the Air Accidents Investigation Branch (AAIB) has completed an investigation into a report by NATS of an air traffic control occurrence involving an aircraft landing at Gatwick low on fuel following its diversion from Manston. The AAIB report will be published in June.

The AAIB is also currently investigating a further air traffic control occurrence report that an aircraft arrived at Stansted from Glasgow with fuel at the minimum level set out in the relevant company fuel policy, following a diversion from Gatwick; their report will be published in due course.

The recent allegations concerning an aircraft of Malaysia Airlines (MAS) was not the subject of a formal occurrence report, but came from a confidential source. We have drawn the allegations to the Malaysian aeronautical authorities who are investigating the reported incidents. DETR and Civil Aviation Authority officials have also discussed the allegations in detail with representatives of the airline. MAS has co-operated fully in reviewing their fuel policy and examining why, on a very few occasions, low fuel levels may have been recorded at the completion of a flight. MAS has offered to provide weekly reports of fuel levels for all its aircraft on arrival in the UK and this has been incorporated into their conditions for operating into this country.

In light of these recent allegations, the Civil Aviation Authority is to carry out an increased number of inspections of long haul aircraft arriving in the UK in the coming weeks, as part of a programme of checks on foreign aircraft at UK airports.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has received in the period since 1 January 1997 of aircraft arriving at (a) Luton and (b) Stansted with empty fuel tanks; and if he will make a statement. [84376]

Ms Glenda Jackson: There have been no reports received in the period since 1 January 1997 of aircraft arriving at Luton or Stansted with empty fuel tanks.

There has been one report of an aircraft arriving at Stansted from Glasgow on 12 September 1998 with fuel at the minimum level set out in the relevant company fuel policy, following a diversion from Gatwick. This incident is subject to an investigation by the Air Accidents Investigation Branch; their report has not yet been published.

One report has been received of a light aircraft landing at Luton low on fuel.

British Rail Employees (Asbestos)

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what has been the (a) average length of time between diagnosis and receipt of compensation and (b) the average value of compensation paid for former employees of British Rail who are diagnosed as having (i) mesothelioma, (ii) asbestosis and (iii) primary carcinoma of the lung, related to exposure to asbestos in (1) the North West and (2) England. [84221]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I understand from the British Railways Board that information is not available in a form which can be analysed in the manner requested without disproportionate cost. Since 1991, the Board has settled approximately 500 such claims. Diagnosis may occur before or after a claim is made.

Weston-super-Mare (Town Council)

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to reach a decision on the petition for a town council for Weston-super-Mare submitted by North Somerset Council. [84176]

Mr. Meale [holding answer 14 May 1999]: We are currently considering a number of petitions and district reviews for new parish arrangements, including the petition for a town council for Weston-super-Mare. Our intention is to take decisions on a timescale to allow elections for any new parishes to be held in May 2000.

Domestic-rated Properties

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many domestic-rated properties there are currently in England. [84368]

Mr. Meale: The latest available information on the number of domestic-rated properties relate to 24 March 1999. There were in total 21.018 million dwellings for England on the Valuation Office Agency's lists at 24 March 1999.

Council Tax (Students)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to remove from students liability for council tax; and if he will make a statement. [84394]

Mr. Meale: Although no individuals are exempt from council tax, certain types of dwelling are exempt and this includes dwellings occupied entirely by students. Where students share accommodation with non-students, the students are disregarded for the purposes of calculating the household's bill. It is our intention to amend the liability rules to exclude such students from being jointly and severally liable for the bill as soon as Parliamentary time and other priorities allow.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the populations of the areas covered by each of the regional development agencies; and what are their budgets per head. [84532]

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the total budget is for each regional development agency for 1999–2000 and subsequent years (a) in cash terms and (b) on a per capita basis; and if he will break it down in each case by major funding source. [84420]

Mr. Meale: Allocations to Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) for 1999–2000 were set out in the reply which my right hon. Friend, the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning, gave to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Watts) on 21 April 1999, Official Report, columns 545–46. We will shortly be giving RDAs provisional allocations for the following two years to help them in the preparation of their corporate plans. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as this information is available.

Regeneration programmes make up 87 per cent. of the resources allocated to RDAs by Government, and variations in the allocations to individual RDAs reflect their regions' different regeneration funding needs. However, the per capita equivalents of the 1999–2000 allocations are as follows:

RDA	Population (latest figures as at June 1997)	1999–2000 Budget (cash) £ million	Per capita £
North East	2,594,364	121.198	46.7
North West	6,884,632	176.104	25.6
Yorkshire and the Humber	5,036,980	136.633	27.1
West Midlands	5,320,784	114.111	21.4
East Midlands	4,156,346	59.184	14.2
East of England	5,334,204	31.397	5.9
South West	4,875,973	60.138	12.3
South East	7,958,788	73.410	9.2
Total	42,162,071	772.175	18.3

The allocations are divided among different programmes as follows:

Programme	NE	NW	Y&H	WM	EM	E	SW	SE	Total
Land and Property	11.659	17.295	11.164	22.751	7.371	4.896	19.926	23.212	118.274
Derelict Land Grant	1.943	1.624	7.23	0.754	1.033	0.081	0.179	0.029	12.873
Single Regeneration Budget	91.58	137.48	102.18	75.93	36.78	14.59	21.68	37.49	517.71
Rural Development	2.605	1.169	3.075	1.716	3.081	2.825	6.023	1.639	22.133
Skills Development Fund	1.725	4.762	3.283	3.718	2.53	3.052	3.038	4.665	26.773

	121.198	176.104	136.633	114.111	59.184	31.397	60.138	73.41	772.175

London Underground

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what discussions he has had with Railtrack on their plans to take over part of London Underground. [83983]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. Officials have met Railtrack to discuss its proposals to integrate London Underground's sub-surface lines (Circle, District, Metropolitan, East London and Hammersmith and City) with the main line network, but there have been no discussions at Ministerial level.

Fuel-efficient Cars

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what efforts the Government are making to ensure adequate labelling of fuel-efficient cars. [83987]

Ms Glenda Jackson: New models of cars on sale are required to have a label affixed showing both fuel consumption information for that model, measured according to relevant official tests, and indicating the availability for inspection of the results of official tests of fuel consumption on all other new models of cars in the United Kingdom which have been subject to such tests, and which dealers are required to provide. Such information is contained in the Department's bi-annual publication "New Car Fuel Consumption Figures" which also contains information on CO_2 emissions.

A similar labelling scheme is also planned at EU level which will require labels which show CO_2 emissions to be placed on vehicles, posters in the showroom and the inclusion of this information in promotional literature to inform the consumer and influence purchasing decisions.

The Cleaner Vehicle Task Force is investigating the production of new labels showing environmental information. The Task Force has recommended that more work is needed on the feasibility of adopting an environmental rating system for vehicles to show comparative performance on several parameters including fuel efficiency. Research is under way on this subject and is expected to be completed by Spring 2000.

Aircraft Debris

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what regulations are in place to prevent (a) debris and (b) ice falling from aircraft; [84378]

(2) what discussions he has had in the past year with the CAA relating to (a) debris and (b) ice falling from aircraft over Hertfordshire; [84380]

(3) what steps he plans to take to improve aircraft safety relating to (a) debris and (b) ice falling from aircraft; [84375]

(4) what reports he has received about (a) debris and (b) ice falling from aircraft in the past year; and if he will make a statement; [84377]

(5) if he will meet representatives of the CAA to discuss the recent incidents of (a) debris and (b) ice falling from aircraft over Hertfordshire. [84379]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government and Civil Aviation Authority take seriously all occurrences of ice and debris falling from aircraft. The primary way to tackle the problem is to ensure that regulations on the safe manufacture and operation of aircraft are adhered to. There are many such regulations: for example, before aircraft can be entered on national registers they must meet the appropriate standards for design and construction of aircraft, including resistance to leakage of on-board water or toilet systems which is the main cause of the build up of ice on the exterior of aircraft.

The CAA is responsible for the safety regulation of aircraft registered in the UK and applies airworthiness requirements rigorously. They, together with the aviation industry have taken a number of specific, practical steps to reduce the occurrence of ice and debris falling. These steps include:

the introduction of manufacturers' modification kits to improve resistance to water leaks at servicing points enhanced maintenance requirements unannounced inspections by CAA Safety Regulation Group Surveyors checking airworthiness standards recording of occurrences and investigation by the Safety Regulation Group.

Incidents are rare in relation to the volume of air traffic. In the last twelve months, 24 incidents have been recorded of icefall and 16 of other falling objects; this level of occurrence has not risen in the last five years, despite significant increases in traffic over that period.

It is an offence under articles 48 and 56 of the Air Navigation (No 2) Order 1995 to drop or permit articles to be dropped from an aircraft so as to endanger persons or property. The CAA will investigate incidents reported to them and prosecute offenders if there is sufficient information to identify the aircraft involved. It is not always possible to confirm the precise origin of ice or debris, because of problems in establishing the precise timing of incidents, the trajectory of falling items and the possible number of aircraft in the area at the time.

Ministers have had no specific discussions with the CAA in the last year about incidents of debris or ice falling from aircraft over Hertfordshire. I am aware of the unfortunate incident recently in which a block of ice fell through the roof of a house in Hertfordshire and the CAA is investigating the incident.

Millennium Experience (Transport)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the current timetable for the opening of (a) the transport links to the Millennium Experience and (b) the exhibition itself. [83443]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The current timetable for the opening of the transport links to the Millennium Experience is as follows:

Link	Opening date
Jubilee Line Extension	The final phase (Stratford to Green Park) opens late Autumn 1999
Millennium Transit Bus Services (Charlton Station to Dome, and Greenwich Station to Dome)	Services commence December 1999
Millennium Express river service (Waterloo to Dome)	Service commences 1 January 2000
Greenwich Shuttle river service (Historic Greenwich to Dome)	Services commences 1 January 2000
Cycle/pedestrian links through Greenwich Peninsula	Facilities implemented by end December 1999
NMEC controlled park and ride sites	Sites become operational 1 January 2000

The Millennium Experience exhibition opens to the public on 1 January 2000.

Genetically Modified Crops

Mrs. Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many farms are involved in whole farm trials of genetically modified crops; and what is the total acreage given over to trials of such crops. [84279]

Mr. Meacher: At present 7 farms are involved in the farm-scale trials of genetically modified crops. Three are growing Spring oil seed rape with a total area of about 26 hectares and four forage maize with a total area of about 21 hectares.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what distance between a field of genetically modified crops and a field of non-genetically modified crops he has been advised will be necessary to ensure that cross-contamination does not occur. [84534]

Mr. Meacher: The distance depends on the crop. There is no possibility of cross-contamination by pollen unless the genetically modified (GM) crop produces pollen and the non-GM crop is both sexually compatible and flowering at the same time. It is not possible to guarantee that no cross-pollination will occur, even with very large separation distances although the amount of cross-pollination decreases rapidly with distance. The Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) has advised that the information from decades of experience with producing seeds to specific purity levels can be used to estimate the level of cross-pollination which is likely to occur between crops in adjacent fields at specific distances. This information is crop specific.

Motor Cyclists (Learners)

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to amend the licensing rules for learner motor cyclists. [84716]

Ms Glenda Jackson: My Department has today issued a Consultation Paper that proposes to replace the two year provisional motorcycle licence with arrangements that encourage all learner riders to be properly trained and tested within two years. These new arrangements would apply fairly to all learner riders, and should be simpler to understand and administer. Copies of the Paper have been placed in the House Library.

Beacon Council Scheme

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he intends to invite councils to apply for beacon status under the Beacon Council Scheme. [84732]

Ms Armstrong: We intend to publish tomorrow a brochure—The Beacon Council Scheme: How to Apply—which will invite councils to apply for beacon council status for the 1999–2000 programme. Copies of the brochure will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Parental Leave

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the gross cost to the Exchequer on an annual steady-state basis of paying parental leave at (a) full earnings replacement value, (b) 90 per cent. of earnings replacement value, (c) 50 per cent. of earnings replacement value and (d) 30 per cent. of earnings replacement value assuming the take-up of fathers is 50 per cent. and the take-up of mothers is 90 per cent.; [83806]

(2) what is his estimate of the gross cost to the Exchequer on an annual steady-state basis of paying parental leave at the rate of (a) £60 and (b) £100 a week assuming the take-up of fathers is (i) 10 per cent., (ii) 15 per cent., (iii) 20 per cent., (iv) 25 per cent. and (v) 30 per cent. and the take-up of mothers is (1) 30 per cent., (2) 40 per cent., (3) 50 per cent., (4) 60 per cent. and (5) 70 per cent. [83805]

Angela Eagle [holding answer 10 May 1999]: The information is in the following tables:

Gross cost to the Exchequer on an annual steady state basis of paying parental leave for thirteen weeks to employees who have a child under 5

£ million

Rate of earnings replacement	Mothers	Fathers
100 per cent.	830	2,610
90 per cent.	745	2,350
50 per cent.	415	1,305
30 per cent.	250	785

Note:

The take-up rate for fathers of 50 per cent. and mothers of 90 per cent., is assumed to be the same across the entire earnings distribution. Up to 415,000 fathers, earning on average £480 a week, and 315,000 mothers, earning on average £200 a week, would be entitled.

Pensions

Mr. Ivan Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish an analysis of the views received by his Department in response to "A new contract for welfare: Partnership in Pensions" (Cm 4179). [84730]

Mr. Timms: I have arranged for the analysis of the main comments we received to be placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Special Advisers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what dates Special Advisers from his Department travelled abroad on official business since 2 May 1997; which countries were visited on each occasion; and what were the names of the Special Advisers who travelled abroad on each occasion. [82252]

Mr. Byers: Since 2 May 1997 Special Advisers in my Department travelled overseas on official business on the following occasions:

Date
25–28 May	Japan
10–11 September	Washington DC
13 October	Brussels
12–13 November	Brussels
15–22 November	India and Australia
1998
11–18 January	China and Hong Kong
3–4 February	Paris
11 March	Strasbourg
6–7 May	Brussels
18–20 May	Geneva
22–24 June	Singapore
10–16 October	USA

All travel complied with the requirements of the 'Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code'.

Consultation Documents

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what has been the (a) shortest, (b) longest and (c) average period between the issuing of a consultation document by his Department and the deadline for responses since 2 May 1997; [83022]

(2) which consultation documents issued by his Department since 2 May 1997 have received (a) the most and (b) the fewest responses; and how many were received in each case. [83016]

Mr. Byers: This information is not held centrally and could not be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many consultation documents his Department has issued since 2 May 1997. [83023]

Mr. Byers: My Department has issued 116 consultation documents since 2 May 1997.

Energy Council

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the outcome of the Energy Council held in Brussels on 11 May; and if he will make a statement. [84067]

Mr. Battle: The Council considered several matters of interest to the United Kingdom.

On renewables, our strategy was singled out for praise. I called on the Commission to maintain momentum in the promotion of renewable energy by coming forward with a directive giving a framework for fair access of renewables to the internal electricity market. It should minimise distortions, ensure transparency, provide flexibility to distinguish between different kinds of renewables and promote cost-effectiveness and price competitiveness.

The Commission made two presentations on the internal energy market. The first concerned progress on implementation of the gas and electricity directives and the second harmonisation measures in electricity. I welcomed the implementation report stressing the importance of developing a real single market in energy (rather than 15 national markets) to enable consumers to reap the benefits that competition can bring in terms of lower prices and better service. I pointed out that agreement on the electricity and gas directives was only the first step. This must be followed by effective and timely implementation in all member states. I expressed disappointment that implementation had been delayed in some cases, urging those member states to put the necessary legal frameworks in place as a matter of urgency, emphasising the potential benefits to consumers. I also pointed out the importance of a level playing field where everyone plays by the rules; it was not acceptable for companies to compete in the markets of others member states while being protected from competition in their own.

I also welcomed the Commission's harmonisation report which highlighted the main areas where obstacles to the single market persist, such as arrangements for cross-border trading. I emphasised the need to get on with this work urgently so that we can have workable and effective arrangements by the time of the next Council.

I suggested the Council should regularly review progress towards achieving a single market against specific indicators, such as the number of new market entrants or prices. This will provide a measure of how far consumers are really being offered a competitive supply and benefiting from lower prices. The Presidency's summary supported this approach including the need to take the social dimension into account in liberalising the internal market in electricity. The Commission accordingly undertook to provide regular progress reports to Council.

The Energy Council held an orientation debate concerning possible elements for inclusion in a strategy on the integration of environmental aspects and sustainable development into energy policy. Ministers had a useful exchange of views which the Presidency summarised.

The Council also adopted conclusions aimed at reducing standby losses from electrical appliances which encourages an integrated approach—building a consensus and partnership with business on priorities and targets—developing a combination of voluntary and regulatory measures at Community level.

The Council received information from the Commission on the Energy Charter Treaty, the campaign for take-off on renewables and on progress towards minimising the impact of the millennium bug.

A full press release on the outcome of the Council can be found on the Council Secretariat web site at http://ue.eu.int/newsroom.

Post Offices

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current number of (a) Crown post offices and (b) sub-post offices; and what these numbers were one year and five years previously. [84056]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 13 May 1999]: I understand from the Post Office that the numbers of Crown offices and sub-post offices are as follows:

	Crown offices	Sub-post offices
End March 1994	800	18,982
End March 1995	699	18,908
End March 1996	653	18,761
End March 1997	606	18,645
End March 1998	601	18,407
End March 1999	600	18,175

DEFENCE

Brunei (Jungle Training)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the jungle training exercise in Brunei carried out between 1 April 1997 and 31 March 1998. [72791]

Mr. Doug Henderson: This exercise was a sub-element of exercise Ocean Wave, which took place in the Gulf, Far East and Asian Pacific regions between 13 January and 28 August 1997 as stated on 26 February 1999, Official Report, column 471. The cost of the jungle training exercise was £572,000, excluding the cost of spares and ammunition consumed during the exercise, and also excluding transport costs, as the unit were already deployed in the area as part of exercise Ocean Wave.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who is responsible for reviewing the legality of the actions of the Ministry of Defence Police. [83249]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Ministry of Defence Police derive their constabulary powers from the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987. The MOD Police are therefore answerable to the law through the courts. In common with other UK police forces, MOD Police are subject to comprehensive disciplinary procedures; these are overseen by the independent Police Complaints Authority where complaints by members of the public are involved.

WEU Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the agenda for the WEU Council of 10 May. [83815]

Mr. George Robertson: The Agenda for the WEU Council of the 10 May was as follows:

Adoption of Agenda

Europe's security and defence in the light of the entry into force of the Amsterdam treaty and of the Washington summit.

Approval of the draft decision sheet.

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the (a) nature and (b) number of sorties undertaken to date by the Yugoslav Air Force over Kosovo. [83964]

Mr. George Robertson: Figures are not readily available for sorties by the Yugoslav Air Force over Kosovo. However, it is assessed that approximately 180 sorties have been flown in Serbia and Montenegro during the first 49 days of the NATO bombing campaign, an average of four per day. The majority of these flights are believed to be communications and logistic support helicopter flights, whilst just under half comprise fighter and fighter bomber sorties.

Research

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the findings of research commissioned by his Department from universities and research institutes are required to be reviewed by his Department before publication is allowed. [84209]

Mr. Spellar: MOD's prior consent to publish the findings of research commissioned directly from universities and research institutes is needed only when, exceptionally, MOD notifies the research author that national security interests may be involved.

Where research is carried out by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, DERA, the Agency would seek the agreement of the customer, MOD or other party, before any publication.

Radiation Exposure

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many former (a) Chatham and (b) other dockyard workers have received compensation due to possible radiation exposure through the no fault scheme. [84072]

Mr. Spellar: No former Chatham or other dockyard workers have so far been awarded compensation for alleged exposure to radiation through the Compensation Scheme for Radiation Linked Diseases. Sixty cases (of which forty-two relate to former dockyard workers) are at various stages of investigation.

HMS Dreadnought

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what month of what year HMS Dreadnought was last in commission and at sea. [84301]

Mr. Spellar: Our records indicate that HMS Dreadnought was last in commission and at sea in September 1981.

Skynet Satellites

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made to the (a) course and (b) location of Skynet satellites since 1 December; and if he will make a statement. [84312]

Mr. Spellar: None.

Efficiency Programmes

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department expects to be able to make available to the House of Commons Defence Committee the list of measures scored as efficiency savings under the efficiency programmes of (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–01 and (d) 2001–02. [83583]

Mr. George Robertson: My Department is replying shortly to the request of the House of Commons Defence Committee for further information on efficiency.

RAF Coverall Contract

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to reply to the letter of 15 January from the hon. Member for Tiverton and Honiton concerning John Heathcoat and Co. Ltd., and the RAF Coverall contract. [84381]

Mr. Spellar: I have written to the hon. Member today.

Balkans (UK Forces)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of the deployment of UK forces in the Balkans since 18 April. [83984]

Mr. George Robertson: As at the end of April, £37 million of additional expenditure has fallen to my Department as a direct consequence of the UK's military response to the Kosovo crisis. This figure does not include the costs of replenishing stocks of expended ordnance or the costs of the UK's ongoing contribution to SFOR in Bosnia.

Territorial Army

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are in place to fund locums when general medical practitioners who are officers in the TA are required to serve. [84124]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Reserve Forces (Call-out and Recall) (Financial Assistance) Regulations 1997 (SI 1997/309) set out a scheme for providing financial assistance to reservists and employers who suffer financial loss as a result of the call-out or recall of individuals for permanent service in the armed forces. A claim for financial assistance in respect of the net additional costs of employing a locum doctor can be made under this scheme.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Counterfeit Offences (Yugoslav Nationals)

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia who have entered the United Kingdom en route to North America are being held for the offences of (a) possession of a false instrument contrary to section 3 of the Forgery and Counterfeiting Act 1981 and (b) attempting to obtain services by deception contrary to section 1 of the Criminal Attempts Act 1981. [83800]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could only be obtained through examination of individual case records at disproportionate cost. In any event, it would be impossible to ascertain precisely how many of those convicted were citizens of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia because the nationality of those holding falsified travel documents is essentially in doubt.

Prison incidents

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for (i) HMP Wolds and (ii) HMP Buckley Hall the number of incidents that have occurred during each of the last three financial years of the respective contracts in respect of (a) assaults on staff, (b) assaults by prisoners on other prisoners, (c) self harm, (d) class A drug finds, (e) other drug finds, (f) items smuggled into the prison, (g) delayed request replies, (h) failure to use agreed reporting procedures, (i) failure to achieve 95 per cent. occupancy of employment places, (j) key/lock compromises, (k) attempted escapes, (l) temporary release failures and (m) recapture and surrender. [83919]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is given in the table. The information requested about Buckley Hall on items smuggled into prison, failure to use agreed reporting procedures and failure to achieve 95 per cent. occupancy of employment places is not available because there is no contractual obligation for such information to be collected. The figures requested regarding recapture and surrender are not available because prisoners may surrender to another prison.

Private Prisons

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 28 April 1999, Official Report, column 162, on private prisons, what measures are being taken by the Prison Service to improve performance against the contract at (a) HMP Lowdham Grange and (b) HMP Parc. [83914]

Mr. George Howarth: The performance of both prisons has steadily improved since they opened and their present performance is regarded as satisfactory. The performance of the prisons is subject to contract management by the contractor and by the Prison Service through monitoring by the appointed controller of each prison, the area manager and the contracts and competition group of Prison Service headquarters.

Women Immigrants (Sex Industry)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department has taken against international crime organisations which have been involved in the smuggling of women immigrants into the United Kingdom to work in the sex industry. [83913]

Mr. Straw: The National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) and Immigration Service are committed to the development and dissemination of the intelligence needed to maximise disruption of these criminal enterprises and to secure arrest in as many cases as possible. During the past 12 months, a number of successful operations have been jointly undertaken targeting the racketeers which have resulted in the arrest and conviction of those involved. In addition, profiling and increased awareness have led to the interception of several groups at ports of arrival and to tighter controls over the issue of visas at British missions abroad. Trafficking in human beings is high on the agenda of the European Union; the G8; and the United Nations. My Department is represented on all the relevant working groups.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women are electronically tagged by the police in England and Wales. [83909]

Mr. George Howarth: The electronic monitoring of offenders is performed by private sector contractors working to Home Office guidelines. On 5 May, 2,139 men and 219 women were being electronically monitored under a number of schemes.

Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female sentenced prisoners were over the age of 70 years on 30 April. [83911]

Mr. George Howarth: Provisional information for 30 April 1999 shows that there were 120 sentenced males and 3 sentenced females aged over 70 years in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many whole-time equivalent staff were committed to the processing of asylum applications at the Immigration and Nationality Directorate on 1 April (a) 1994, (b) 1995, (c) 1996, (d) 1997, (e) 1998 and (f) 1999. [83620]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 10 May 1999]: The Home Office Annual Report 1997 gives the following numbers for asylum determination staff in AA-SEO grades, excluding travel documents, appeals support management and policy staff in the years up to April 1997:

	Number
Calendar year
1994 outturn	412
1995 outturn	426
Financial year
1996–97 estimated outturn	514

More recent comparisons are very difficult because of the re-organisation of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) since December 1998. Asylum applications were previously handled in a dedicated Asylum Directorate; they are not dealt with in integrated teams which also deal with a variety of other immigration casework.

Figures for 1997–98 have not yet been published, but the figures relating to the former Asylum Directorate show 451 staff in the AA to SEO grades. The new Integrated Casework Directorate currently has 236 members of staff who are trained to deal with asylum applications; they are supported by a further 239 staff members, who also provide support on other immigration casework.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average number of (a) callers, (b) calls and (c) calls answered per day to the telephone caller unit in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in (i) March and (ii) April. [83951]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Figures for calls made during normal working hours in March and April were as follows:

	Number
March
(a) Average number of callers per day	5,000
(b) Average number of calls per day	42,627
(c) Average number of calls answered per day	1,637
April
(a) Average number of callers per day	4,380
(b) Average number of calls per day	30,151
(c) Average number of calls answered per day	1,883

Note:

Many calls are repeat calls and, therefore, these statistics must be approached with caution

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the unit cost of caseworking in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate in (a) each of the last six months for which figures are available and (b) May 1997. [83950]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The direct cost of a standard unit of caseworking is routinely monitored under the terms of the contract with Siemens Business Services. Those costs, which exclude some overheads, were:

Month	Unit cost (£)
May 1997	45.16
October 1998	33.19
November 1998	40.44
December 1998	78.00
January 1999	71.57
February 1999	62.58
March 1999	50.57

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of providing each £1 worth of support for asylum applicants (a) in receipt of income support following an application for asylum at a port of entry and (b) in receipt of support from a local authority following an in-country asylum application. [83961]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is not available in the form requested.

However, with regard to Income Support, the available information is given in the table:

Income Support processing costs 1998–99[1]

Costs	£
Unit cost of processing asylum seeker income support claim	17.90
Annual cost of maintaining an average income support claim	3.66
Total[2]	21.56

[1] The information provided is for Income Support processing cost only, and does not include the processing costs for Housing Benefit or Council Tax Benefit.

[2] This is the total annual cost in the year that the claim is processed; the total annual cost for a claim in the years after it has been processed will be £3.66.

Note:

In 1998–99, central Government paid grants of up to £165 per adult asylum seeker per week; up to £230 per family (or £240 for families accommodated in inner London prior to 23 November 1998) and up to £400 per unaccompanied child aged under 16 or £200 per unaccompanied child aged 16 or 17. Local authorities could include administration costs within these weekly unit costs, but no information is held centrally on the extent of those administration costs.

Hillsborough Disaster

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide an index and catalogue for the evidence placed in the House of Lords Library which was provided to the inquiry into the Hillsborough Disaster. [83925]

Mr. Boateng: Any cataloguing of the material it holds is a matter for the Library itself. My reply to the question from my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 20 April 1999, Official Report, column 486 listed the categories of evidence placed in the Library. The South Yorkshire Police included an index, which listed the officer's name and the individual reference number for each statement, with the police statements themselves.

Passport Losses

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints of passports being (a) mislaid and (b) lost have been received in each month since November 1998. [84032]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Complaints received by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate are not recorded centrally on the basis of subject matter. Information kept centrally is in respect of the number of compensation claims dealt with as a result of maladministration, the majority of which will have arisen as a result of lost documents. This is a lagging indicator as there is often a considerable gap between an incident and the claim for compensation arising from it. The figures for each month since November 1998 are set out:

	Number
November	7
December	10
January	12
February	5
March	5
April	1

Education Classes (Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons in England and Wales provide education facilities for teaching reading and writing to inmates; and if he will make a statement. [84397]

Mr. George Howarth: All prisons are required to deliver the Prison Service core curriculum which includes basic educational skills (reading, writing and numbers), English for speakers of other languages, life and social skills and information technology skills.

Prostitutes' Cards

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish his proposals to deal with the problem of prostitutes' cards in public telephone boxes. [84647]

Mr. Boateng: Our consultation paper, "New Measures to Control Prostitutes' Cards in Phone Boxes" will be published on Tuesday 18 May. This is a local problem which needs a local approach. The consultation paper will look at options for changing the law to enable those who put cards in telephone boxes to be dealt with more effectively on a local basis. Copies of the consultation paper will also be placed in the Library on Tuesday.

Fire Brigades

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what efforts are being made by his Department to encourage a speedy conclusion to the pay dispute between the Fire Brigades Union and the National Joint Council for Local Authority Fire Brigades; and to what extent a deal will have to take account of the Best Value regime. [84383]

Mr. George Howarth: The current dispute between the local authority employers and the Fire Brigades Union is not over pay. It is over modest proposals by the employers for changes to firefighters' conditions of service. These negotiations are not directly a matter for the Government but are for resolution between the employers and the union in the National Joint Council for Local Authorities Fire Brigades.

The Audit Commission in its report in 1995, "In the Line of Fire", endorsed the need for changes in firefighters' conditions of service to remove provisions which were inflexible, outdated and unjustified. The Government fully support proposals for change which while protecting the legitimate interests of firefighters will, at the same time, deliver Best Value and lead to more modern and efficient public services.

Fire Safety Legislation

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to consolidate current fire safety legislation. [84384]

Mr. George Howarth: We intend to bring forward general legislation to consolidate and rationalise fire safety law along the lines proposed in our consultation document "Fire Safety Legislation for the Future", when parliamentary time permits.

PRIME MINISTER

Ethnic Albanians (Rape)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what evidence he has received, other than from the accounts of Kosovar refugees, of the scale of rape by Serbs of ethnic Albanians. [83176]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 4 May 1999]: By the very nature of the situation in Kosovo, accounts by refugees remain the main source of information about human rights abuses including rape in Kosovo. Certain aid agencies are able to undertake medical checks, when requested by refugees, to corroborate their claims, though many women are understandably reluctant to submit themselves to these. But the consistency of the hundreds of reports by refugees leaving Kosovo in different camps in Macedonia and Albania makes their evidence compelling and credible. We are making every effort to corroborate all reports of atrocities in Kosovo.

Pre-Schools (Closures)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer to my hon. Friend the Member for North-East Cambridgeshire (Mr. Moss) on 28 April 1999, Official Report, column 341, what assessment he has made of the Pre-school Learning Alliance's estimate of the number of closures of pre-school play groups and nursery schools; and what estimate he has made of the change in the total number of pre-schools over the past 12 months. [83234]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 4 May 1999]: Earlier this year, 150 Early Years Development local plans were approved to guarantee a free nursery place for all four-year-olds whose parents want one and for the first time will deliver good quality childcare places across the country. The Government have made available an additional £390 million over three years to provide an additional 190,000 places for three-year-olds, almost doubling the participation rate of those taking a free place to 66 per cent. by April 2002. In addition, we intend to provide 430,000 additional childcare places in the UK by 2003, at a cost of £470 million.

We are aware of the Pre-School Alliance's (PLA) claims about the number of registered playgroups. They do not fully accord with official figures from annual surveys but DfEE officials will be discussing the figures with the PLA to ensure their concerns are properly understood. The Under-Secretary with responsibility for employment and equal opportunities, my hon. Friend the Member for Barking (Ms Hodge) has made available a further £500,000, in addition to the £500,000 announced in May 1998, to support specifically pre-schools at risk of closing and to help sustain good quality pre-schools and playgroups. She also announced an independent review of our early education and child-care policies.

European Central Bank (Salaries)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to require the publication of the (i) salary and

(ii) terms and conditions of employment of (a) the President and (b) the Executive Board Members of the European Central Bank. [83559]

The Prime Minister: As the President of the ECB made clear at a hearing of the European Parliament on 15 July 1998, the system is such that the salary of a member of the Executive Board of the ECB is about 10 per cent. higher than the highest Director-General's salary at the European Commission. The salary of the Vice-President is 20 per cent. higher and his salary as President is 40 per cent. higher than the salary of an Executive Director.

Arms Blockade (KLA)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what instructions have been issued to (a) Foreign Office and (b) Ministry of Defence personnel concerning implementation of UNSCR 1160 in respect of enforcing an arms blockade on the KLA; what steps he has taken to ensure that they are compatible with the changes made, pursuant to the Legg report on Sierra Leone; and if he will make a statement. [83401]

The Prime Minister: The United Nations Security Council resolution 1160, which was adopted in March 1998, was circulated within the FCO, the MOD and to relevant posts overseas. Officials involved in work on Kosovo are aware of the scope of the arms embargo against the FRY, including the fact that it covers the sale or supply of arms to the KLA.

NATO Bombing (Yugoslavia)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the effect of the use of graphite weapons to attack the electrical system in Yugoslavia, on (a) hospitals without auxiliary generators, (b) the nuclear installation at Vinca and (c) chemical factories. [83780]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 May 1999]: The UK armed forces do not hold such munitions. NATO has repeatedly made clear that the greatest of care is taken to minimise the risk of civilian casualties and damage to buildings that are not used in support of Milosevic's military machine. The need to avoid dangerous emissions from nuclear and chemical plants is taken fully into account in making decisions about targets.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with CBD Porton Down the basis on which the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons lists EMPTA as a compound which also has commercial uses. [82946]

The Prime Minister: EMPTA is covered by Schedule 2 to the Chemical Weapons Convention, which the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons oversees, not because it has commercial uses, but on the grounds that it belongs to a large family of chemicals that are of potential use as precursors in the production of Schedule 1 chemicals—those posing the highest risk—such as the nerve agent, VX.

I can also confirm that the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency at Porton Down is currently not aware of legitimate commercial uses for EMPTA.

Computer Compliance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he is taking to ensure (a) 9.9.99 and (b) 29.2.00 computer compliance. [84100]

The Prime Minister: Government Departments and agencies and key parts of the national infrastructure have comprehensive plans in place for addressing the millennium date change and a range of other dates which could give rise to particular problems such as 9.9.99 and 29.2.00. Action 2000, which the Government set up, has also been advising businesses, particularly small and medium sized enterprises, of the importance and methods of checking that systems will continue to operate on these dates and of setting in place contingency plans.

European Commission (Reform)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on progress made at the meeting with Mr. Romano Prodi on 14 April, with reference to reform of the EU. [84095]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 7 May 1999, Official Report, columns 477.

RAF (Iraq)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on activities by the RAF over Iraq since the end of March. [84173]

The Prime Minister: RAF patrols of the no fly zones remain a vital humanitarian mission in support of UN Security Council Resolution 688 which condemned Saddam Hussein's repression of the Kurds in the North and Sh'ia Muslims in the South. Since the end of March, our aircraft have been shot at or otherwise threatened some 100 times. We have, therefore, been forced to take appropriate defensive measures against Iraqi facilities that pose a threat to coalition forces.

Kosovo

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 10 May 1999, Official Report, column 68–69, if his reference to the safe return of refugees refers to their place of origin within Kosovo. [84526]

The Prime Minister: It is our clear intention that all the refugees should return to and live in Kosovo in conditions of security, guaranteed by an international military force. We want all those who wish to go back to their former homes to be able to do so.

President Clinton

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the dates of his visits to the United States of America to meet President Clinton since 1 May 1997. [84344]

The Prime Minister: I have visited the United States on four occasions since 1 May 1997:

20–23 June 1997: G7 meeting in Denver and UN General Assembly Session in New York

4–7 February 1998: Bilateral (Washington)

21 September 1998: UN General Assembly meeting (New York)

21–25 April 1999: NATO (Washington) + Bilateral (Chicago).

On each of these visits I met President Clinton.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many times President Clinton has visited Britain to meet him since 1 May 1997; and on what dates. [84313]

The Prime Minister: President Clinton has visited the UK three times since 1 May 1997:

29 May 1997: Bilateral (London)

15–18 May 1998: Birmingham G8 Summit and London EU/US Summit

3 September 1998 Belfast and Omagh

On each occasion I met President Clinton.

HEALTH

Dental Services (North-east Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to promote and safeguard NHS dentistry in North East Lancashire; and if he will make a statement. [80048]

Mr. Denham: East Lancashire Health Authority is responsible for monitoring the oral health and general dental services (GDS) in their area. Health authorities concerned about GDS provision in their area have been able to ask my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health to use his powers under Section 56 of the National Health Service Act 1977, to approve the funding of proposals submitted under the Investing in Dentistry initiative (IID), which began in September 1997, and ended this April. To date, my right hon. Friend has approved three East Lancashire Health Authority IID bids in Burnley, Nelson and Accrington, which should provide 6,400 patients from the area with the opportunity of registering with an NHS dentist.

East Lancashire Health Authority could also, if appropriate, seek the approval of my right hon. Friend, under Section 56, to employ a salaried dentist(s), or consider submitting an expression of interest under the personal dental services (PDS) scheme, which we announced on 1 January 1998. PDS is designed to help improve access to NHS dentistry, by encouraging health authorities to work with dentists to develop a variety of new arrangements to improve access to NHS dentistry. The strategy for NHS dentistry, which will be published in due course, will look at further ways of improving access to NHS dentistry.

Millennium Compliance

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS organisations which the NHS Director of Planning has assessed as failing to prepare properly for millennium computer compliance. [82820]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Executive receives regular progress reports from over 500 NHS organisations and publishes all the returns on the Internet (www.imc.exec.nhs.uk/2000). The returns for the period ended 31 March 1999 will be published later this month.

The NHS Executive has announced that, in line with the common approach being adopted by members of the National Infrastructure Forum of Action 2000, it will list organisations and their state of readiness for Year 2000 based on the returns for the period ended 31 May 1999 at the forthcoming meeting on 13 July 1999.

Disabled People (Terminal Care)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data he has collated on disabled persons who are not dying receiving terminal care. [83376]

Ms Jowell: Palliative care is the active total care of patients whose disease no longer responds to curative treatment, focusing on the quality of life and integrating the physical, psychological, spiritual and social aspects of care. Terminal care is an important part of palliative care and usually refers to the care of patients during their last few days, weeks or months, from a point at which it becomes clear that the patient is in a state of progressive decline.

Pain therapy in palliative/terminal care must be tailored for each patient. Most patients with advanced disease will require pharmacological therapy. Strong opioids, such as diamorphine and morphine, are prescribed for severe pain and must be administered regularly to control pain and prevent pain recurring.

Medical treatment given to a patient, disabled or otherwise, with the primary purpose of inducing death is illegal. Anyone alleged to have undertaken such action would be open to a charge of murder or manslaughter.

Information on such cases is not available centrally.

Dental Nurses

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the benefits of introducing statutory registration of dental nurses. [83397]

Mr. Denham: In May 1998 the General Dental Council published a consultation document in which they suggested that, if statutory registration was introduced, dental nurses could extend the support they provide to dentists, provided the nurses had satisfactorily completed a period of approved, structured training. We await the outcome of these consultations with interest.

NHS Scientific and Technical Staff

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to place all National Health Service scientific and technical staff, together with support grades, within a pay review body; and if he will make a statement. [83727]

Mr. Denham: On 15 February 1999, the Health Departments published proposals for modernising the National Health Service Pay System in "Agenda for Change". This included the possibility of moving some highly qualified health professionals into the remit of the Nurses, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine Review Body.

Discussions have recently opened between representatives of NHS trade unions and management representatives from NHS employers and the four Health Departments on the basis of our proposals for modernising the NHS pay system. We will develop the proposed changes in a spirit of partnership.

It is too early to comment on proposals for specific staff groups.

Buprenorphine

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 4 May 1999, Official Report, columns 357–58, when doctors will be able to prescribe and dispense Buprenorphine to patients using the FP10 prescribing form. [83786]

Mr. Denham: General practitioners are able to prescribe buprenorphine using the FP10 prescription form, against which pharmacists are able to dispense the drug.

Consultancy Posts

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of hospital consultancy posts; and if he will make a statement. [83785]

Mr. Denham: It is for National Health Service trusts, who are accountable for the quality of services they provide, to determine how many consultants they need.

Hospital Drugs

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what ways information on drugs dispensed in hospitals and their cost is published. [83895]

Mr. Denham: Information on medicines dispensed in hospitals is not collected centrally. Total expenditure on medicines purchased by National Health Service trusts is shown in the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme Report to Parliament. The total expenditure on medicines purchased by individual NHS trusts is available from a number of commercial organisations of which The Health Service Database, published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, is an example.

Rural Dispensing

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the arrangements whereby doctors in rural areas may dispense medicines; and if he will make a statement. [84074]

Mr. Denham: At their request, I am planning to meet the Chairmen of the General Practitioners' Committee of the British Medical Association and the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee to discuss their proposals for changes to the rules governing National Health Service dispensing in rural areas by both doctors and pharmacists.

Health Action Zones (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health action zones for the Greater London area. [84401]

Mr. Denham: There are four Health Action Zones in London: Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham; City and East London; Camden and Islington; and Brent (part of Brent and Harrow Health Authority).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Modernisation

47. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the President of the Council what progress has been made in reforming parliamentary procedures relating to the legislative process. [83456]

Mrs. Beckett: The House approved the Modernisation Committee's first report on the legislative process in November 1997. Since then we have published five Bills in draft form for pre-legislative scrutiny by a variety of Committees. Fuller explanatory notes have been published with Government Bills. A Special Standing Committee has been used for the first time on a major bill. Experiments have been conducted with programming Bills during their passage through the House. I am firmly committed to improving the quality of legislation and am looking at further ways of doing so.

European Commissioners

48. Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to improve contacts between European Commissioners and hon. Members. [83458]

Mr. Tipping: The House will know that Commissioners visit Westminster and sometimes give evidence to Select Committees here. Equally, when our Select Committees visit Brussels they frequently meet one or more Commissioners. While I have put forward proposals to give Members greater opportunities for informing themselves on EU matters generally, I have no specific plans confined to Commissioners.

Westminster Hall Committee

49. Mr. Dismore: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the introduction of sittings in Westminster Hall. [83459]

Mrs. Beckett: I will put before the House next Monday proposals for an experiment for sittings in Westminster Hall on uncontentious business up to three days a week, starting in the autumn.

Office Costs Allowance

50. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she has to ensure that the Office Costs Allowance reflects actual office costs. [83460]

Mrs. Beckett: The level of the Office Costs Allowance is reviewed regularly by the independent Senior Salaries Review Body (SSRB). The current maximum reflects the recommendations in its 1996 Report, as uprated by the RPI index. The SSRB will be assessing Office Costs Allowance again in its review of Parliamentary pay and allowances next year.

Spouses Travel Concessions

51. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the President of the Council what plans she has to make hon. Members' spouses travel concessions available to the partners of unmarried hon. Members. [83461]

Mr. Tipping: We are considering such a proposition and hope to announce the conclusions shortly.

Timetabling Legislation

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Council what proposals she has for timetabling all Bills; and if she will make a statement. [83453]

Mr. Tipping: The Modernisation Committee recommended programming of Bills in its report on the legislative process in July 1997. Since then programme motions have been agreed by the House in relation to 12 Bills. I have no immediate plans for time-tabling all Bills.

Palace of Westminster (Admission Charges)

Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what recent representations she has received concerning the circumstances under which British citizens could be required to pay for access to visit the Palace of Westminster. [83457]

Mrs. Roe: Since the publication of the Committee's Report "Proposal to re-open the Line of Route during the Summer Adjournment" on 26 April, I have received no representations from hon. Members.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Millennium Compliance

41. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the President of the Council what progress is being made on the state of readiness of the national infrastructure in preparation for the millennium date change. [83450]

42. Mr. Borrow: To ask the President of the Council if she will make a statement on the progress made by key sectors of UK infrastructure in their preparations for the millennium bug. [83451]

Mrs. Beckett: Reports at the National Infrastructure Forum on 21 April showed that significant progress has been made by the major sectors of the infrastructure in working towards the goal of 'no material disruption' to public services since the last meeting in January. Full details are available on the Action 2000 website with summaries appearing in advertisements in Sunday newspapers from 9 May. All key sectors of the infrastructure have independent assessment programmes in place which are due for completion by July when they will be made public, and will give the UK one of the most objective and comprehensive pictures of readiness in the world.

45. Mr. Wyatt: To ask the President of the Council how many Government departments have had external auditors to test their millennium compliance systems; and if she will make a statement. [83454]

Mr. Tipping: Of the 90 departmental and agency returns in March, 84—or 93 per cent.—have been, or currently are being independently assessed. A further six have plans for independent assessment. Of those that have been or are being assessed, 63 per cent. were assessed by bodies outside of their department.

Privy Councillors

46. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Council if she will publish the Privy Council oath. [83455]

Mrs. Beckett: I have already done so, in a reply I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 28 July 1998, Official Report, columns 181–82.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Producers' Costs

Mr. Beard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the producers' costs of (a) fruit, (b) vegetables, (c) wheat and (d) rice when grown (i) by modern agricultural methods and (ii) organically. [83890]

Mr. Morley: Direct comparisons are difficult because of natural variations in yield between crops. However, general information on costs under the two different systems is contained respectively in the Farm Management Pocket Book 1999, published by Wye

CHADWYCK-HEALEY Vol. 331 cols. WA273 - 456 10 - 21 May 1999

College, for costs of conventional production, and the Organic Farm Management Handbook, published by University of Wales, Aberystwyth, and Elm Farm Research Centre for organic production costs. Copies of these publications are available from the organisations concerned.

WALES

National Assembly

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost of setting up the National Assembly of Wales (a) for its first year of operation and (b) for subsequent years. [82658]

Mr. Michael [holding answer 5 May 1999]: We are continuing to plan within the overall estimate of £15 million to £20 million for the annual additional running costs of the Assembly which was contained within the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum to the Government of Wales Bill and which will be balanced by savings in the budgets of Welsh quangos. This estimate covers not only the pay and allowances of Assembly Members but also the costs of providing for the accommodation and IT requirements of the Assembly and the costs of additional support staff.

Rural Bypasses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for rural bypasses, with particular reference to north-south routes; and if he will make a statement. [84293]

Mr. Hain: The trunk road programme, including plans for rural bypasses, is detailed in "Driving Wales Forward", published in July 1998. This confirmed that we intend to bring forward significant improvements in north-south public transport services complemented by steady and relatively small-scale improvements to the trunk road network. The promised corridor study encompassing the A470 from Brecon to Llandudno has commenced, and extends beyond the A470 to include the A483 and the A487 in North Wales.

The Institute of Welsh Affairs' report "Uniting the Nation" published earlier this month will be taken into account in this study. We await the outcome of the study before considering future strategy for development of roads and other transport modes in these areas.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly. Rural bypasses which are not part of the trunk road network are the responsibility of the relevant local highways authorities.

Anti-social Behaviour

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of the joint police authorities and local authorities strategy to tackle disorder by youths and other anti-social behaviour. [84299]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: As required by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, unitary authorities and the police in Wales, working in partnership with other key agencies, have developed crime and disorder reduction strategies. These strategies have set objectives and targets with action plans covering the next three years to address local issues and concerns as identified by comprehensive crime and disorder audits and public consultation.

Several audits revealed that people are more concerned with disorder and anti-social behaviour than with crime; problems presented by young people, and drugs and alcohol misuse, were the issues most frequently raised. This is reflected in the strategies, most of which have tackling youth crime and disorder as one of the top priorities, together with the need to work closely with Youth Offending Teams and Drug and Alcohol Action Teams. Some of the solutions proposed include the provision of more facilities for young people and involving them more in community affairs, and many areas are establishing local crime action teams to address specific issues, including youth crime.

Health Funding

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce the allocation of funds for 1999–2000 to the health authorities in Wales. [84382]

Mr. Michael: This week. Health authorities have been given an indication, in confidence, of the likely level of grant so that their comments could be taken into account in the final decision, which is about to be announced. In future this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Tourism

11. Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his assessment of the impact of the Budget on the tourism industry. [83419]

Janet Anderson: The 1999 Budget continues to lock in long-term economic stability, leaving behind the boom and bust of the late 1980s and early 1990s. It delivers a better deal for business and enterprise by introducing further measures to increase investment, promote innovation, strengthen competition and improve skills. It is good for businesses of all types, including those in the tourism industry.

Child Actors

13. Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with his counterparts in the DfEE about the regulations which apply to child actors. [83421]

Mr. Alan Howarth: None with the Department for Education and Employment. My officials have had discussions with Department of Health officials currently reviewing the Children (Performances) Regulations 1968.

Libraries

14. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to improve the quality of service to library users. [83422]

25. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to improve the quality of information technology services to library users. [83433]

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has required all library authorities to produce annual library plans, setting out their strategy for developing the range and quality of services. We have also made nearly £300 million available to help to ensure that libraries benefit from the Information Age. Libraries are also eligible to bid for the £470 million set aside from the Capital Modernisation Fund for IT learning centres.

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the current arrangements for funding public libraries. [83722]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The public library service is delivered through local authorities, which also provide the bulk of their funding. We believe that this remains the best way of ensuring that services are tailored to meet the needs of their users. In addition, Government are making available £270 million through the National Lottery New Opportunities Fund to develop a Public Libraries IT Network which will link public libraries to the National Grid for Learning by 2002. This funding includes streams to help develop network infrastructure, create digital content for the Network and train library staff in IT skills.

Museums (Free Entry)

15. Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures he is taking to assess whether free entry for children to all national museums will deliver value for money. [83423]

Mr. Chris Smith: We will be measuring visitor numbers at the national museums and galleries and their branches, and at the non-national museums that have introduced free access for children. The Museum of Science and Industry in Manchester, which launched free admission for children early in January, has seen visits rise by over 80 per cent.

Harmonised Rating Scheme

16. Mr. Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what benefits he expects the harmonised rating scheme for hotels and guesthouses to bring to tourists. [83424]

Janet Anderson: The consistency of ratings made under the new schemes by the AA, RAC and new English Tourism Council will be much easier to understand than the different ratings we have now and will therefore reflect better what tourists want to know. The ratings will place more emphasis on quality and so provide greater incentive for improved standards. There should be a greater incentive also on providers of accommodation to participate in the schemes, thus increasing the proportion of accommodation which is inspected and rated for use by tourists. These and other benefits should quickly begin to be found when the schemes are launched this September.

Girls' Football

17. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Football Association about plans to encourage girls to play football. [83425]

Mr. Banks: I met senior representatives of The Football Association on 9 March, principally to discuss The FA's plans to stage a Women's Football Awareness Week in June. Given the significant schools element in The FA's proposals I am arranging for The FA representatives to have detailed discussions with myself and Education Ministers shortly. I fully support the excellent work which The FA is undertaking in this important area, and wish it every success.

Musical Instrument Tuition

18. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what direct support will be given to schools musical instrument tuition from the youth music trust and the standards fund. [83426]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The independent National Foundation for Youth Music, formerly known as the Youth Music Trust, opened in April and will work with the DfEE's £150 million Standards Fund measures to increase opportunities for school children to access instrumental music-making. The National Foundation for Youth Music's policies will complement the Standards Fund measures, drawing on £30 million of Arts Council Lottery funds, by seeking to find additional ways in which all children, in schools and outside, will have access to quality music-making opportunities. Further announcements about the National Foundation for Youth Music's policies will be made shortly.

Tourism (Wiltshire)

19. Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment he has made of the effect of the working time directive on the tourism industry in Wiltshire. [83427]

Janet Anderson: The Government believe that the Working Time Regulations are business friendly in all parts of the UK. They strike a balance between the need for effective legislation, providing fair minimum standards for workers and ensuring that businesses are not subject to unnecessary burdens.

Parks (Policing)

20. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will discuss with the head of the Royal Parks Constabulary and the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis the limitation of park controllers' powers in extremis. [83428]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have no plans to discuss changing the powers of the Royal Parks Constabulary with the Commissioner of the Metropolitan police and the Chief Officer of the Royal Parks Police.

Officers of the Royal Parks Constabulary have the same powers, privileges and immunities as any police constable within the Metropolitan police district. These powers are adequate to discharge their responsibilities to the Secretary of State, under the Royal Parks Regulations Act 1872.

Cricket Grounds

21. Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to improve safety and spectator comfort at cricket grounds. [83429]

Mr. Banks: The Government are determined that spectators of all sports should be able to enjoy the action in safety and comfort. Last month, I announced new roles for both Sport England and the Football Licensing Authority in our drive to modernise sports grounds across the country. Sport England is to fund a £10 million improvement scheme over the next four years to help top rugby league and rugby union teams, and the major cricket counties to improve safety at their grounds. In addition, the Football Licensing Authority will be reconstituted as the Sports Grounds Safety Authority and will have an advisory role on safety issues associated with all sports which use outdoor sports stadia, including cricket. I am sure my hon. Friend will agree that these are welcome developments.

National Year of Reading

22. Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what contribution the New Opportunities Fund will make to the national year of reading. [83430]

Mr. Chris Smith: The New Opportunities Fund will be issuing its first grants under the out of school hours learning initiative in July. As the National Year of Reading ends in August, the New Opportunities Fund will not be making a contribution to this programme.

Television Licences

23. Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when he expects to receive the report of the viewers panel on concessionary television licences; and if he will make a statement. [83431]

Mr. Chris Smith: The BBC funding review panel, whose terms of reference include a consideration of the structure of the concessionary licence scheme and possible alternatives, will report to me by the end of July this year.

British Tourist Authority

24. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received on the work of the British Tourist Authority. [83432]

Janet Anderson: My Department regularly receives representations—mostly complimentary in nature—on the work of the British Tourist Authority.

Arts Funding

26. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the allocation of arts funding to and within the English regions. [83434]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The arts in the English regions benefit from a variety of funding sources; Government, via the Arts Council of England and the regional arts board; local authorities; the European Union; and business sponsorship. Each is indispensable, and we could not take away one without endangering the whole.

Rugby Grounds

27. Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to improve safety and spectator comfort at rugby grounds. [83435]

Mr. Banks: The Government are determined that spectators of all sports should be able to enjoy the action in safety and comfort. Last month, I announced new roles for both Sport England and the Football Licensing Authority in our drive to modernise sports grounds across the country. Sport England is to fund a £10 million improvement scheme over the next four years to help top rugby league and rugby union teams, and the major cricket counties to improve safety at their grounds. In addition, the Football Licensing Authority will be reconstituted as the Sports Grounds Safety Authority and will have an advisory role on safety issues associated with all sports which use outdoor sports stadia, including rugby. I am sure my hon. Friend will agree that these are welcome developments.

Green Spaces Initiative

28. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when grants will be awarded under the Green Spaces Initiative funded by the New Opportunities Fund. [83436]

Mr. Chris Smith: The New Opportunities Fund expects to invite applications for grants under the Green Spaces and Sustainable Communities initiative by January 2000 and aims to make awards shortly after.

Millennium Dome

35. Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has held with transport providers on the provision of low-cost services for visitors to the millennium experience from the south-west. [83444]

36. Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to encourage people from the north-west to visit the millennium experience. [83445]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company working with the travel industry, including rail and coach operators, aims to deliver packages combining travel and Dome entry, which will give visitors value for money and encourage all those who wish to visit the Dome to do so. Following the company's announcement of ticket prices on 18 March, the travel industry has already confirmed a range of attractive and competitive packages. For example, National Express has announced return coach travel and entry to the Dome for just £29.99 from anywhere in England, Scotland or Wales.

Millennium Dome (Economic Impact)

37. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate the economic impact of the millennium dome on the north-west of England. [83446]

Janet Anderson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the right hon. Member for Bromley and Chislehurst (Mr. Forth) on 29 March 1999, Official Report, column 517.

Millennium Dome (Visitors)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations he has received on forecasts of numbers visiting the dome during the first year. [83440]

Janet Anderson: The Millennium Experience is planned as a one-year event running from 1 January 2000 to 31 December 2000. The New Millennium Experience Company estimates that it will attract 12 million visitors during the year of operation. I have received no representations about this figure.

Sport

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport on what date he proposes to announce his strategy for sport. [84222]

Mr. Banks [holding answer 14 May 1999]: We are currently consulting with a range of interested parties and I expect the sports strategy to be published in the autumn.

TREASURY

Open Government

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many applications for information he received under the Open Government: Code of Practice on Access to Government Information in the last parliamentary session; and how many of these applications were granted. [83106]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 10 May 1999]: For monitoring purposes this information is collected on a calendar year basis. Information for 1997 was published last year in the "Open Government: Code of Practice on Access to Government Information 1997 Report". The table shows the information for 1998 for the Chancellor's Departments.

Department	Number of applications	Number granted
HM Treasury	12	12

European Central Bank

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the UK subscription to the capital of the European Central Bank (a) in total and (b) as paid-up capital. [83943]

Ms Hewitt: In accordance with the formula for the subscription of the ECB's capital set out in Article 29 of the Statute of the ESCB (Protocol No.3 to the EC Treaty), the UK's share in the subscribed capital of the ECB is 734,055,000 euro.

In accordance with Article 48 of the Statute of the ESCB, the ECB General Council decided in September 1998 that the national central banks of non-participating Member States should pay up 50 per cent. of their subscription to the ECB's capital. The Bank of England was therefore required to pay up 36,702,750 euro to cover its share in the subscribed capital of the ECB. This amount is settled by offset against the proceeds of the liquidation of the EMI.

Treasury Management Board

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the remuneration is of the new non-executive director of the Treasury Management Board. [84305]

Ms Hewitt: The non-executive director of the Treasury Management Board will receive remuneration of £5,000 per annum.

Euro

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the change in the value of the euro against sterling since January. [84084]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's objective is for a stable and competitive pound in the medium term, consistent with the objective of price stability. The Government believe sound fundamentals are what matters for exchange rate stability. The Government's new macroeconomic framework is aimed at achieving sustained growth, sound public finances and low inflation, which should also promote exchange rate stability.

Duty-free Sales

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on recent developments in the negotiations on duty free sales. [84300]

Dawn Primarolo: Recent discussions on intra-EU duty free sales have not secured agreement on extending the current arrangements beyond 30 June 1999. The Government have never underestimated the difficulty of achieving this as it requires unanimity amongst member states. Ministers take this issue very seriously and the UK will continue to explore with our European partners options for the best way ahead.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his forecast for the average (a) sterling-euro, (b) sterling-dollar and (c) sterling-yen exchange rate in 1999. [84289]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 May 1999]: As stated on page 127 of the Budget 1999 Red Book in footnote 2:

"The forecast is based on the assumption that the exchange rate moves in line with an uncovered interest parity condition, consistent with the interest rates underlying the economic forecast."

Breast Cancer

Ms Perham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown by age range of the incidence of breast cancer in women in England in each of the last five years. [84258]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Linda Perham, dated 17 May 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the incidence of breast cancer in women in england in the last five years.

The numbers of newly diagnosed cases of breast cancer and incidence rates per 100,000 females in England, 1990–1994 (the last five years for which data are available), are shown in the attached tables. The data for 1990–1992 were published in the ONS Cancer statistics—registrations series MB1 and most recently updated in the CD-ROM, Cancer 1971–1997. Provisional numbers and rates of new cases of breast cancer diagnosed in 1993–1994 were published in the ONS Monitor Estimates of newly diagnosed cases of cancer, England and Wales, 199'–1997 (MB1 98/2).

Air Passenger Duty

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will exempt disabled passengers from air passenger duty on flights within the United Kingdom. [84408]

Mrs. Roche: I have no plans to do so.

Gold Prices

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the change in the value of gold in sterling since January. [84085]

Ms Hewitt: The price of gold (in sterling) on 4 January 1999 was £173.538 an ounce and on 13 May 1999 was £171.4383 an ounce.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his forecast for the average gold price in (a) 1999, (b) 2000 and (c) 2001. [84286]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 May 1999]: The price of gold is determined by the market. The Government do not forecast it.

Gold Reserves

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which currencies, in which proportions, will be bought with the proceeds of the recently announced sale of part of the United Kingdom's gold reserves. [84086]

Ms Hewitt: The proceeds of the gold sales will be invested in foreign currencies broadly following the current holding of the net reserves.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason he has decided to sell almost 60 per cent. of the United Kingdom's gold reserves; and if he will make a statement. [84087]

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the long-term objectives of his proposals to reduce the Bank of England's gold reserves. [84287]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 May 1999]: The aim of this prudent restructuring of the UK's reserve holdings, involving the auctioning of gold, is to achieve a better balance in the portfolio by increasing the proportion held in currency.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the value (a) in sterling and (b) as a percentage of total foreign reserves, of the gold reserves held in March by each of the G8 countries. [84083]

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amounts of gold reserves held by (a) each of the EU countries, (b) the Government of the US and (c) the Government of Japan. [84310]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 May 1999]: Figures on the gold holdings of other countries can be found in the IMF's International Financial Statistics.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of national gold reserves he plans to sell before the end of 1999. [84284]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 May 1999]: It is intended to sell 125 tonnes of gold in the current financial year, which represents less than a fifth of the UK's official gold holdings. Three of the five auctions will be held before the end of the calendar year.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice he was given by the Governor of the Bank of England regarding his proposed sale of national gold reserves. [84281]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 May 1999]: The Bank of England provided technical advice on the portfolio risks associated with gold and other assets, and on the various possible techniques for selling gold.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what deadline he has set by which his proposed sales of national gold reserves will be completed. [84283]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 May 1999]: Over the medium term the Government are planning to reduce their gold holdings to around 300 tonnes. Detailed plans for auctions in 2000–01 and later years will be announced nearer the time.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has held with finance ministers in other countries who have declared their intentions to sell national gold reserves. [84288]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 May 1999]: The Chancellor regularly meets his ministerial colleagues from other countries to discuss a wide range of issues.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 18 May 1999

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Financial Services Sector

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Attorney-General what proportion of criminal cases relating to the financial services sector referred to (a) the CPS and (b) the SFO resulted in charges being brought in each of the last three years. [84089]

The Attorney-General: Neither the Serious Fraud Office nor the Crown Prosecution Service records case information by reference to the economic sector in which the activity giving rise to consideration of charges takes place. Accordingly, in order to answer the question, it would be necessary to undertake an individual review of all cases, which could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Attorney-General what proportion of prosecutions alleging offences relating to the financial services sector brought by (a) the CPS and (b) the SFO resulted in convictions in each of the last three years. [84090]

The Attorney-General: Neither the Serious Fraud Office nor the Crown Prosecution Service records case information by reference to the economic sector in which the activity giving rise to prosecutions and convictions takes place. Accordingly, in order to answer the question, it would be necessary to undertake an individual review of all cases, which could be done only at disproportionate cost.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Scottish Members (Office Costs)

Mr. Forth: To ask the President of the Council if she will review the Parliamentary Office and Secretarial Allowances of Scottish hon. Members following the transfer of responsibilities to the Scottish Parliament. [83957]

Mrs. Beckett: No.

Millennium Compliance

Mr. Levitt: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to her answer on 20 April 1999, Official Report, column 480, when she will publish the latest results of the market research tracking public perception of the millennium bug. [84842]

Mrs. Beckett: I have today placed copies of the Executive Summaries of the February and March tracking research in the Libraries of the House.

The results are broadly consistent with the results for January, showing that concern amongst the public on this issue is still low. The results also show that those questioned are looking beyond the impact of the Bug on computers and are now considering the wider effects.

Official Functions

Mr. Hayes: To ask the President of the Council what official functions she held on 13 April; and if she will list the persons who attended. [84668]

Mrs. Beckett: In the morning, I attended a Privy Council Meeting; later in the day, I had meetings with officials in my Department. In the evening, I hosted an official function for Parliamentary Private Secretaries. This was one of three functions I have recently hosted as Leader of the House to build up contacts with, and thank, people, such as select committee chairmen, who shoulder a specific and extra burden of work in the House.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Aviation (Near Misses)

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many investigations have been held in the past year into reports of near misses by aircraft flying over the UK; how many were related to aircraft using the Clacton sector air corridor; whether an investigation is being made into reports of an incident on 7 May; what action he will take to prevent further incidents; and if he will make a statement. [84035]

Ms Glenda Jackson: All reported airprox incidents are fully investigated by the independent UK Airprox Board (UKAB). Information on the location of individual airprox incidents is not held in the form requested. In 1998, UKAB investigated 202 airprox incidents, slightly lower than at any time in the past decade, despite significant increases in traffic over that period. Up to 7 May 1999 there have been 66 incidents reported to the UKAB.

The Civil Aviation Authority's Safety Regulation Group (SRG) is carrying out an investigation into the airprox incident which occurred on 6 May over Essex. Once completed, the SRG report will be passed to the UKAB for its review and assessment of the incident. UKAB will publish its findings. This will include an assessment of the degree of collision risk and any safety recommendations UKAB thinks it appropriate to make.

Landfill Tax Credits

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much has been awarded to environmental bodies since January 1997 under the landfill tax credit scheme; and what percentage of this total is a voluntary donation from landfill operators and not refunded through landfill tax credits. [84214]

Mr. Meale: According to Entrust, £162.4 million was awarded to environmental bodies as at 13 May 1999 and 10 per cent. of this total is a voluntary donation from landfill operators and not refunded through the landfill tax credits.

Auditors

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what qualitative reviews are required by the Audit Commission of the work of district auditors; and how many such reviews were carried out in the case of the District Auditor's investigation of Westminster City Council. [84105]

Ms Armstrong: The Commission operates a quality control review process to monitor the performance of auditors and to ensure they comply with its Code of Audit Practice, which is issued under section 4(1) of the Audit Commission Act 1998 and approved by Parliament, and with professional auditing standards. The Commission reviewed the work of the District Auditor's investigation of Westminster City Council designated sales on a number of occasions, most recently in April 1996.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what have been the fee levels, in pounds per hour, charged by each of the auditors appointed by the Audit Commission over the period from July 1989 to April 1999. [84103]

Ms Armstrong: The standard composite fee rates for principal authorities set by the Commission since 1989 are as follows:

£ per hour

	London	South-East	Elsewhere
Local Government
November 1988	36.00	31.50	31.00

District Auditor's Inquiry (Westminster)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what tendering procedures were employed by the District Auditor in the case of Westminster City Council in choosing his legal representative. [84104]

Ms Armstrong: This is a matter for the independent appointed auditor.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much money has been levied from local authorities by the Audit Commission up to 30 April to finance the Divisional Court and the Appeal Court costs of Westminster Council's appointed auditor, his support staff and legal team. [84116]

Ms Armstrong: The Audit Commission is required to balance income with expenditure taking one year with another. The Audit Commission has met, in relation to the Westminster designated sales inquiry, costs of £2,997,000 incurred by the auditor in respect of his costs and those of his solicitor and barrister.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the amount which the Audit Commission will need to levy from local authorities to reimburse the legal costs of the six persons cleared by the Divisional Court and the Court of Appeal of liability for the surcharge by the Westminster Council's Auditor. [84117]

Ms Armstrong: My right hon. Friend has made no such estimate. Audit fees are a matter for the independent Audit Commission.

European Nuclear Installations

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements have been made with the police and local authorities for dealing with an overseas nuclear accident over the millennium period. [84255]

Mr. Meale: Arrangements for dealing with the consequences for the UK of an overseas nuclear accident are set out in the National Response Plan, copies of which are held in the House Library. These can be activated at any time.

There is therefore no need for arrangements to be made with any of the relevant bodies who would be involved in the response to such an accident over the millennium period.

Local Elections

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures his Department is taking in order to increase voter interest in local elections. [84393]

Mr. Meale: Our modernisation agenda for local government, as set out in the White Paper, "Modern Local Government—In Touch with the People", published in July 1998, includes a range of measures designed to reinvigorate local democracy and to modernise local electoral arrangements. Where this programme requires legislation, it will be implemented when parliamentary time allows.

Aggregate Supply Report

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place the London Economics report on the cost and benefits of aggregate supply in the Library. [84498]

Mr. Raynsford: A pre-publication copy of the Report was placed in the House of Commons Library on Monday 17 May. A copy of the printed report will be provided as soon as it is available.

Planes (Fuel)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many incidents have been reported to him involving planes entering United Kingdom air space with insufficient fuel to meet safety standards in the past two years; and if he will make a statement. [84487]

Ms Glenda Jackson: In the past two years the CAA has received 12 reports of aircraft arriving at UK airports with fuel levels below the prescribed minimum.

The international standard for minimum fuel levels is contained in Annex 6 to the Chicago Convention. This requires that an aircraft should arrive at its destination airport with enough fuel to make an approach to land, carry out a missed approach, fly to an alternate airport, hold for 30 minutes and carry out the subsequent approach and landing. The aircraft should also carry a contingency reserve specified by the relevant national aviation authority. The breaching of minimum fuel levels does not immediately place an aircraft in danger.

Train Operating Companies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the public subsidy given to each of the train operating companies for the most recent year for which figures are available. [84656]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The latest available public subsidy for each train operating company are contained in OPRAF's 1997–98 Annual Report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Integrated Transport

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received from the Local Government Association in respect of possible future legislation to implement the White Paper on Integrated Transport. [84232]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have received a number of representations from the Local Government Association. We aim to introduce the legislation to implement further elements of the integrated transport strategy as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what targets have been set for improving energy efficiency in his Department's buildings at (a) Eland House, (b) Ashdown House and Great Minster House. [84234]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The targets are to reduce energy emissions by:

(a) 13% in Eland House and Ashdown House by March 2005 compared to June 1997, and

(b) 3% in Great Minster House by March 2000 compared to March 1999.

Eland House was occupied in 1997 and Ashdown House in 1998. Both buildings were fitted out to high standards of environmental design to maximise energy efficiency.

Great Minster House was occupied in 1995. This building was fitted out to a more conventional style and the controls for energy management are not as sophisticated as for Eland and Ashdown House.

Elections

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what research his Department has undertaken on correlation between voter turnout in local elections and the frequency of elections. [84543]

Mr. Meale: This year we have commissioned wide-ranging research to examine the factors affecting turnout in local elections. The expected results will include an updating of the Department's report, "Explaining election turnout: a secondary analysis of local election statistics", published in 1994.

Concessionary Fares (London)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received concerning improvements to the London concessionary fares scheme; and if he will make a statement. [84545]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government have received representations from Members of Parliament, the Association of London Government, the Transport Committee for London, organisations representing Freedom Pass Holders and some individual Freedom Pass Holders.

I would refer the hon. Member to my statement to the House on 4 May 1999, Official Report, column 771, in which I explained that we have given careful consideration to a number of proposals for improving the scheme. We will be introducing amendments in the Lords which will update the scheme and help maintain its stability. For the statutory reserve scheme the start and finish times will be brought up to date and the arrangements for determining costs will be clarified. We also plan to give the boroughs powers to set up a statutory joint committee dealing with concessionary fares, which will have the option of taking decisions on the basis of qualified majority voting.

Air Pollution

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to implement the recommendations of the KPMG report on the setting of fees for local air pollution control. [84700]

Mr. Meale: KPMG is currently undertaking an investigation of local air pollution control regime costs in England and Wales commissioned by the Welsh Office, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The final report of the study, which will be completed in July, will inform our decisions on charging levels for 2000–2001 and any structural changes in 2001–2002 in England. Local authority and trade associations will be consulted on all proposed changes.

The future level of local air pollution control charges in Wales will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the changes in local air pollution control fees for each year since 1997–98. [84702]

Mr. Meale: The local air pollution control fees and charges for England and Wales since 1997–98 are as set out:

Table A

Type of charge	Type of process	Charges for: 1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
Application Fee	Standard (those not listed below)	1,040	1,065	1,280
	Waste oil burning appliance/s under 0.4MW	100	100	120

The information relating to Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Environment Protection Agency.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to announce the fee level for local air pollution control for 1999–2000. [84701]

Mr. Meale: Details for the 1999–2000 England and Wales charging scheme for local air pollution control under Part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 are set out in my written answer dated 22 February 1999, Official Report, columns 62–64.

The information relating to Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Environment Protection Agency.

Federal Express

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many responses to his Department's consultation document on Federal Express's application for fifth freedom rights from Prestwick and Stansted airports have been received; and of these how many were (a) in favour of granting those rights unilaterally, (b) opposed to the application and (c) in favour if UK carriers were given reciprocal access to the US market. [84386]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The responses to the consultation exercise are currently being evaluated so we are not yet in a position to give the information requested. I will write to my hon. Friend once this evaluation is completed.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the formal amendment to the Channel Tunnel Concession Agreement setting out the terms on which this is extended to a total of 99 years. [84794]

Mr. Prescott: I have today placed in the Libraries of both Houses copies of Cm 4350, "The Channel Fixed Link: Amendment No 3 to Concession Agreement", setting out the text of the formal Amendment, as signed by the four parties to the concession agreement of 1986, under which the duration is extended until the 99th anniversary of the date on which that agreement came into operation.

Boundary Commission (England)

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects to appoint a new Member of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England to succeed David Macklin CBE. [84844]

Ms Armstrong: I have today appointed Robin Gray to serve as a Member of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England. Mr. Gray is also a Member of the Local Government Commission for England. His appointment, reflecting the Government's commitment to foster improved co-ordination between the Commissions, will help co-ordinate work undertaken by them on electoral matters.

Major Projects

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will issue proposals for improving the processing of major projects of national significance through the planning system. [84753]

Mr. Caborn: I have today issued a consultation paper on streamlining the processing of major infrastructure projects and other major projects of national significance. Comments are invited by 30 July 1999.

The purpose of the proposals is to achieve significant improvements in the time taken to handle major projects, whilst continuing to ensure that adequate opportunity is given for people to have a say, test the evidence and reach a sound decision. To that end, the paper proposes:

preparation of statements to set the national policy framework for projects before they are considered in the planning system and to reduce unnecessary debate at a subsequent public inquiry;

supplementing existing mechanisms for Parliamentary involvement with new Parliamentary procedures for approving projects in principle before consideration of detailed issues at inquiry, with provision to avoid discussing at inquiry matters settled by Parliament's approval in principle; and improved public inquiry procedures for major projects. These are in addition to those which I announced on 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 762, for streamlining planning inquiries and other methods of handling appeals generally in response to a Question from my hon. Friend the Member for Eccles (Mr. Stewart). The consultation paper nevertheless invites views on the potential for applying the proposals for streamlining inquiries into major projects to a wider range of projects.

The package of proposals published today is designed to deliver significant savings by streamlining the procedures for handling major projects and speeding the decision-making process. This will reduce delay, costs and uncertainty for all involved and secure the benefits of projects which are approved more quickly.

A copy of the consultation paper has been placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Human Rights Act 1998

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to bring into force the main provisions of the Human Rights Act 1998; and if he will make a statement. [84722]

Mr. Straw: We plan to bring the remaining provisions of the Human Rights Act 1998 into force on Monday 2 October 2000. Some provisions—principally those of section 19 (relating to statements by Ministers of the Crown about the compatibility of Bills with the Convention rights)—are already in force.

Stephen Lawrence Inquiry

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the membership of the steering group which he will chair to oversee the implementation of his action plan to take forward the recommendations of the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry; and if he will make a statement. [84883]

Mr. Straw: Details of membership of the Steering Group are as follows:

Members representing official bodies

The right hon. Jack Straw MP Home Secretary

Paul Boateng MP
Minister of State, Home Office

Sir Herman Ouseley
Chairman
Commission for Racial Equality

Bob Purkiss
Commission for Racial Equality

Mark Addison
Chief Executive
Crown Prosecution Service

Dan Crompton
Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary

Charles Clarke
Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for School Standards
Department for Education and Employment

Denis O'Connor
Assistant Commissioner
Metropolitan Police

Tony Burden
Chairman of the Association of Chief Police Officers
Race and Community Relations Committee

Fred Broughton
Chairman
The Police Federation

Peter Gammon
Chairman
The Police Superintendents' Association

Ruth Henig
Chair
Association of Police Authorities

Robyn Williams
National Black Police Association

Independent Members of the Steering Group

Maqsood Ahmad
Ros Howells OBE
Anita Sharda
Beverley Thompson
Doreen Lawrence
Neville Lawrence
Judy Clements
Keith Kerr
Usha Sood
Gurbus Singh
Mark Blake.

Membership reflects the commitment given in the Action Plan that involvement and consultation of minority ethnic people, as well as the police service and other relevant organisations, will be one of the principles which will guide all the work to implement the plan.

The Steering Group is meeting for the first time today. The purpose of the meeting is to agree terms of reference, to consider what progress has been made so far in implementing the Action Plan, and to identify areas for particular attention at future meetings. It is expected that the Group will meet 5 or 6 times a year.

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers involved in media relations were employed within his Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84204]

Mr. Straw: Detailed information on the numbers of permanent civil servants employed in Departmental Press Offices during the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in a memorandum dated 16 June 1998 to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report on 'The Government Information and Communication Service' in July 1998. A copy is in the Library.

The numbers in post at 1 May 1999 were 17 plus three trainees.

Special Advisers: In this Department, there are two special advisers; one (Ed Owen) has significant contact with the media but neither are specifically employed in media relations.

Coroners Offices

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those coroners' offices which provide an out of hours service which enables the authorisation of removal of bodies out of England at a weekend when the death occurs during or immediately before that weekend. [84689]

Mr. George Howarth: The coroner service is a local service. Details of the arrangements available locally, including those for the purposes of authorising the removal of bodies abroad, are not held centrally.

Coroners

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 April 1999, Official Report, column 75, concerning coroners, how many currently employed coroners do not have one of the specified qualifications. [84715]

Mr. George Howarth: Under the Coroners Act 1988, no person is eligible to be appointed as a coroner unless one of the prescribed qualifications is held. Records of qualifications held by coroners are a matter for the local authority which appointed them.

Home Detention Curfews

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 27 April 1999, Official Report, columns 110–11, on home detention curfews, how many of the curfewees who were released on curfew and who were charged with an offence committed during the period of curfew and thereby made subject to breach action under section 38(2) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, were (a) returned to custody and (b) remained on home detention curfew. [84071]

Mr. George Howarth: The available information shows that all of the 14 curfewees referred to in the reply given on 27 April 1999, Official Report, columns 110–11, remained on curfew until the end of their home detention curfew period. They would remain liable to breach action after that date. However, information about cases dealt with after the expiry of home detention curfew is not held centrally.

The Government recognise the need to expedite breach action in such cases. It is for that reason that Section 103 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 was implemented on 1 January 1999. This will mean that a curfewee whose original offence was committed on or after 1 January 1999 and who commits an offence during the home detention curfew period will be liable to immediate recall by the Secretary of State.

Police

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers, per force in total, there were in England and Wales on 31 March; how many there were in each case per head of population; and if he will make a statement. [84367]

Mr. Boateng: The information is not yet available. Once all the data from police forces has been received and validated, the statistics will be placed in the Library. I expect this information to be available in early June, on the basis of last year's timetable.

Cleveland Police

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 May 1999, Official Report, column 468, on the Cleveland Police, if the meeting of the Cleveland Police Authority on 8 February discussed the 999 call from the house of the former Deputy Chief Constable on 20 January. [84259]

Mr. Boateng: Yes. The issue was dealt with as a confidential matter in private session in accordance with Section 100 of the Local Government Act 1972. It would, therefore, not be appropriate to provide any further details.

Lancet Inquiry

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 May 1999, Official Report, column 317, on the cost of the Lancet inquiry, if the salaries of the eight suspended officers mentioned in his answer of 20 April 1999, Official Report, column 484, were included in his breakdown of costs. [84249]

Mr. Boateng: The salaries of the eight suspended officers were not included in the breakdown of costs, as these referred solely to the salary costs of Cleveland Officers working on the Lancet Inquiry and not those officers who are the subject of the investigation.

The salary costs of the eight suspended officers total £282,703 per annum inclusive of allowances and costs. In accordance with Force policy, those salaries are carried by the particular District to which the officers were posted when they were suspended; in this case all eight officers were posted to Middlesbrough District.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 May 1999, Official Report, column 317, on the Lancet Inquiry, if he will list the total cost of the salaries of the 11 officers, and the total number of days each one has worked on the Lancet Inquiry. [84260]

Mr. Boateng: One of the 11 officers of the Force's Organised Crime Group has tendered his intention to retire from the Police Service with effect from 23 May 1999. The remaining 10 officers' salaries total £326,351, inclusive of allowances and costs. The information requested on the number of days each one has worked on the Lancet Inquiry is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost to Cleveland Constabulary.

Corpus Juris Report

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of the Government's evidence to the House of Lords European Communities Committee's inquiry into the corpus juris report. [84070]

Kate Hoey: Copies of the evidence have now been placed in the Library.

Homophobic Crimes

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of recorded homophobic crimes for each police force in each year since 1996. [84069]

Mr. Boateng: This information is not collected centrally, although Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary have encouraged police forces to implement locally, recording systems for homophobic incidents and crime.

In the Home Office, recorded crime statistics incidents of homophobic crime could appear in the categories of, for example, violence against the person and criminal damage, but there is no way of identifying those offences which have a homophobic element.

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to reduce the number of homophobic attacks. [84068]

Mr. Boateng: The crime reduction partnerships established under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 are required to carry out audits and publish strategies to deal with crime in their area. This includes strategies to deal with crimes against the gay and lesbian community.

The police service is also taking steps to improve communication between forces and gay and lesbian communities both to promote better understanding within the service of the impact of such incidents on the community and to provide a better service. The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) published in 1996 a good practice guide for dealing with homophobic incidents. Recording and monitoring systems are being improved in order to enable forces to deal appropriately with such incidents.

Agreement has recently been reached by ACPO that the definition of a homophobic incident should be simplified to bring it into line with the more simplified definition of a racist incident recommended by the Macpherson Inquiry. This will be promulgated throughout the service.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Biotechnology

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the programme and itinerary for the visits of the biotechnology clusters team to centres in the United Kingdom and overseas. [83314]

Mr. Battle [holding answer 5 May 1999]: As announced on 16 April, the team of experts who will accompany Lord Sainsbury on a fact-finding mission to examine the growth of biotechnology clusters will undertake a programme of visits in the UK and the United States as follows:

April 1999	May 1999	June 1999
Cambridge	Seattle	Boston
Guildford	Central Scotland	—
Oxford		—

In addition, officials are undertaking visits and consultations in Manchester, York, London, Newcastle, Norwich and Cardiff and, where appropriate, will be compiling data on other centres.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what ethical and environmental guidance exists for the Export Credits Guarantee Department on applications for support. [83976]

Mr. Wilson: ECGD abides by the government's policy on the environment and human rights as outlined in Foreign Office Mission Statement.

If there are environmental or ethical concerns which could impact adversely on a project for which ECGD has been asked to provide support, as part of its risk assessment process, ECGD looks closely at how these concerns can be mitigated or resolved before deciding whether to provide cover. ECGD is currently strengthening its environmental screening process and will publish further guidance for its customers later in the year. In relation to defence transactions, ECGD support is available only when export licences have been granted.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate his Department has made of the number of people likely to be displaced as a result of the proposed construction of the Ilisu Dam. [83977]

Mr. Wilson: The advice we have so far received is that between 12,000 to 15,000 people may be displaced as a result of the construction of the Ilisu Power Project. We will be commissioning independent advice on this and related matters.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what amount of credit is being requested by Balfour Beattie from the Export Credits Guarantee Department to underwrite its share of the cost of the Ilisu Dam. [83978]

Mr. Wilson: While the final amount of UK supply has not yet been finalised (and is a figure that at this stage is normally treated as commercial-in-confidence and not disclosed), I am advised that the current estimate of loan value is between US$200m and US$250m. No decision on ECGD cover has yet been taken.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the conditions which have been applied to the Her Majesty's Government's granting of export credit insurance for the Ilisu Dam. [84531]

Mr. Wilson: No decision on ECGD cover has been taken and so it is not possible to make any statement at this time.

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if approval of UK export credit guarantees for the Ilisu Dam in Turkey will be conditional on the project complying with (a) the World Bank's guidelines and (b) the UN Convention on the Laws of Non-Navigational Uses of International Watercourses International Waterways. [84228]

Mr. Wilson: We have yet to take a decision on whether ECGD support should be made available for this project. We require to be satisfied on a number of issues, including the implications for the local population and issues concerning downstream waterflows and neighbouring states.

Fashion Industry

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many trade fairs organised by his Department in the past three years have included representatives of the British fashion industry; and in which countries these were held. [84413]

Mr. Wilson: My Department provides support, primarily through grants to firms in groups, to exhibit at trade fairs and similar events abroad. The number of such events in the clothing, footwear and fashion industry in each of the past three years is shown in the table. In the UK, my Department has also supported twice annually the participation of up-and-coming British designers at London Fashion Week.

Mirror Group

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to publish the Inspector's report into the Mirror Group flotation. [84336]

Mr. Byers: The inspectors have yet to report to me.

E-envoy

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what salary the Government are proposing for the e-Envoy. [84349]

Mr. Byers: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) on 6 May 1999, Official Report, column 449.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research his Department has conducted into the feasibility of adding a limited amount of alcohol to petrol as a method of reducing net carbon dioxide emissions from motor vehicles. [84318]

Mr. Battle: The Department of Trade and Industry co-funded the following paper study, which was published in 1996, with the Department of Transport, where alcohol-based products were studied for their potential use as alternative fuels in the UK to reduce carbon dioxide and other emissions:

'Alternative Road Transport Fuels—A Preliminary Life-cycle Study for the UK' in two volumes, Energy Technology Support Unit (ISBN 0–11–5-5154–10–8 AND 0–11–515411–6).

Two other paper studies, wholly or partially funded by the Government, have also been published. These are:

'Alternative Fuels for Road Vehicles' by M. L. Poulton, Transport Research Laboratory 1994 (ISBN 1–85312–301–3/ISBN 56252–225–6);

'Automotive Fuels Survey 1996', a study in three volumes by the International Energy Authority.

Electricity Industry

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the rate of progress in the reform of the electricity pool. [84641]

Mr. Battle: The White Paper on 'Fuel Sources for Power Generation (Cm 4071)' published in October 1998 confirmed the Government's intention to proceed with the replacement of the Electricity Pool with new trading arrangements. Work to develop the details of the new market arrangements is being led by DTI and Offer with strong industry and consumer involvement. I expect this development work to be complete in July. The final date for the full implementation of the new market will be announced in the light of that work.

Power Stations

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy on the regional location of power stations. [84642]

Mr. Battle: It is for developers to put forward proposals for new power generation capacity. If there are system benefits to be gained from a particular proposal then these will be taken into account by my right hon.

Friend the Secretary of State, together with all other relevant energy policy, planning, environmental and local considerations.

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers involved in media relations were employed within his Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84200]

Mr. Byers: Detailed information on the number of permanent civil servants employed in Departmental Press Offices during the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in a memorandum to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report on the 'The Government Information and Communication Service (HC770)' in July 1998, which is in the Library of the House. The number in post on 1 May 1999 was 21.

Special Advisers in this department have ad hoc contact with the media but none are specifically employed in media relations.

DEFENCE

Atomic Weapons Establishment Sites

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 April 1999, Official Report, column 9, regarding Atomic Weapons Establishment sites, if he will list the three consortia who are interested in bidding for the contract; and if he will place in the Library copies of the unclassified documents which have so far been issued or made public during the selection procedure. [84348]

Mr. Spellar: The three consortia who have declared an interest in bidding are:

AWE Management Ltd, comprising Serco Defence Support, British Nuclear Fuels plc and the Lockheed Martin Corporation;

AWE 2100, comprising Babcock Facilities Management, Scientific Application International Corporation and W. S. Atkins plc, and Hunting BRAE DERA, comprising Hunting Engineering, Brown and Root, AEA Technology, and DERA.

A copy of any unclassified documents which have been issued or made public during the selection process to date will be placed in the Library of the House.

RBL 755 Cluster Bomb

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his oral answer of 10 May 1999, Official Report, column 11, on weapons systems equipment, what type of targets are selected for the specific use by the RAF of the RBL 755 cluster bomb; and how many have been used in Kosovo to date. [84350]

Mr. George Robertson: Up to 16 May, a total of 423 RBL 755 bombs had been dropped by the RAF in support of Operation Allied Force. This weapon is particularly effective against Serb forces deployed in the field in Kosovo, and targets have included main battle tanks, armoured personnel carriers, other military vehicles, artillery, field headquarters and troop concentrations. It is not designed to be used as a runway cratering weapon, and has not been used to attack runways; nor is it designed to impede damage repair.

HMS Invincible

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Invincible is due to be refitted; and where the refit will take place. [84507]

Mr. Spellar: HMS Invincible's refit is programmed to start in late 2001 at Rosyth Royal Dockyard.

HMS Illustrious

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to date of the refit of HMS Illustrious. [84521]

Mr. Spellar: The cost to date of HMS Illustrious's maintenance period is about £14.5 million.

Royal Fleet Auxiliaries

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what refits are planned for RFA Sir Geraint and RFA Sir Percivale. [84523]

Mr. Spellar: Refits are planned for both Sir Geraint and Sir Percivale in 2001.

Mr. Patrick Finucane

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 April 1999, Official Report, columns 373–74, concerning the murder of Mr. Patrick Finucane, if he will make a statement on Mr. John Stevens' recent statements concerning investigation of the murder of Mr. Patrick Finucane. [83389]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 14 May 1999]: Further to my written answer of 16 April 1999, Official Report, columns 373–74, I should like to clarify the position concerning Mr. John Stevens' role in relation to the investigation into the murder of Mr. Patrick Finucane.

The Royal Ulster Constabulary carried out a criminal investigation of the murder itself and Mr. Stevens investigated the circumstances surrounding the murder, namely the related allegations of collusion.

HMS Ark Royal

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Fleet Support at Portsmouth bid for the refit of HMS Ark Royal; and if he will make a statement. [84568]

Mr. Spellar: The HMS Ark Royal refit is part of the allocated programme of work at Rosyth Royal Dockyard and was not competed.

Defence Vetting Agency

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Defence Vetting Agency plans to move to York. [84550]

Mr. Spellar: It is planned that about half the Agency will move in April 2000, with the remainder moving by early 2001. The move should be completed by April 2001. Some personnel and planning staff may be established in York before April 2000.

UK/US Military Agreements

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all current UK/US military agreements, giving in each case the date on which they were entered into and the objectives. [84233]

Mr. George Robertson: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the number of (a) shepherds and (b) sheep killed by US and UK action in Iraq. [84576]

Mr. George Robertson: I am aware of Iraqi claims that recent actions in the no-fly zones have caused civilian casualties and killed livestock on 29 and 30 April and again on 12 May. If these claims are true the casualties are deeply regrettable. Civilians and civilian property are never deliberately targeted by coalition pilots. Their mission (in support of UNSCR 688) is to prevent Saddam's air forces from persecuting the Kurds and Shia Muslims of northern and southern Iraq. The military action undertaken in the no-fly zones in recent months has been in response to Iraqi attempts to shoot down or otherwise threaten aircraft and kill aircrew.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out under which headings in his Departmental cash plans contained in Cm 4208, nuclear weapons (a) procurement, (b) deployment, (c) storage and (d) related maintenance activities are contained. [81499]

Mr. George Robertson [pursuant to the reply, 12 April 1999, c. 563]: Costs relating to nuclear weapons procurement are contained in Vote 1 subheads K and L. Costs associated with the storage of nuclear weapons and related maintenance activities are contained in Vote 1 subheads F and D; the latter costs are in relation to redundant naval systems. Vote 1 subhead A covers the front line operating costs of the deterrent.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if she will list for the week ended Saturday 8 May the number of violent incidents involving paramilitary groups which took place in Northern Ireland, indicating how many involved (a) Loyalist and (b) Republican groups; [83974]

(2) if she will list for the week ended Saturday 8 May the number of (a) punishment beatings and (b) punishment shootings which took place in Northern Ireland indicating how many in each category were committed by (i) Loyalist and (ii) Republican groups. [83975]

Mr. Ingram: The number of security incidents during the period 2–8 May 1999 are as follows:

Shooting incidents: 4

Bombing incidents: 1.

The number of casualties as a result of paramilitary-style attacks during the period are as follows:

	Loyalist	Republican
Shootings	1	1
Total	1	1

Notes:
1. Figures may be subject to minor amendments.
2. The shooting and bombing incidents cannot as yet be firmly attributed to a grouping.

State Pathologists

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many state pathologists there are in Northern Ireland. [83934]

Mr. Ingram: There is one State Pathologist, Professor Jack Crane, who is assisted by a Deputy State Pathologist, Dr. Derek Carson, and one other consultant forensic pathologist.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many post mortems each state pathologist in Northern Ireland has conducted in each of the last three years; and what were the numbers performed by Home Office pathologists in England and Wales. [83937]

Mr. Ingram: I am not prepared to release the numbers of post mortems performed by individual forensic pathologists. The total numbers of post mortems performed in Northern Ireland by the State Pathologist's Department in the previous three years were:

	Number
1996	1,479
1997	1,525
1998	1,672

The number of forensic post mortems performed by pathologists in England and Wales is a matter for the Home Secretary.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to issue a standard charter for the State Pathologists Department. [83939]

Mr. Ingram: There are no plans for a charter for the State Pathologist's Department. The work of the Department is presently under review and I propose to await the outcome of the review before considering that possibility.

Death Certificates (Delays)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many relatives of the deceased in each of the last 10 years have waited (a) one year, (b) two years and (c) more than two years between the death and the issuing of a death certificate; and if she will issue a statement. [83936]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Information is available only for date of death and date of registration. The figures are as follows:

Year	All deaths registered	Registered within 1 year of death	Registered 1 and 2 years of death	Registered 2 and 3 years of death	Registered 3 or more years after death
1988	15,814	15,675	113	21	5
1989	15,844	15,700	113	23	8
1990	15,426	15,243	144	29	10
1991	15,096	14,919	147	18	12
1992	14,988	14,813	129	30	16
1993	15,633	15,453	142	23	15
1994	15,114	14,886	147	57	24
1995	15,310	15,099	142	34	35
1996	15,218	15,027	151	17	23
1997	14,971	14,715	180	58	18

Information from 1988–96 (inclusive) is based on the registration date being recorded as the first day of the month. 1997 registration have been recorded as the actual date of registration.

Deaths are normally required to be registered within five days of a death. Registrations after the expiration of one year require the written authority of the Registrar General. Some deaths require referral to a Coroner and can be registered only on subsequent notification from that office. In Northern Ireland Coroners are appointed by the Lord Chancellor.

Grass Cutting (Belfast)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which department is responsible for cutting the grass (a) at Belmont roundabout on the intersection of Belmont Road and Knock Dual Carriageway, Belfast and (b) in front of Nos. 1 to 40 Old Holywood Road; and how often the grass is cut. [83932]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. W. J. McCoubrey. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from G. P. Fraser to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 17 May 1999:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked the Chief Executive to respond to your recently tabled Parliamentary Question about grass cutting at the roundabout on the intersection of Belmont Road and Knock Dual Carriageway and in front of numbers 1–40 Old Holywood Road, Belfast. I assume that the roundabout to which you refer is that at the intersection of Belmont Road and Parkway/Hawthornden Way. In Mr. McCoubrey's absence, I am replying.

I can confirm that Roads Service is responsible for cutting the grass at both these locations. These areas are maintained in accordance with our current grass cutting policy which allows for up to 5 cuts per growing season in urban areas.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Post Mortems

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many post mortems were conducted in each of the last five years in Northern Ireland. [83935]

Mr. McFall: Information on the number of post mortems conducted in Northern Ireland during the latest years for which information is available is given in Tables 1 and 2.

Table 1: Number of post mortems conducted in Northern Ireland hospitals 1994–95 to 1997–98

Year	Number of post mortems
1997–98	840
1996–97	1,029
1995–96	1,034
1994–95	984

Table 2: Number of post mortems conducted in the State Pathology Department 1994–98

Year	Number of post mortems
1998	1,672
1997	1,525
1996	1,479
1995	1,524
1994	1,471

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to allow hospital pathologists to conduct routine post mortems. [83938]

Mr. McFall: Hospital pathologists already perform routine post mortems as part of their work. In addition, they may perform post mortem examinations on patients who are the subject of a Coroner's investigation.

Royal Ulster Constabulary (Reserve)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many recruits there were to the RUC reserve in each of the last five years; how many recruits are currently training; and when the next intake will be into the RUC reserve. [83933]

Mr. Ingram: The number of recruits to the RUC Reserve in the last 5 years are as follows:

1994: 116

1995: 45

1996: 62

1997: 29

1998: 122.

These figures relate to the full-time reserve. There has been no recruitment to the part-time reserve for some time.

There are currently no recruits in training and the date and numbers of the next intake have yet to be determined.

Lee Clegg (Trial Costs)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to her answer of 27 April 1999, Official Report, columns 116–17, on the costs of the trial of Lee Clegg, for what reasons an answer could be prepared only at disproportionate cost. [83988]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 17 May 1999]: Costs in individual trials are not collated. The information on the costs in Lee Clegg's trial in 1993 is not recorded in a form which is easily accessible. An extensive and protracted search of records would be necessary to retrieve it.

Trial Costs

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the heads under which the costs of a criminal trial are recorded by her Department. [83989]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 17 May 1999]: "Counsels' Fees" and "Payments to Witnesses" are recorded under those heads. Other costs are not recorded under specific heads.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in each of the past 10 years her Department has been asked for the cost of specific criminal trials; and if she will list the trials, indicating those in respect of which information has been refused on the grounds of disproportionate cost. [83990]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 17 May 1999]: Once. On 31 October 1994, Official Report, column 923, in answer to the hon. Member for North Antrim (Rev. Ian Paisley), the then Secretary of State replied that information about the cost to the State of the arrest, prosecution and appeal of Messrs, Latimer, Bell, Allen and Hegan was not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Early Release

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of those terrorist prisoners released early under the Good Friday agreement by 13 May would have been due for release by that date under the terms of the early release arrangements which apply in Northern Ireland. [84667]

Mr. Ingram: All 181 of the terrorist prisoners serving determinate sentences who have to date been released under the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998, would have been eligible for release under the terms of the early release arrangements contained in the Northern Ireland (Remission of Sentences) Act 1995. The 1995 Act did not cover prisoners serving indeterminate sentences, some 85 of whom have been released under the 1998 Act. This information is taken from statistics which are current at 17 May 1999.

WALES

Tuition Fees

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost of removing student tuition fees for higher education in Wales. [83980]

Mr. Hain: The higher education institutions in Wales would not benefit from the forecast private contribution of:

	£ million
1999–2000	16.0
2000–01	23.3
2001–02	26.5

The source of these figures is the Department's Funding letter of 15 December 1998 to the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales. The figures are the estimated student tuition fee contributions from all UK and EU domiciled students attending Welsh Higher Education institutions.

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers involved in media relations were employed within his Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84202]

Mr. Michael: Detailed information on the numbers of permanent civil servants employed in Departmental Press Offices during the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in a memorandum to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report, "The Government Information and Communication Service" (HC 770) in July 1998. A copy is in the Library of the House. The numbers in post at 1 May are 13.

Special Advisers in this Department have ad hoc contact with the media but none are specifically employed in media relations.

Killay Medical Centre

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his decision on the application for a pharmacy at Killay Medical Centre. [84664]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: This has come to my right hon. Friend as an appeal against a decision by Iechyd Morgannwg Health Authority. Consideration of the case must include certain statutory periods for consultation and other essential processes and a decision will be announced once these have been concluded.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Payments (Automation)

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what the total expenditure on the scheme to automate benefit payments at post offices has been to date; [84109]

(2) if he will publish a report on the trials for the automation of benefit payments at post offices and sub-post offices; and if he will make a statement; [84106]

(3) on what date the automation of benefit payments at post offices will be implemented nationally; [84107]

(4) what is the budget allocated to the (a) development and (b) implementation of the automation of benefit payments at post offices; [84108]

(5) what is his estimate of the cost of completing the automation of benefit payments at post offices. [84110]

Mr. Timms: To date, the Department's total expenditure amounts to £268 million. This expenditure provides a range of services and an IT infrastructure that will also support our wider programme of modernisation.

We are monitoring the progress of the trials very closely. There are no plans to publish a report.

On present plans, automation of post offices will be completed within the next two years.

Under the terms of the PFI contract to automate business transacted at post offices, including the payment of benefits, ICL Pathway is responsible for the bulk of development and implementation. This Department has a budget of £1.2 billion (at 1997–98 prices for the period 1994–2005) for a range of services and IT infrastructure to support post office automation and the Department's wider programme of modernisation.

This Department, Post Office Counters Ltd. and ICL Pathway are presently working together to progress the project. The costs of completion will not be known until plans have been finalised.

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers involved in media relations were employed within his Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84196]

Mr. Timms: Detailed information on the numbers of permanent civil servants employed in Departmental Press Offices during the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in a memorandum dated 16 June 1998 to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report on The Government Information and Communication Service (HC 770) in July 1998. A copy is in the Library of the House. The full-time equivalent of the staff in post in the Department of Social Security as of 1 May 1999 was 60.1.

Special Advisers in this Department have ad hoc contact with the media but none specifically employed in media relations.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the guidance issued to adjudicators and BAMS doctors on the assessment of people diagnosed as suffering from ME. [84542]

Mr. Bayley: The Department's Chief Medical Adviser issues guidance to all doctors approved by the Secretary of State to undertake medical assessments for State benefit purposes. The guidance is contained in the Handbook for Medical Services Doctors and in the Disability Handbook. Both these Handbooks contain a section on Chronic Fatigue Syndrome (also known as ME). The handbooks are available to decision makers who also have access to expert advice from a Medical Services doctor.

Medical Services doctors employed by SEMA group, which provide medical services on behalf of the Department of Social Security are trained in those aspects of Disability Assessment Medicine which focuses on impartial and objective assessment of disability irrespective of diagnosis.

The latest developments in the understanding of the Chronic Fatigue Syndromes are constantly kept under review by the Chief Medical Adviser and his Medical Policy Group. The guidance is reviewed in the light of any developments.

Mortgage Costs (Benefit Claimants)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of paying in full the mortgage interest costs of recipients of Income Support and related benefits from the first day of receipt of benefit. [84663]

Angela Eagle: The estimated cost of paying mortgage interest to working age people, as well as pensioners, from the first day of a benefit claim is £80 million.

Notes:

1. Mortgage interest can be included in Income Support and income-based Jobseeker's Allowance.

2. The costs are based on survey data from the 1996–97 Family Resources Survey and modelled on the Policy Simulation Model which is uprated to 1999–2000 prices and benefit levels.

3. The figures are rounded to the nearest £5 million.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers involved in media relations were employed within his Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84198]

Mr. Vaz: Four civil servants, all members of the Government Information and Communications Service (GICS), were employed in my Department for media relations on 1 May in the years 1997–99.

The Special Adviser in this Department has ad hoc contact with the media but is not specifically employed in media relations.

Community Legal Service

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to the answer of 13 May 1999, Official Report, column 183, if he will set a date for publication of the Community Legal Service consultation document. [84669]

Mr. Vaz: Further to the answer of the 13 May 1999, Official Report, column 183, given by my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Hoon), I can confirm that the publication of the consultation paper will take place soon.

Matrimonial Judgments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the draft Commission legislation on the jurisdiction, recognition and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial matters and parental responsibility for children; and what is the Government's policy on the draft legislation. [84094]

Mr. Vaz: The proposal for a Council Regulation on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in matrimonial matters and in matters of parental responsibility for joint children was published by the European Commission on 4 May 1999.

The Government are currently assessing this proposal and its implications; it is based on a convention dealing with the same subject matter which was agreed by the member states of the European Union in 1998. The Government have not yet decided what steps to take in relation to this proposal.

Documents Service

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the draft Commission directive on the service of judicial and extra-judicial documents in civil and commercial matters; and what is his policy thereto. [84093]

Mr. Vaz: The provisional version of the Directive was published by the European Commission on 4 May 1999. The Government are presently considering their response.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Voluntary Rationing Scheme

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much funding was provided under the voluntary rationing scheme in the last financial year; how many grants were made; when funding ceased to be available; and if he will make a statement on funding for the scheme for this year. [83130]

Mr. Charles Clarke [holding answer 4 May 1999]: Funding of £11.1 million was provided under the Voluntary Rationing Scheme (VRS) in 1998–99. This expenditure supported 1,036 VRS repair projects and 739 VRS capital projects. Funding for VRS repair grant was available to Voluntary Aided schools throughout 1998–99. However, due to an unusually high demand in the early part of the year, funding for VRS capital work was not provided between 27 August 1998 and 31 March 1999.

The Voluntary Rationing Scheme is one of a number of largely demand led elements in the overall provision of grant to governing bodies for building work at Voluntary Aided schools. The amount available in any year depends on the total demand for grant for all types of capital and repair work at these schools. Funding for VRS capital will be monitored closely throughout 1999–2000 and schools will be informed if any changes are necessary. The VRS repair arrangements have been subsumed into new and streamlined funding procedures which came into effect on 1 April 1999, after full consultation with the Churches.

In 1999–2000, the total budget for the provision of grant towards the governors' liabilities for building work at Voluntary Aided schools is £121 million. This compares with an amount of £103 million at the time the original budget was set for 1998–99. Of the £121 million available for 1999–2000 some £17 million has provisionally been set aside for demand led elements such as the Voluntary Rationing Scheme.

Hospital Portering

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to introduce an NVQ in hospital portering; and if he will make a statement. [84395]

Mr. Mudie: There are no plans to develop an NVQ in hospital portering. The Healthcare National Training Organisation as the body responsible for developing NVQs in this sector will be looking at the feasibility of such qualifications.

Pupils (Outdoor Activities)

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure that pupils have the opportunity to take part in outdoor activities as part of the school curriculum. [84693]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Under my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's proposals for a revised National Curriculum from 2000, on which we are currently consulting, outdoor and adventurous activities continue to be available for pupils aged 7–16 as one of six areas of activity in the physical education curriculum.

"The Learning Age"

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish a summary of the responses to the Green Paper, "The Learning Age". [84795]

Mr. Mudie: We received about 3,000 thoughtful and constructive responses to "The Learning Age". They supported our vision of the learning society and our proposals for achieving it.

A document summarising the responses is now available and I am placing copies in the Library.

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers involved in media relations were employed within his Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84195]

Mr. Mudie: Information on the numbers of permanent civil servants employed in Departmental Press Offices during the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in a memorandum to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report, "The Government Information and Communication Service"

(HC770) in July 1998. A copy is in the Library. The number of press officers in post at DfEE on 1 May 1999 are 30.

Special Advisers in this Department have ad hoc contact with the media but none are employed specifically in media relations.

Boxing (Schools)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance is issued by his Department to local education authorities in respect of the provision of boxing in schools. [84229]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department does not issue any guidance on the provision of boxing in schools. Boxing is not a part of the National Curriculum for physical education but it is open to LEAs and schools to decide whether to offer boxing as an extra-curricular activity, should they wish to and if they have the expertise and resources to do so.

The British Association of Advisers and Lecturers in Physical Education produce "Safe Practice in Physical Education", which includes guidance on the provision of boxing in schools.

CABINET OFFICE

Open Government Initiative

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the total number of releases under the open government initiative. [84752]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The latest number of records released under the open government initiative now stands at over 102,000 and relates to releases up to the end of March 1999. This represents an increase of just under 6 per cent. over the previous total of over 96,000 which I announced on 23 February 1999, Official Report, column 255, and related to the total figure as at the end of September 1998.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 12 May 1999, Official Report, column 309, concerning water and oil supplies in Iraq, if he will define the term "attach ourselves". [84541]

The Prime Minister: I was making clear, as I said in my initial response, that there is no question of our targeting oil or water facilities.

HEALTH

Pharmaceutical Companies

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those members of advisory committees to his Department who have declared outside interests with (a) DiaDexus, (b) Cerebrus Ltd, (c) Cerebrus PLC, (d) Stanford University, (e) Human Genome Services Inc, (f) Glaxo Wellcome, (g) the Wellcome Institute, (h) Monsanto, (i) AgrEvo and (j) SmithKline Beecham. [80127]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is set out in the table, in relation to the Department's executive and advisory non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs).

MS Patients

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to establish a specialist nurse service for multiple sclerosis patients along the lines of the breast care nurse scheme. [83362]

Mr. Hutton: The Department currently has no plans to establish a specialist nursing service for multiple sclerosis patients. We welcome the spirit of partnership with the voluntary sector shown by the recently launched Multiple Sclerosis Society initiatives to jointly fund nursing posts for patients with MS. It is, however, for the National Health Service locally to decide whether to pursue this initiative in the light of their local needs and priorities.

Kosovar Refugees

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the demands on the health service arising from Kosovar refugees arriving in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement; [83737]

(2) what percentage of Kosovar refugees he estimates will need NHS (a) primary care and (b) hospital treatment within one month of arrival; [83738]

(3) if he will meet the Secretary of State for the Home Department to discuss what account should be taken of existing health authority waiting lists in determining where Kosovar refugees are placed. [83739]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced in the House on 5 May 1999, Official Report, columns 943, that the United Kingdom is prepared to give temporary protection to several thousand refugees from Kosovo. The National Health Service is expected to play its part in preparing for this and stands ready to do what is necessary to identify refugees' health problems and provide appropriate treatment.

For the majority of refugees, individual health problems are not known until they are examined, either on arrival or soon afterwards. All refugees are being registered with a general practitioner as a matter of course. So far, more than 900 people have arrived in the UK, and experience suggests that many of those still to come will have primary healthcare needs, either now or in the near future and a few will need hospital treatment.

We have also agreed to accept a small number of priority medical cases, with their immediate family members, who meet the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees' criteria for medical evacuation. No such cases have been received so far. We anticipate that careful selection of UK hospitals for any priority patients that do come will ensure that any impact on existing NHS waiting lists is kept to a minimum.

Domiciliary Oxygen Service

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in his Department's review of the services available under the domiciliary oxygen service; how many outside organisations have been consulted; when he expects the review to be completed; and if he will publish its findings. [84038]

Mr. Hutton: We expect to be in a position to seek views from organisations and companies interested in the provision of the Domiciliary Oxygen Therapy Service once forthcoming guidelines from the Royal College of Physicians have been published. The timetable and the extent to which the review's conclusions will be made public are currently being considered.

Royal Commission on Long-term Care

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the Government's response to the report of the Royal Commission into long-term care. [83979]

Mr. Hutton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 4 May 1999, Official Report, columns 360–61.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department has taken to promote a public debate on the findings and recommendations of the Royal Commission on long-term care. [84544]

Mr. Hutton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave him on 1 March 1999, Official Report, columns 746–67.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which members of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence Partners' Council are (a) disabled and (b) from organisations representing the disabled. [84101]

Mr. Hutton: Potential members of the Partners' Council were not required to declare if they had a disability.

There are eight members of the Partners' Council who come from organisations which represent patients (including those with disabilities).

The organisations concerned are:

Carers National Association

Long Term Medical Conditions Alliance

Patients Association

The Relatives Association

National Consumer Council

Wales Council for Voluntary Action

Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales

Association of Welsh CHCs.

A further four members of the Partners' Council are patient representatives, chosen for their experience and expertise as either patients or carers.

Mental Health Acts

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people from ethnic minorities between the ages of (a) 16 to 25, (b) 26 to 35, (c) 36 to 45 and (d) 45 years and over are currently sectioned under the Mental Health Acts in England and Wales; [84113]

(2) how many people in London from ethnic minorities between the ages of (a) 16 to 25, (b) 26 to 35, (c) 36 to 45 and (d) over 45 years are currently sectioned under the Mental Health Acts. [84115]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available centrally.

The revised Mental Health Act 1983 Code of Practice, published in March 1999, contains new guidance for health authorities and National Health Service trusts to keep records of the ethnicity of all patients admitted under the Act, and to establish systems to monitor admissions by race and sex.

ECT

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he has taken to monitor adherence to the guidelines issued by his Department on the use of ECT; [84218]

(2) what audit he had carried out of the safety of ECT treatment in clinics; and if he will make a statement. [84112]

Mr. Hutton: Guidance on the use and safety of electro-convulsive therapy is issued by the Royal College of Psychiatrists and it is for the profession to monitor how well their guidance is being applied. ECT is an effective treatment particularly for patients with severe depression. The proper application of ECT and its procedures is an important issue for patients, for psychiatrists and for mental health services of the National Health Service. To emphasise this point, a joint letter signed by the Chief Medical Officer and the President of the Royal College of Psychiatrists has been sent to all Consultant Psychiatrists in the NHS, all health authorities and NHS trusts. The letter states that, as part of the new clinical governance arrangements, both the Chief Medical Officer and the President of the College expect the guidance to be applied so as to improve standards in the area.

Care Leavers

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress on (a) the development of improved financial arrangements for 16 to 18-year-old people leaving care and (b) the proposed new duty on local authorities to assess and meet the needs of care leavers up to the age of 18 years. [84370]

Mr. Hutton: As announced in The Government's Response to the Children's Safeguards Review on 5 November 1998, the Government intend legislating to extend and strengthen the statutory responsibilities of local authorities to provide after care support.

The Government will shortly publish a consultation paper setting out new arrangements for 16 and 17-year-olds who are in care or care leavers which will clarify responsibility and improve financial support for this particularly vulnerable group. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Once responses to the consultation paper have been considered, the Government will take forward any legislatory changes as soon as Parliamentary time allows. In the meantime, the Government issued guidance to local authorities in April asking them to take steps now to improve services for care leavers (LAC(99)16).

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers involved in media relations were employed within his Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84190]

Ms Jowell: Detailed information on the numbers of permanent civil servants employed in Departmental Press Offices during the financial year 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in a memorandum dated 16 June 1998 to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report on 'The Government Information and Communications Service' (HC 770) in July 1998, copies of which are available in the Library. The number in post at 1 May 1999 was 14.2

Special advisers in this Department have ad hoc contact with the media but none is specifically employed in media relations.

Altrincham General Hospital

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the closure of wards at Altrincham General Hospital. [84671]

Mr. Denham: To date, there have been no representations that I am aware of received in this Department.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department was first informed of the decision of the Trafford Healthcare NHS Trust to close two wards at Altrincham General Hospital. [84672]

Mr. Denham: The North West Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive first became aware of the proposals to close two wards at Altrincham General Hospital on 8 April 1999.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue directions to Trafford Healthcare NHS Trust to suspend its proposed closure of two wards at Altrincham General Hospital until the public consultation required by statute has taken place. [84670]

Mr. Denham: The North West Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive have instructed Trafford Healthcare NHS Trust and Salford and Trafford Health Authority to agree a joint approach on the future of in-patient services for the elderly at Altrincham General Hospital as well as community based services.

St. Anne's Hospital

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the future of St. Anne's hospital in Altrincham. [84673]

Mr. Denham: There have been no recent representations concerning the future of St. Anne's Hospital, Altrincham, that I am aware of.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trusts and hospitals had not implemented the nurses' pay award in time for increases to be paid in April salary payments. [84674]

Mr. Denham: It is the responsibility of National Health Service employers to ensure that the necessary arrangements are made as soon as possible to pay the new national salary scales effective from 1 April 1999. Some employees have received their pay increase in their April salary; where this has not been possible payment will be made in May and back dated to 1 April.

Following the publication of the Review Body Report on Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors on 1 February, a pay offer was made to nursing trades union and professional organisations on 10 February which was accepted on 16 March, subject to further discussions on the content of the Advance Letter.

The Advance Letter promulgating the pay increase for 1999–2000 was sent for printing on 29 March and issued to the NHS on 8 April 1999, it was also placed on the NHS web site—www.doh.gov.uk/nhsexec/alpay.hdm; this was as soon as possible after the nursing Staff Side accepted the pay offer and agreed the contents of the letter, and was ahead of the date on which Advance Letters have been issued in previous years.

We will be discussing with nursing unions and professional organisations whether it would be possible to speed up their consultative procedures and other administrative arrangements in future years in order to ensure nurses receive their pay increase in April.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Bishops

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what were the reasons for the real terms increase in expenditure on bishops listed in the Church Commissioners' last annual report. [84187]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Commissioners' expenditure on bishops falls into three distinct categories: stipends, working costs and housing costs (diocesan bishops only).

Bishops' stipends (pay) increased in line with the stipend increase recommended for parish clergy. From 1 April 1998, the stipend of a diocesan bishop was £27,660 and the stipend of a suffragan bishop was £22,740. The Commissioners' expenditure on bishops' stipends rose by £0.2 million, from £2.5 million in 1997 to £2.7 million in 1998.

Bishops' working costs increased by £0.7 million, from £8.1 million in 1997 to £8.8 million in 1998. Staffing costs account for most of these working costs. The average increase in the Average Earnings index in 1998 over 1997 was 5.1 per cent. Other factors contributing to increased expenditure in 1998 included £0.4 million in the Lambeth Conference, which takes place every 10 years, and the updating of office equipment for bishops and their staff.

Expenditure on diocesan bishops' housing increased by £0.4 million, from £2.6 million in 1997 to £3.0 million in 1998. Spending on these houses can change significantly from year to year depending on the works needed. It tends to be higher when the See becomes vacant, as the opportunity is taken to complete works when a bishop is not living there. There were still costs being met in 1998 relating to the large number of new diocesan bishops in the last three years. A change in the calculation of depreciation of See houses, and improvements to the working environment of bishops' staff, were also special factors in 1998.

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, how many and what percentage of bishops had use of a chauffeur at May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999; and what was the total cost in current prices for each appropriate financial year. [84188]

Mr. Stuart Bell: In 1997, 31 bishops employed full or part-time drivers at a cost of £336,741. At 1 May 1998, 31 bishops employed drivers, and the cost of their employment in 1998 was £337,807. Costs for 1999 are not yet available but at 1 May 1999, 27 bishops employed drivers. The hon. Member may wish to refer to the answer my predecessor, Mr. Michael Alison, then the right hon. Member for Selby, gave to Mr. Harry Greenway, the then hon. Member for Ealing, North. In 1995, 31 bishops employed drivers, and the cost of their employment was £334,000, 24 February 1997, Official Report, column 65.

The retail prices index has moved from 146.0 in January 1995 to 160.0 and 164.4 in December 1997 and 1998 respectively (January 1987 = 100), from which it will be seen that the real costs of bishops employing drivers have fallen since 1995. Bishops have increasingly been making use of part-time drivers.

27 out of 44 diocesan bishops employ a full or part-time driver. In addition the 70 suffragan or assistant bishops drive themselves or occasionally receive some special assistance when they are not able to do so, e.g. because of a disability.

Mr. Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough, representing the Church Commissioners, what has been the annual expenditure including council tax, maintenance and other works, on each residence available to each bishop in (i) 1990–91, (ii) 1997–98 and (iii) 1998–99. [84189]

Mr. Stuart Bell: The Commissioners' current policy is not to make public expenditure on individual bishops' houses. The overall spending on bishops' houses was:

1990—£1.7 million
1991—£2.1 million
1992—£2.2 million
1993—£2.2 million
1994—£2.7 million
1995—£2.3 million
1996—£2.7 million
1997—£2.6 million
1998—£3.0 million.

Comparable figures are not available for 1999.

Expenditure on bishops' houses overall and on individual houses in particular can change significantly from year to year, depending on the works needed. Expenditure on a house tends to be higher when the See becomes vacant, as the opportunity is taken to complete works when a bishop is not living there.

Spending on bishops' housing is subject to close budgetary control. Repairs to buildings are limited to the minimum that the Commissioners feel is consistent with the proper maintenance of these properties in their care. The Commissioners have nearly completed their review of the suitability of all diocesan bishops' houses (suffragan bishops' houses are owned by the diocese) and in many cases steps have been taken to reduce long-term running costs.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EU Development Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will publish the agenda for the forthcoming EU Development Council of 21 May. [84675]

Mr. Foulkes: The agenda is as follows:

1. Conclusions on the results of the evaluation of the European Community's development instruments and programmes.
2. Resolution on co-ordination and complementarity between Community and member states' development policies.
3. Post-Lomé negotiations.
4. Conflict prevention, management and resolution:
   (a) Combating the excessive and uncontrolled accumulation and spread of small arms and light weapons as part of the EU's emergency aid, reconstruction and development programmes
   (b) Antipersonnel landmines—progress report on 1996 Resolution
   (c) Co-operation with countries involved in armed conflicts
5. Coherence—progress report on June 1997 Resolution.
6. Reconstruction in Central America following Hurricane Mitch.
7. Conclusions on integrating environmental and sustainable development into development policy.
8. Any other business:
   (a) Developing countries in the framework of the WTO
   (b) Resumption of co-operation with Burundi
   (c) Link between migration and development

   Lunch items: Kosovo, debt.

On 7 May 1999 our officials sent an annotated copy of the agenda to the Clerks of the European Scrutiny Committee, the Select Committee on the European Communities, and the International Development Select Committee.

World Bank

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what has been the total (i) UK and (ii) international contribution to the World Bank's fund to assist developing countries with millennium computer compliance; and what the fund has been spent on to date. [84217]

Clare Short: The UK made a £10 million grant commitment in March 1998 to a Millennium Bug project managed by the World Bank through InfoDev. InfoDev is a multi-donor funded programme set up to promote the increased use of information and communication technologies in developing countries. To date, £6 million has been paid into the project and further sums will be released this year, as disbursements are made by the Bank.

Following the UK's lead in supporting this project, others have made substantial grant commitments, including the US ($12 million), Canada ($0.7 million), Sweden ($1.26 million), Italy ($0.3 million), and The Netherlands ($3.5 million). The total international commitment to the project presently stands at $34.2 million.

The Project has produced an information guidance document, "Year 2000 Toolkit—A National Plan for Developing Countries", which has been disseminated world-wide through 18 regional and country conferences undertaken throughout 1998, attended by some 120 developing countries. Participants consisted of senior government officials and information technology managers. The document is available on the internet.

The Project also provides grants to assist developing countries prepare national action plans and to support work on systems of critical national importance. So far, a total of 84 developing countries are included in the grant arrangements, mainly to help them prepare national action plans, for which grants of up to $100,000 have been provided. Larger grants are available to help with remediation and testing work. Grant applications presently total about $15.7 million.

The InfoDev Project is now working closely with the International Y2K Cooperation Centre (IYCC) in Washington, using US funding. The IYCC, which includes the UK's Action 2000, is coordinating international efforts to minimise the impacts of the Millennium Bug problem on the global economy.

Cleveland Police

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 5 May 1999, Official Report, column 397, on the reference for the former Deputy Chief Constable of Cleveland Police for the post of Deputy Commissioner of Royal Turks and Caicos Islands, on what date the references were requested by her Department. [84219]

Clare Short: My Department sought references for Mr. Turnbull on 3 and 19 February 1999.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 15 March 1999, Official Report, column 510, on Special Advisers, if she will give the total travel cost of each occasion when (a) a departmental and (b) non-departmental advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity since 2 May 1997 and the place visited. [82410]

Clare Short: For the period 2 May 1997 to 31 March 1999, Special Advisers in my Department have travelled overseas in an official capacity on 14 occasions to a variety of locations. The total cost of travel and any accommodation was £31,618. All travel complied with the requirements of the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many (a) civil servants and (b) Special Advisers involved in media relations were employed within her Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84205]

Clare Short: Detailed information on the numbers of permanent civil servants employed in Departmental Press Offices during the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in a memorandum dated 16 June 1998 to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report on "The Government Information and Communication Service (HC 770)" in July 1998. A copy is in the Library of the House. On 1 May 1999, my Department had three civil servants working full-time on media relations and two other civil servants whose wider duties included contact with the media.

Special Advisers in this Department had ad hoc contact with the media but none are specifically employed in media relations.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Healthy Living Centres

Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the development of healthy living centres. [83417]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 17 May 1999]: The New Opportunities Fund launched the healthy living centre initiative on 29 January 1999. £300 million of Lottery money is available under this initiative to establish a core network of healthy living centres across the UK. By the end of 2002, the New Opportunities Fund aims to have awarded grants to projects that will ensure that healthy living centres are accessible to 20 per cent. of the population of the UK.

The application process is underway and the Fund aims to announce the first successful applicants in the Autumn of this year.

Helsinki Summit

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the nature of the sports report that he will be submitting to the heads of Government at the Helsinki Summit. [84231]

Mr. Banks: Any report on sport to the Helsinki Summit will be submitted by the European Commission and will contain the conclusions of considerable debate, which is currently under way, by all member states on a number of important sporting issues. The next informal meeting of EU Sports Ministers in Paderborn on 1–2 June will establish a clearer agenda for the content of the Helsinki Conclusions and I will be playing a full role in this process.

Boxing (Schools)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had about the provision of boxing in schools with the Secretary of State for Education and Employment. [84230]

Mr. Banks: I meet with my colleagues in DfEE on a regular basis when we discuss a wide range of issues of mutual interest. Our latest discussions centred on sport in general in schools and the national curriculum. However, we have not discussed boxing but remain firmly committed to the encouragement of boxing as a sport.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

St. Helena

18. Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has had from the St. Helena island council to the publication of his White Paper on overseas territories. [83517]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The St Helena Legislative Council on 24 March 1999 unanimously passed a Motion:

> "That this House conveys its sincere thanks and appreciation to the Secretary of State from the Legislative Council for the commitment to restore full British citizenship to the people of St Helena, and looks forward to full consultation on the other issues contained in the White Paper, particularly those relating to St Helena's future."

Middle East

19. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the steps being taken to promote the middle east peace process. [83518]

31. Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Israeli general election. [83530]

36. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Israeli general election. [83535]

37. Mr. Caplin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process following the outcome of the Israeli general election. [83536]

38. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Israeli general election. [83537]

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the middle east peace process. [83531]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier in the House today to my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey), Official Report, column 856.

East Timor

20. Mr. John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy towards the future status of East Timor. [83519]

Mr. Robin Cook: We welcome the consultation that has been launched to establish the wishes of the people of East Timor on whether they want autonomy of independence. Only the fortnight before his death Derek Fatchett visited East Timor and gave an undertaking that Britain would be one of the six nations leading implementation of the UN process. We will ensure that we complete the valuable work that Derek Fatchett began.

39. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to promote peace in East Timor. [83538]

Mr. Robin Cook: We continue to support the efforts under UN auspices to secure a future for East Timor which will fully respect the interests and legitimate aspirations of the East Timorese people.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to other Governments on establishing a permanent international presence in East Timor to monitor human rights abuses. [82466]

Mr. Robin Cook [holding answer 28 April 1999]: We have on a number of occasions, along with EU partners, called for the urgent establishment of a permanent UN presence in East Timor to help prevent further violence in the territory. We welcome the agreement signed by Indonesia and Portugal in New York on 5 May whereby a United Nations presence will supervise the consultation of the East Timorese on the question of autonomy. We are working with others on arrangements for the deployment of an international police presence in East Timor to oversee implementation of the 5 May agreement.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the Australian Government's recent report on the deaths of the British and other newsmen in East Timor in 1975. [83959]

Mr. Robin Cook: We welcomed the Australian Government's decision to refer new information about the deaths of the British journalists in East Timor in 1975 to Mr. Sherman. Mr. Sherman's second report contains no major new revelations or conclusions.

El Shifa Factory

21. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his American counterparts concerning the American Government's decision to withdraw from legal proceedings against Mr. Idris relating to the bombing of the El Shifa factory. [83520]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The US decision to lift its block on Salah Idris' assets is a matter for the US authorities. Her Majesty's Government have not taken action against Mr. Idris, nor has it made any allegations against him. We have not therefore discussed the issue with the US Government.

Tibet

23. Mr. Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chinese Government about the continuing imprisonment of the Tibetan nun Ngawang Sangdrol; and what prospects there are for her release. [83522]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are deeply concerned about the well-being of Ngawang Sangdrol, and others imprisoned in Tibet. Her name is on a list of individual cases which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister raised with Chinese leaders in October last year, and on an EU list of individual cases which was presented to the Chinese authorities on 7 May 1999. We will continue to raise her case with the Chinese authorities, both bilaterally and through the EU, and to press for her release.

Albania

24. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations with Albania. [83523]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier in the House today to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty), Official Report, column 871.

Balkans

25. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the refugee position in the Balkans. [83524]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has estimated that ethnic cleansing in former Yugoslavia had resulted in some 1.7 million refugees and Internally Displaced Persons by the end of 1998. Milosevic's latest actions have added to this grim total. Some 743,000 Kosovo Albanians are now refugees in the region. Over 50,000 have been airlifted out of the region. Many more are displaced inside Kosovo, facing great hardship.

Milosevic is directly responsible for this latest tragedy. NATO action will not cease until we are satisfied that all Kosovo Albanians will be able to return in safety to their homes. This can be guaranteed only by an international military presence

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has made in resolving the dispute with Serbia. [83504]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier in the House today to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, column 863.

EU Enlargement

26. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the preparations for the enlargement of the European Union with regard to the reform of the European structural policy. [83525]

Ms Quin: Reforms to the structural and cohesion funds were agreed at the Berlin European Council on 24–25 March. These reforms were part of a consolidated effort to bring EU spending under stricter control to prepare the European Union for enlargement. Enlargement will not require an increase to the Own Resources ceiling (1.27 per cent.) of Community GNP. Despite that, substantial funds will be available to provide assistance during the financing period 2000–06 to applicants for membership, before and after accession.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

27. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress made in improving and updating the 1995 aims and objectives of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty. [83526]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Preparatory Committee for the NPT 2000 Review Conference is currently meeting in New York. The Principles and Objectives adopted at the 1995 Conference will be discussed both at PrepCom and RevCon.

Iraq

28. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy in respect of Iraq. [83527]

Mr. Hoon: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier in the House today to my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. Clapham), Official Report, column 855.

Kosovo

30. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his counterparts in the NATO countries concerning the future of Kosovo as an independent state after the end of the hostilities; and if he will make a statement. [83529]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We are in frequent contact with NATO counterparts about finding a peaceful solution to the Kosovo crisis on the basis of the G8 principles. We respect the territorial integrity of all countries in the region and it has never been part of our objectives to create new independent states.

The statement on Kosovo issued at the NATO Summit in Washington on 23 April called on President Milosevic to provide credible assurance of his willingness to work for a political framework agreement based on the Rambouillet Accords. But given what the Kosovo Albanians have suffered, we are now proposing a much stronger role for the international community in the civil administration of Kosovo.

Brazil

33. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the priorities for his policy relating to Brazil. [83532]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have excellent bilateral relations with Brazil, which is our biggest market in Latin America. We are committed to strengthening our commercial and political links in line with the priorities set out in the bilateral action plan signed by the Prime Minister and President Cardoso during the President's State Visit to the UK in December 1997.

International Criminal Court

34. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's discussions with Russia on closer co-operation with the International Criminal Court. [83533]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We welcome the fact that Russia voted in favour of the adoption of the Statute of the International Criminal Court. We are working closely with the Russians and others at the Preparatory Commission for the ICC.

MOX Exports

35. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the proliferation risks of exporting MOX fuel. [83534]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The Government are satisfied that the export of Mixed Oxide Fuel (MOX) from EU suppliers to Japan poses no unacceptable risk to the proliferation of nuclear materials. The UK's international nuclear trade, including the export of MOX fuel, is undertaken strictly within the terms of international agreements on nuclear non-proliferation, safeguards and physical protection and is entirely consistent with the UK's obligations in these areas.

Malta

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relations with Malta. [83528]

Ms Quin: Our relations with Malta are excellent. We have continued to build on the longstanding and close links the UK enjoys with Malta across a wide range of issues.

I visited Malta on 4–5 May and had discussions on bilateral and European issues with representatives of the government, of the opposition and others, including business and economic interests.

Military Intervention (Legal Justification)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers) of 26 April 1999, Official Report, column 35, if he will list the provisions in international law which make military intervention legally justifiable. [83547]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: The United Nations Charter preserves the right of a state or group of states to use force in self-defence in accordance with Article 51; the Charter also allows the use of force under the authorisation of the Security Council acting under Chapter VII of the Charter. Cases have also arisen, as in Kosovo, when in the light of all the circumstances the use of force is justifiable in support of purposes laid down by the Security Council when that was the only means to avert an immediate and overwhelming humanitarian catastrophe.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the source of the statistics used in the section Trade in Goods, under International Trade, of his booklet, "The British Economy". [84096]

Mr. Robin Cook: The United Kingdom Balance of Payments (The Pink Book) 1997.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the statistical source for levels of imports and exports provided in his Departmental poster, Outline Britain; and what is the (a) target audience and (b) how many have been distributed. [84097]

Mr. Hoon: The statistical source was the Annual Abstract of Statistics 1998, published by the ONS.

(a) The target audience was Press and Public Affairs Officers and Commercial Officers at Diplomatic Posts.

(b) The distribution between 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999 was 14,996.

Conference on Perceptions of Britain

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the planned (a) timing and (b) contents of the first biennial Conference on Perceptions of Britain. [84091]

Mr. Hoon: The first conference on perceptions of Britain, recommended by Panel 2000, is planned for 23 November 1999. The content will cover interchange of information on how Britain is perceived overseas, including the results of research organised by the British Council in 12 key markets, and how better co-operation can enhance perceptions of Britain.

Panel 2000

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recommendations in the Panel 2000 consultation document he has (a) adopted and (b) rejected; and if he will make a statement. [84099]

Mr. Robin Cook: All the recommendations in the Panel 2000 Consultation document were adopted by the Panel at its meeting on 17 December 1998. This followed a broad welcome for the recommendations during the consultation process which included a wide range of public and private sector organisations; feedback will be reflected in the implementation of the recommendations now underway. Individual participants in the Panel are engaged in the implementation process. The full Panel will meet again in the second half of this year to assess progress.

Information Technology

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 11 May 1999, Official Report, column 119, on information technology, how much of the expenditure incurred was connected with millennium computer compliance. [84515]

Mr. Hoon: None of the total of £44 million can be specifically identified as being directly related to achieving Y2K compliance. However, the expenditure forms part of the FCO's modernisation programme, which, by replacing obsolete IT, is helping to achieve that compliance.

Uganda

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to review his Department's current advice about travel to Uganda. [84572]

Mr. Hoon: All travel advice is reviewed routinely on a monthly basis and more frequently when there is reason to do so.

The travel advice for Uganda was last revised on 17 May. Because of the variety and fluidity of risks to travellers in Uganda the advice is constantly monitored.

International Fact-finding Commission

Mr. HomeRobertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to be able to recognise the competence of the International Fact-finding Commission enshrined in Additional Protocol I to the Geneva Conventions. [84793]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: I am pleased to inform the House that a declaration confirming the United Kingdom's recognition of the competence of that body was yesterday being deposited with the Swiss authorities in Berne. This further demonstrates our commitment to international humanitarian law, following our ratification of the Additional Protocols to the Geneva Conventions in January 1998, our ratification of the Ottawa Convention in July 1998 and our acceptance of Amended Protocol II and Additional Protocol IV to the UN Weaponry Convention earlier this year.

Tobacco

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions have been issued to overseas diplomatic posts to restrict their involvement in the promotion of tobacco products following the publication of the Tobacco White Paper in December. [84843]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have issued the following guidelines to overseas posts:

"1. The Government's White Paper on Tobacco, presented to Parliament in December 1998, contained the following sentences concerning the role of Posts overseas:

"We are not in the business of banning the production or export of tobacco products, and the DTI and our embassies will continue to provide advice, to which UK companies are entitled, in the sale of legal products. However, in keeping with the current practice of Ministers and officials not becoming involved in the advertising or promotion of tobacco products at home, guidelines will shortly be issued to our diplomatic posts instructing them to be scrupulous to ensure that they follow suit overseas, taking into account local circumstances."

Guidelines:

2. Posts must no longer directly promote products containing tobacco, whether through advertising or through publicly associating HMG with their sale, especially where this might be misconstrued as some form of government endorsement or approval of them. However, given the general, non-discriminatory basis of British Trade International services and other UK government support for business—which, as a matter of principle, are available to all British companies, provided their products are mainly of UK origin and are legal—Posts should nonetheless, if approached, offer support and advice to assist UK tobacco companies through the provision of trade, investment and political information. While it may be true that such companies rarely, in any case, seek HMG assistance in their exporting effort, it will be important that Posts scrupulously adhere to these new guidelines, after taking into account local circumstances. Posts should bear in mind that the international tobacco control lobby is increasingly well organised, and pressure groups may seek to highlight any apparently controversial involvement in any event sponsored by a tobacco company.

3. It follows from the above that Posts should not inter alia be associated in any way with the promotion of the tobacco industry, for example by accepting advertisements for UK or local tobacco products in publications issued by the Post, or sponsorship from tobacco companies for their activities, including Chevening Scholarships. Nor should they attend or otherwise support receptions or high profile events—especially those where a tobacco company is the sole or main sponsor—which are overtly to promote tobacco products, such as the official opening of a UK tobacco factory overseas; events where tobacco sponsorship is more low-key (for example, among several sponsors of a visiting orchestra) can be attended. Posts may also continue to offer assistance to UK tobacco companies in other ways, such as in resolving business problems—customs or port clearance, smuggling, trademark violations etc—that are potentially discriminatory. They may also provide information and assistance on foreign country policies and investment opportunities including advice to help them comply with foreign government laws or regulations.

4. In short, unless otherwise specified above, Posts should not support activities designed specifically to encourage smoking. Posts have the delegated authority to decide for themselves whether any proposed action on their part is in keeping with these new regulations, but may refer to London for decision—to the FCO geographical department (if there are political implications) or JEPD—where this is felt necessary.

5. The White Paper also stressed the Government's wish to encourage and support the efforts of other countries to strengthen their own tobacco control strategies. Requests for help, particularly with expertise, should be passed to the Department of Health (Health Promotion Division).

6. These guidelines will take effect from 1 June 1999."

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers involved in media relations were employed within his Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84193]

Mr. Hoon: Detailed information on the numbers of permanent civil servants employed in Departmental Press Offices during the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in a memorandum to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report on 'The Government Information and Communication Service' (HC 770) in July 1998. A copy is in the Library of the House. There are at present 17.7 such staff in the FCO.

Special Advisers in this Department have ad hoc contact with the media but none are specifically employed in media relations.

Arrested UK Citizens

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on United Kingdom citizens arrested abroad being required to pay for embassy and consular services. [83723]

Mr. Robin Cook: British Nationals who are arrested or imprisoned overseas are not required to pay for consular assistance and advice.

They are required to pay for legal services, which consular officers cannot provide.

All fee-bearing consular services are published in the Consular Fees Order.

TREASURY

Correspondence

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to answer the letter from the right hon. Member for Birkenhead dated 12 April in respect of his constituent Colin Tierney. [84573]

Dawn Primarolo: A reply was sent to my right hon. Friend on 17 May.

Customs and Excise (Heathrow)

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 April 1999, Official Report, column 56, concerning HM Customs and Excise staff at Heathrow, since 1 May 1997 in relation to Customs Cargo staff other than NIS at Heathrow, how many jobs have been lost in Customs Cargo; what is the reduction in staff of the import control teams; what steps are being taken to combat the increase in traffic of the undeclared excise goods from the Continent; how HM Customs and Excise plans to meet its obligations with regard to DTI documentary checks, CAP controls, community transit controls and anti counterfeit checks; and what is the estimated revenue loss from failure to detect undeclared excise goods. [84225]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 17 May 1999]: There are currently 222 staff years allocated to the Cargo Division at Heathrow. In Customs Cargo at Heathrow the following reductions have been made in staff since 1997:

Year to March 1998—10.5 Staff years (4 per cent.)

Year to March 1999—9 staff years (3.6 per cent.)

Year to March 2000—15 staff years (6.2 per cent.).

Of these reductions the following numbers were involved in import control:

1998—0

1999—0

2000—8.

The reductions in the current year have been made to reflect the movement of freight control inland as a result of the take up of Customs Freight Simplified Procedures (CFSP). The percentage of import entries at Heathrow now being processed via the CFSP system is 41.8 per cent.

The increase in traffic of undeclared excise goods from the continent is being addressed in a number of ways. During the last financial year a special exercise was run, under Customs risk testing programme, to target tobacco goods in freight. The exercise produced £53.085 in revenue over six weeks, of which all but £300 was for tobacco goods. The results of that exercise have been fed into Customs ongoing risk review. This will provide sharper and more focused targeting of staff onto those freight consignments and importers that are considered a risk to the revenue, together with better intelligence in trend analysis and identification.

DTI documentary checks and CAP control checks are subject to computer-based selection profiles. Community transit and anti-counterfeit checks are carried out by import and export control staff as part of their normal scrutiny and examination roles, using intelligence and risk analysis techniques to target resources effectively.

The estimated revenue loss from failure to detect undeclared excise goods at Heathrow Cargo is not known as all current estimates specifically exclude freight consignments. The revenue estimated as lost nationally through cigarette smuggling by air passengers is £50m per year. Further details on cross-border shopping and smuggling of alcohol and tobacco products were laid in the House of Commons Library on 19 November 1998.

Tobacco Smuggling

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the revenue lost to the Exchequer through smuggling of tobacco. [76050]

Dawn Primarolo: In his Budget speech of 9 March, the Chancellor explained that in terms of the turnover of criminals' tobacco smuggling is now a £1½ billion business. That was an assessment by HM Customs and Excise based on their work in progress to monitor the scale of such smuggling (chiefly of cigarettes and hand-rolling tobacco). The provisional results of this work indicate that the total amount of revenue (excise duty and VAT) evaded in 1998 was perhaps around £1.7 billion.

Forms of tobacco duty evasion covered by this assessment include cross-Channel smuggling of cigarettes and hand-rolling tobacco, smuggling by air passengers, diversion frauds and smuggling over very large consignments in freight.

HM Customs and Excise will continue to examine ways of measuring such smuggling, and are discussing with representatives of the tobacco industry ways of improving the methodologies used.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the loss of revenue due to illegal imports of tobacco products in 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02, taking account of his Budget changes. [76569]

Dawn Primarolo: The forecast for tobacco revenue receipts for 1999–2000, published in the March 1999 Financial Statement and Budget Report, is £7 billion. This takes into account a range of factors including smuggling, forestalling behaviour by manufacturers, the affordability of tobacco products, trends in public health awareness, etc.

Budget

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will recalculate the figures used in paragraph 1.26 of the Red Book taking into account his July 1997 Budget and using an assumption for private car use of 8,300 miles in an average 1600cc car. [80855]

Dawn Primarolo: The impact of Budget 97, Budget 98 and Budget 99 measures on households is as follows:

over 20 million households gain, of which 7 million are households with children and 7 million are pensioner households; on average, households will be £350 a year better off; families with children will on average be £690 a year better off; poorer families will also benefit: 700,000 children will be taken out of poverty; working households will on average be £410 a year better off;

the new 10p rate of tax will halve the tax bill for 1.8 million, of whom 1.5 million are low-paid employees; the Working Families Tax Credit will on average give low earning families an extra £24 a week, compared with Family Credit.

All the figures are relative to indexation and are in 1999–2000 prices. They reflect the impact on disposable income of measures included in the 1999, 1998 and July 1997 Budgets and taking effect over the four years from 1998–99, plus the impact of the national minimum wage. They are based on data from the ONS Family Expenditure Survey, the DSS Family Resources Survey and Inland Revenue's Survey of Personal Incomes.

Compared with the Red Book, the only extra measure included is the cut in the mortgage interest relief (MIR) tax credit rate from 15 per cent. to 10 per cent. which was announced in the July 1997 Budget and came into force in April 1998.

Estimating the impact of indirect taxes is imprecise as spending patterns vary widely between households with the same composition and income, with the consumption of the majority of goods and services far from universal. For example, just over half the adult population are in households paying vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the effect in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01 of his budgets to date on a married pensioner couple with a combined pension income of £18,000 plus £4,000 in dividend income, assuming that they drive 8,300 miles each year in a 1.6 litre car registered in 1974 and smoke 20 cigars each week; [78753]

(2) if he will estimate the effect in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01 of his budgets to date on a married couple in England with one partner who smokes 20 cigarettes a day earning £25,000 per annum and the other earning £5,000 per annum, assuming that they have a mortgage of £40,000 and drive 8,300 miles each year in a two litre car with one 18 year old child in his first year of a four-year course at university in Scotland; [78751]

(3) if he will estimate the effect in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01 of his budgets to date on a married couple with one partner earning £15,000 per annum as a self-employed road haulier who drives a 38-tonne diesel lorry 75,000 miles each year and the other partner being non-earning with two children aged 15 and 16, assuming that they have a £45,000 mortgage and smoke 20 cigarettes a day between them; [78750]

(4) if he will estimate the effect in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01 of his budgets to date on a non-smoking married couple with one partner earning £50,000 per annum and the other earning £4,000 per annum in dividend income, assuming that they have a mortgage of £80,000 and drive 8,300 miles each year in a two litre car. [78752]

Dawn Primarolo: Information on the effect of the Budget on individuals and households is published in the Red Book and accompanying press notices. The reply to the hon. Member for Bognor Regis and Littlehampton (Mr. Gibb) sets out changes in disposable income after taking account of the effects of the last two Budgets.

Estimating the impact of indirect taxes is imprecise as spending patterns vary widely between households with the same composition and income, with the consumption of the majority of goods and services far from universal. For example, only around one third of adults are smokers, just over half the adult population are in households paying vehicle excise duty and around 10 per cent. of households pay air passenger duty.

This can be contrasted with direct taxes and benefits where at specified earnings and for particular household types there is a known benefit entitlement or tax liability.

The 1998 and 1999 Red Books set out the effect of the last two Budgets on:

cigarettes and cigars (1998 table 5.4—page 81), (1999 table 1.10—page 110);

and VED HM Treasury Budget Press Notice number 16 (1998) and number 7 (1999).

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the assumptions used for the purposes of the calculations in paragraph 1.26 of the Red Book. [80852]

Dawn Primarolo: All the figures given in paragraph 1.26 of the Budget 99 Report (the Red Book) are relative to indexation and are in 1999–2000 prices. They reflect the impact on disposable income of measures included in the 1999 and 1998 Budgets and taking effect over the three years from 1999–2000, plus the impact of the national minimum wage.

The figures are based on data from the ONS Family Expenditure Survey, the DSS Family Resources Survey and Inland Revenue's Survey of Personal Incomes.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assumptions were used for (a) car mileages and (b) pension contributions in the calculations used in paragraph 1.26 of the Red Book. [80851]

Dawn Primarolo: The figures in the Red Book are based on UK household expenditure and income patterns from the ONS Family Expenditure Survey, the DSS Family Resources Survey and Inland Revenue's Survey of Personal Incomes.

Withholding Tax

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will veto the withholding tax at the ECOFIN Council on 25 May. [84527]

Dawn Primarolo: The draft Directive on savings is still in draft form. There is no proposal to vote on the matter at the ECOFIN meeting on 25 May.

Tobacco (Excise Duty)

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra revenue will be raised in excise duty on tobacco products due to changes made since 1 May 1997 in 1997–98 and each of the following four years. [76573]

Dawn Primarolo: The table shows the estimated extra revenue raised in excise duty on tobacco products due to changes made since 1 May 1997:

£ million

Year	Extra Revenue
1997–1998	5
1998–1999	210
1999–2000	–875
2000–2001	975
2001–2002	1,160

These figures have been calculated by comparing estimated cash revenue streams under the Government's 5 per cent. tobacco escalator with an estimate of what revenue streams would have been under the previous government's 3 per cent. escalator.

Cigarettes Market

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the proportion of the market in cigarettes taken by (a) legal personal imports and (b) illegal imports. [76566]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Customs and Excise estimate the proportion of the UK tobacco market taken by legitimate cross-border shopping (excluding duty free purchases) to be about ½ per cent. in 1997. This is based on Customs' analysis of data from the International Passenger Survey conducted by the Office for National Statistics, for which the latest year available is 1997. Separate estimates for cross-border shopping of individual tobacco products are not published.

HM Customs and Excise also estimate the proportion of the UK cigarette market taken by cross-Channel smuggling and smuggling by air passengers to be about 3 per cent. This is based on Customs' own surveys of international passengers carried out in 1998.

Additionally, HM Customs and Excise are working, with representatives of the tobacco industry, to establish robust ways of measuring the overall scale of tobacco duty evasion. Work is still in progress on this, but Customs' latest assessment, based on the results to date, leads us to believe that the proportion of the UK cigarette market taken by all forms of smuggling, including smuggling in freight consignments, was perhaps approaching 10 per cent. in 1998.

Smuggling

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss of duty to the Inland Revenue as a result of (a) spirit, (b) beer and (c) tobacco purchases in France by United Kingdom residents during the last 12 months. [76055]

Dawn Primarolo: The collection of excise duty is the responsibility of HM Customs and Excise. Customs do not publish specific estimates for purchases made in France only. Customs' most recent estimates of the revenue lost (excise duty and VAT) through cross-border shopping and cross-Channel smuggling from other EU member states, for 1997 and 1998 respectively, are given in the table.

Table 1: Revenue lost through cross-border shopping and cross-Channel smuggling

£ million

	Cross-border shopping 1997			Cross-Channel smuggling 1998
Product type	Duty	VAT	Total	Duty	VAT	Total
Beer	35	20	50	90	50	140
Wine	95	45	140	35	15	50
Spirits	40	15	50	20	5	30
Hand-rolling tobacco	—	—	—	575	150	730
Cigarettes & Other tobacco products	50	10	60	220	50	270
Total	215	85	305	945	275	1,220

Separate estimates for cross-border shopping of individual tobacco products are not published. The total for all tobacco products is shown under 'cigarettes and other tobacco products'.

Notes:

1. Estimates of legitimate cross-border shopping are based on data from the International Passenger Survey conducted by the Office for National Statistics, for which the latest year available is 1997.
2. Estimates of cross-Channel smuggling are based on Customs own survey of returning sea and Tunnel passengers, most recently carried out in June 1998.
3. Figures have been independently rounded to £5 million. Components may not therefore sum to the totals shown.
4. Figures use Customs' assumptions that 70–80 per cent. of alcohol purchased abroad substitutes for similar purchases in the UK.

The estimates exclude any amounts for revenue lost on alcoholic drinks and tobacco products smuggled in freight consignments. Customs have not published any estimates for the extent of these activities for alcoholic drinks. Customs' assessment of the scale of all forms of tobacco smuggling, based on work still in progress to measure such smuggling, is given in reply to a written parliamentary question from my hon. Friend the Member for Preslie Pembroke (Jackie Lawrence) today.

Further details of the cross-border shopping and cross-Channel smuggling estimates are given in a technical report placed in the House of Commons library on 19 November 1998.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animals (Exports)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the result of discussions between his Department and the Home Office concerning possible criteria for further controls on the export of animals for use in experiments, which would enable his Department to take into account the treatment of animals in the country of destination before the issuing of official non-statutory health certification. [84186]

Mr. Rooker: Officials from both Departments have met to discuss this matter and will be meeting again this month. I am not yet in a position to report on how we plan to proceed since further discussion and consideration is needed.

Organophosphates

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action has been taken to implement the recommendation of the Carden Committee on Organophosphates, that a database of case histories of adverse reactions to organophosphates should be established. [84177]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 14 May 1999]: Officials are actively pursuing this issue as recommended by the Official Group on OPs. We await a fully worked up research proposal to enable a funding decision to be made.

Cattle (Berne Convention)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will bring forward proposals on measures to protect cattle through the Berne Convention. [84422]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have no plans to seek the inclusion of cattle in the Berne Convention. The aims of the Convention are to conserve wild flora and fauna and their natural habitats with particular emphasis given to endangered and vulnerable species.

DEFENCE

Eurofighter

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reports he has received from the manufacturers of Eurofighter concerning production delays; and if he will make a statement. [82524]

Mr. George Robertson: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 19 May 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about reports he has received from Eurofighter manufacturers concerning production delays. The matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Contracts for the production of the first tranche of 148 Eurofighter aircraft, including 55 for the Royal Air Force, were signed in September 1998. Since then industry has not submitted any reports concerning delays to the contracted production schedule. Prior to contract signature, however, industry advised that to maintain the delivery schedule it would be necessary to introduce lower functionality in early aircraft, with a series of increments leading to the full standard. Nations identified functionality standards that would satisfy the initial training requirement, and these were reflected in the contract. The availability of such aircraft will allow conversion training of pilots to go ahead as planned. All aircraft will be upgraded to the final standard within the agreed prices.

Ministerial Meetings (US)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many meetings he held with members and officials of the US Administration during his visit to the United States of America on 16 to 18 April; with whom he held the meetings and at what locations. [84314]

Mr. George Robertson: During my visit to the US from 16 to 18 April 1999 my only formal meeting was with Mr. William Cohen, the US Secretary for Defence. This meeting took place in the Marriott Hotel, Portland, Maine, on the morning of Saturday 17 April.

Scalp EG Missile

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of the Scalp EG missile is being built in the UK; and what agreements have been made on the United Kingdom's share of the work. [84516]

Mr. Spellar: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 19 May 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence which asked what percentage of the Scalp EG missile is being built in the UK; and what agreements have been made on the United Kingdom's share of the work. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Scalp EG is being procured by the French government for its own armed forces; it is essentially the same weapon as Storm Shadow, which we are procuring for the UK's forces, although there are certain unique requirements specific to each country. National procurements are being pursued under separate contracts: the UK's contract for Storm Shadow was placed with Matra BAe Dynamics UK Ltd in February 1997 and the French government's contract for Scalp EG was placed with Matra BAe Dynamics France S.A. in December 1997. The two parts of Matra BAe Dynamics act as separate prime contractors and hold the individual Storm Shadow and Scalp EG contracts for their respective national governments.

Although a Memorandum of Understanding exists between the UK and France covering co-operation in and co-ordination on technical matters of these missile programmes, this does not allow UK access to details of the French Industries' commercial arrangements and commitments. I am therefore unable to provide the information you seek.

I am sorry I cannot be more helpful.

Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel are based at the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency in Colchester; and how many staff have agreed to be transferred to Caversfield. [84648]

Mr. Doug Henderson: There are 148 personnel currently based at the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency's site at Colchester. A staff preference exercise is currently being conducted which, when completed, will indicate the number of staff who wish to transfer to Caversfield.

Operation Allied Force

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning the use of depleted uranium weapons in operation Allied Force against Yugoslavia. [84624]

Mr. George Robertson: I have received a number of representations concerning the use of depleted uranium munitions in operation Allied Force from Members of Parliament, including from my hon. Friend himself, and from some members of the public.

Chinook Helicopters

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if cockpit voice recorders will be fitted to the first six RAF Chinook helicopters by 30 June as set out in his answer of 16 November 1998, Official Report, columns 325–26. [84703]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 18 May 1999]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Robert Walmsley to Mr. Robert Key, dated 19 May 1999:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the fitting of cockpit voice recorders to RAF Chinook helicopters. The matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

Unfortunately, continuing technical difficulties associated with the development of the Health and Usage Monitoring System (HUMS), of which the cockpit voice recorders form an integral part, and with the integration of this equipment onto the Chinook Mk2/2a helicopters, have resulted in further slippage to the programme of which you were advised previously The difficulties have been addressed jointly by Smiths Industries, the prime contractor, and the Defence Procurement Agency. The project has passed key major milestones this year, including Design Acceptance and ground testing, and flight trials will commence shortly. We now plan on having the first six helicopters fitted by late November this year. The plan to fit the remainder of the Chinook fleet by the end of 2000, remains as previously advised.

Army Units (Germany)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the withdrawal of British army units from Germany. [84972]

Mr. George Robertson: I stressed in the Strategic Defence Review that the forward basing of ground forces in Germany would remain a key aspect of British defence policy. 1(UK) Armoured Division, with its three brigades, will continue to be stationed in Germany, together with United Kingdom Support Command (Germany) and the Headquarters of the Allied Command Europe Rapid Reaction Corps (ARRC) with its signals brigades. But the withdrawal of some units to the United Kingdom will mean that we have a reduced requirement for barracks accommodation and can plan to return to the German authorities at least one Army barracks. The Army has now concluded its studies of its barracks requirement, and I am in a position to give a clearer indication of the likely impact, and timescale, of these moves, which are, to an extent, dependent on the timescale within which refurbished accommodation becomes available in the United Kingdom.

The process of withdrawal will be phased and we do not expect the full withdrawal of the about 2,500 British troops that I announced to be completed until 2005 at the earliest. However, barracks are now available in the UK to accommodate 1st Royal Tank Regiment, currently located at Paderborn.

The plan is therefore to withdraw this unit by August of this year. To make best use of the barracks vacated in Germany, and to meet our operational requirements more effectively, we intend to move 35 Engineer Regiment, currently based in Hameln, to Paderborn. Internal moves within Hameln will be initiated, which will enable the eventual handback of Bindon Barracks to the Federal authorities by 2002.

Our plans for the later phases of the withdrawal are much less certain at the moment and many details have yet to be worked out. Our current assumptions are that there will be two further phases, the first involving the surrender of a barracks in Osnabruck following the withdrawal of an armoured regiment from there. We do not expect this second phase to commence before the year 2001, or to be complete until some time after that.

The third and final phase will involve the withdrawal of an armoured regiment from 7th Armoured Brigade which is based in Hohne. In this case, it is expected that there will be a regrouping of units of the 7th Armoured Brigade with the result that the requirement for Trenchard Barracks, Celle, will cease, although some married quarters are likely to be retained. This last phase is unlikely to take place before the year 2005.

Finally, I should say that these withdrawal plans are predicated on our current level of operational commitments in the Balkans, and that a change in the situation there may affect our basing plans.

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers involved in media relations were employed within his Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84192]

Mr. George Robertson [holding answer 18 May 1999]: Detailed information on the numbers of permanent civil servants employed in Departmental Press Offices during the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in a memorandum dated 16 June 1998 to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report on The Government Information and Communication Service (HC770) in July 1998. A copy is in the Library of the House. The number of civil servants, excluding administrative support staff, permanently employed in the MOD Press Office on media relations work on 1 May 1999 was 10. In addition three military officers were assigned to the MOD Press Office.

The two Special Advisers in this Department have ad hoc contact with the media but neither is specifically employed in media relations.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Attorney-General what measures he is taking to improve the (a) speed and (b) effectiveness of the Crown Prosecution Service. [84324]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has been piloting a number of initiatives to reduce delay as part of the inter-agency Reducing Delays Initiative. The pilots were completed at the end of March of 1999 and are now being evaluated. The evaluation report is expected in July 1999 and Ministers will then take final decisions on national implementation of the initiatives. The CPS is also continuing to make good progress in implementing the Glidewell Report, which made a number of recommendations aimed at improving the effectiveness of the Service. From April 1999, the CPS has been reorganised into 42 geographical Areas, each headed by a new Chief Crown Prosecutor. This re-organisation, announced when the Government first took office, represents a significant step towards improving the effectiveness of the CPS.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

EU Culture Ministers Meeting

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the issues which he (i) plans to raise and (ii) expects other states to raise at the Culture Ministers meeting on 18 and 19 May. [84677]

Mr. Alan Howarth [holding answer 18 May 1999]: I will be attending the informal meeting of EU Ministers responsible for cultural and audiovisual issues, taking place in Weimar on 18 and 19 May.

The main issues which will be raised at that meeting are the Culture 2000 programme, culture and employment, European identity and history, self-regulation of the media at the European level, and the results of the consultations on the European Commission green paper on convergence.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the need for amendments to the (a) national minimum wage and (b) working time legislation on the basis of experience since their implementation. [84342]

Mr. Byers: The national minimum wage has been in operation for almost seven weeks and so it is too early to make a considered assessment of whether any major amendments might be required in the light of experience. However, the Government propose to make an amendment to the National Minimum Wage Act 1998 to exempt members of Intentional Communities (religious and spiritual residential organisations) following the Low Pay Commission's report. The amendment will be introduced through the Employment Relations Bill which is currently before Parliament. Adjustments to implementation procedures may also be made as necessary.

With regard to the Working Time Directive, we will issue guidance that will address the questions that have been most frequently asked since the regulations came into force.

Electronic Commerce

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he plans to publish a draft bill on electronic commerce. [84341]

Mr. Byers: As Her Majesty announced in Her Gracious Speech on the opening of Parliament, the Government intend to introduce legislation on electronic commerce during the current session.

Milk Market

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission into the milk market; and if he will make a statement. [84122]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 14 May 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 6 May 1999, Official Report, columns 1069–70, to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath).

Electricity Meters

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many households in the UK use coin-operated meters for electricity. [84661]

Mr. Battle: The latest Office of Electricity Regulation statistics (for the last quarter of 1998) show that there were 661 coin meters in use in Scotland, England and Wales. I have asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to provide the right hon. Member with the relevant figures for Northern Ireland, and to place a copy of her response in the Library of the House.

EU Research Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the agenda for the EU Research Council on 20 May. [84676]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 18 May 1999]: The agenda for the formal session of EU Research Council on 20 May consists of:

1. Approval of the adoption of decisions concerning the association of applicant countries (CCEE and Cyprus) with the Fifth Framework Programme for European Research and Technological Development.
2. Consideration of a draft Council Resolution on "Women and Science: Mobilising women to enrich European research".
3. Any Other Business:
   (a) the Commission will provide information on the competitiveness of European enterprises in the face of globalisation, with regard to action to be taken on its Communication.
   (b) the Presidency will provide information on scientific and technical co-operation with the Mediterranean partner countries.
   (c) the Commission will provide information on decommissioning of the Joint Research Centre's obsolete nuclear facilities.

There will also be an informal afternoon session at which the Presidency aims to stimulate a wide-ranging debate on the future of European research. Ministers will be joined by seven representatives of industry and academia who will speak briefly on key issues in European research.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Public Records (EEC Entry Negotiations)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the restricted marking classification of his Department's internal history of the negotiations on United Kingdom entry to the European Economic Community. [83398]

Ms Quin: The text referred to is the "Report on the Negotiations for entry into the European Economic Community" written in 1972 by Sir Con O'Neill. The text was classified as Confidential. This report is expected to be published later this year, ahead of its scheduled release in 2003 under the 30 year rule.

EU Defence Policy Document

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the document presented to the General Affairs Council of the European Union by the Presidency concerning a future European Defence Policy and capability, in co-operation with NATO; what discussion there has been in Council of the proposals; and what consultation Her Majesty's Government propose to hold. [84315]

Ms Quin: The German Presidency are in the course of preparing a report on European defence, which will be submitted to European Union Heads of Government at the Cologne European Council, after discussion at the General Affairs Council. A copy of the final version will be placed in the Library once it is available.

EU Russia Co-operation Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the agenda for the meeting of Co-operation Council with Russia on 18 May. [84699]

Ms Quin [holding answer 18 May 1999]: The provisional agenda for the EU/Russia Co-operation Council on 17 May was as follows:

1. Opening statements
2. Adoption of the agenda
3. Approval of the minutes of the first Co-operation Council
4. Common EU Strategy towards Russia
5. Russian Strategy of development of relations with EU
6. Common foreign and security policy according to Amsterdam Treaty; prospects of further development of EU/Russia political dialogue
7. Developing EU/Russia relations in the framework of the Partnership and Co-operation Agreement
8. International issues of mutual concern
9. Refocussing TACIS programme and member states' bilateral assistance programmes
10. Other business
11. Closing statements.

European Economic Area Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the agenda for the EEA Council of 18 May. [84697]

Ms Quin [holding answer 18 May 1999]: The agenda for the 11th EEA Council on 18 May was as follows:

1. Adoption of the agenda
2. Approval of the minutes of the 8th and 9th and 10th meetings of the EEA Council
3. Progress Report by the EEA Joint Committee
4. Resolutions adopted by the EEA Joint Parliamentary Committee at its meeting on 16 March 1999
5. Assessment of the overall functioning of the EEA Agreement
6. Resolutions adopted by the EEA Consultative Committee at its meeting on 11 March 1999
7. Enlargement of the European Union and the EEA
8. Review of developments of European integration and regional issues
9. EEA Financial Mechanism
10. Adoption of the conclusions of the EEA Council
11. Other business.

Kurdish Self-determination

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in relation to Kurdish self-determination. [84428]

Ms Quin: We fully respect the territorial integrity of all the regional states with sizeable kurdish populations (ie Turkey, Iraq, Iran and Syria).

With relation to Turkey, we have repeatedly urged the Turkish Government to address the social and economic problems of south-east Turkey, in order to bring an end to conflict in the region. We believe that, by addressing the aspirations of the local population, including the Kurdish population, the Turkish authorities can bring about a peaceful resolution of the conflict.

In Iraq, we are committed to supporting peace and stability in northern Iraq, and are one of the co-sponsors of the Kurdish reconciliation process there. We wish to see autonomy (not independence) for the Iraqi Kurds. The Kurds have made clear that this is what they want.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Foods

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he has responded to the Local Government Association statement on genetically modified foods. [75496]

Mr. Meacher: Yes, I have responded to the Local Government Association statement on genetically modified foods and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the organisations represented on the Scientific Steering Group for the field-scale evaluations of the ecological effects of genetically modified crops. [83259]

Mr. Meacher: The precise membership of the scientific steering committee has not yet been finalised. However, it will be made up of independent scientific experts with experience in a range of appropriate disciplines, including invertebrate and plant ecology, statistical analysis, pesticide use, agronomy, conservation and an expert from English Nature. The membership of the steering committee should be confirmed shortly and it is hoped that it will hold its first meeting in early June.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many regional development agencies have changed their name in the past five years. [84493]

Mr. Meale: Six of the Regional Development Agencies have changed their names. The names of each of the Regional Development Agencies are provided in the table.

Region	Name of the Regional Development Agency
North East	One North East
North West	North West Development Agency
Yorkshire and Humber	Yorkshire Forward
West Midlands	Advantage West Midlands
East Midlands	East Midlands Development Agency
East of England	East of England Development Agency
South East	South East England Development Agency
South West	South West of England Regional Development Agency

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he proposes to designate regional chambers for the purposes of regional development agencies; and if he will make a statement. [84973]

Mr. Prescott: I am pleased to announce that we have today issued:

a direction to the East Midlands Development Agency designating the East Midlands Regional Assembly as its regional chamber;

a direction to the North West Development Agency designating the North West Regional Assembly as its regional chamber and; a direction to Advantage West Midlands designating the West Midlands Regional Chamber as its regional chamber.

Section 8 of the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998 provides that, if the Secretary of State is of the opinion that there is a body which is representative of those in the RDA's area with an interest in its work, and that body is suitable to be given the role of regional chamber for the RDA, he may designate it.

RDAs must take full account of regional interests. Regional chambers will provide a mechanism through which RDAs can take account of regional views and account for their activities. Ministers expect that each RDA will have regard to the chamber's view in preparing it strategy, consult the chamber on its corporate plan and give an account of its performance to the chamber.

I am currently considering applications for designation from bodies in other regions.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is the total cost, including consultancy fees, for changing its name to each regional development agency which has done so in the past five years. [84492]

Mr. Meale: Section 26 of the Regional Development Agencies Act 1998 provides for a change of name of the agency from that specified under Section 1 of the Act. The change of name is a matter for the Boards. I understand that, where consultants were involved, it was part of their wider consideration of corporate image and communications strategy for the Regional Development Agency and the cost associated with the name change were not separately identified.

Stop Fuming Campaign

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much his Department has spent on the Stop Fuming campaign; and if he will make a statement. [84405]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Stop Fuming campaign run by the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders encourages car owners to undertake regular exhaust emission checks. Last year, the campaign linked with the messages being disseminated through my Department's "are you doing your bit?" campaign. My Department produced a leaflet at a cost of £366 to ensure that our messages were jointly reinforced. The SMMT distributed that through their members. We understand the SMMT are planning further campaign activity this autumn.

Transport (Wheelchair Access)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will introduce legislation to prevent the surcharging of wheelchair-using passengers on the cost of loading and unloading wheelchairs onto aircraft. [84407]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have no current plans to introduce legislation, but if the hon. Member wishes to write to me about particular instances of surcharging, I will be glad to consider them.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provision has been made for access for wheelchair users to (a) the London Underground and (b) the Jubilee Line; and if he will make a statement. [84406]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The existing London Underground network has approximately 40 stations with step free access.

The Government are very keen to improve access to the transport system in London. However, full accessibility cannot happen overnight, especially on London Underground where most of the stations are old and not designed with access for mobility impaired people in mind.

London Transport is developing a scheme to improve access to a core network of 68 Underground stations. This will be taken forward under the Public Private Partnership for the Underground.

The Jubilee line extension will be fully accessible and will enable wheelchair users to travel from mainline stations to Waterloo, Stratford and London Bridge stations to the Millennium Exhibition at North Greenwich.

Freight Facilities Grant

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many grants have been (a) applied for and (b) awarded for coastal shipping routes under the terms of the expansion of the freight facilities grant. [84322]

Ms Glenda Jackson: None. Extension of the current Freight Facilities Grant scheme will require primary legislation, for which Parliamentary time has not yet been available.

Alternative Fuels

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what efforts the Government are making to advise the British transportation industry on (a) the availability and (b) the applicability of alternative fuels [83985]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 17 May 1999]: The Government are keen to provide more information and advice on the environmental merits of different fuel and vehicle technologies, to enable fleet operators and private motorists to select cleaner, more fuel-efficient vehicles. Detailed advice on the availability and applicability of alternative fuels is already provided by the Energy Savings Trust's Powershift programme, which is funded by my Department. The Cleaner Vehicles Task Force intends to provide further information later this year about the merits of alternative fuel and vehicle technologies which are likely to emerge over the next decade. Several trade and commercial organisations also provided information on the availability of different alternative fuels.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what requirements his Department (a) has set down and (b) proposes to set down for local authorities for the purchasing of motor vehicles in respect of the use of alternative fuels. [83986]

Ms Glenda Jackson [holding answer 17 May 1999]: My Department is actively considering setting targets for the proportion of low emission vehicles that local authorities should try to achieve in their fleets.

Local authorities are not currently required to purchase alternatively fuelled vehicles. They are, however, obliged to review and assess air quality in their areas. Where they conclude that the objectives set out in the National Air Quality Strategy will not be achieved, they must designate air quality management areas and put in place action plans to improve air quality. One measure that local authorities could include in such action plans is to reduce emissions from their own fleets through the use of alternative fuels or cleaner conventionally fuelled vehicles.

Ear Protectors

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it a duty on employers to ensure that ear protectors are worn by persons operating pneumatic drills; and if he will make a statement. [84627]

Mr. Meale: Persons who operate pneumatic drills are already covered by the provision of the Noise at Work Regulations 1989 which require employers to reduce the risk of damage to hearing from exposure to noise and to take specific actions, including providing suitable ear protectors to employees at specified levels of daily personal noise exposure.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the construction cost of (a) phase one and (b) phase two of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link. [84512]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The estimated construction cost of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (in January 1997 prices) is £1.67 billion for phase one and £2.5 billion for phase two.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how the level of Government guarantee funding for (a) phase one and (b) phase two of the Channel Tunnel Rail Link was determined; and if he will make a statement. [84513]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The Government's participation in the Channel Tunnel Rail Link was assessed using a model of London and Continental Railway's future finances. £3.75 billion of Government backed debt was guaranteed with first element (£2.65 billion) raised in February this year to ensure funding is available for both the financing and construction of Section 1 and to cover forecast losses on Eurostar. The remaining £1.10 billion will help fund section 2.

A130

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what alternative options were appraised using the New Approach to Appraisal before the decision to authorise the A130 PFI road in Essex; and if he will place in the Library copies of the appraisal summary tables for the scheme and the other options which were appraised. [84427]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Essex County Council's A130 Bypass PFI project was appraised using the New Approach to Appraisal (NATA). NATA requires the problems with the existing road to be stated together with the options which have been considered for addressing them. Essex County Council did consider smaller scale local schemes but concluded they would not provide the regeneration, environmental and safety benefits that the new A130 Bypass will provide. All options were considered at the 1992 Public Inquiry which found in favour of the A130 Bypass route. Given these circumstances, an appraisal summary table was produced only for the A130 Bypass, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Railway Stations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the railway stations expected to open in 1999. [84423]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Railtrack tell me that the following railway stations are expected to open in 1999:

West Ham
Braintree Freeport
Beauly
Dunfermline Queen Margarets
West Brompton
Luton Parkway
Horwich Parkway.

Assaults (Railways)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many attacks on individuals occurred (i) on trains and (ii) at stations during (a) the last year for which figures are available, (b) 1990 and (c) 1995 broken down by train operating company responsibility. [84424]

Ms Glenda Jackson: The number of attacks on individuals for the years 1990–91, 1995–96 and 1998–99 are provided in the first table. These figures include crimes of violence against a person, sexual assaults and robberies. The British Transport Police do not hold these data broken down by train operating company or whether the crimes were on or off-train, but a previous search carried out in 1997–98 does show the percentages of on/off-train crime and these are shown in the second table.

Year	National Rail	London Underground	Totals
1990–91	2,852	1,646	4,498
1995–96	3,336	1,269	4,605
1998–99	3,141	1,164	4,305

Percentage

Year	On-train	Off-train
1997–98
National Rail	37.8	62.2
London Underground	50.6	49.4

Train Operating Companies

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy not to agree to franchise extensions for train operating companies where such proposals involve the closure of (a) stations and (b) lines. [84425]

Ms Glenda Jackson: At the Rail Summit on 25 February 1999, we made it clear that renegotiations must deliver substantial passenger benefits and value for the taxpayer; and we set out a number of criteria that will have to be satisfied. The closure of stations and lines does not figure in these criteria and is subject to an extensive statutory procedure under the Railways Act 1993.

Rough Sleepers

Ms Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people are sleeping rough in England. [85035]

Ms Armstrong: We estimate that, as at June 1998, there were 1,850 people sleeping rough in England on any single night, including 621 in Greater London.

These figures are the first detailed estimate of rough sleeping in England. They have been calculated on a basis agreed with the voluntary sector, using local authority data from local street counts and estimates provided by local authorities. Full details are given in the table, which includes the results of street counts in every area which has made such a count and (where no count has been made) all estimates above the lowest estimate band of 0–10. Numbers are shown in descending size order, by count and then estimate.

The most robust information available is provided by local single night street counts. In 1996 DETR issued guidance to all local authorities on how to undertake street counts, based on a standard methodology developed in conjunction with Shelter and other voluntary groups. As well as encouraging all authorities to consider the need for counts, the Department has actively pursued this approach in all areas where information suggests there may be a significant number of rough sleepers (ie at least 10 on any single night). As a result of DETR and voluntary sector efforts, counts have been undertaken in 93 local authorities across England since 1996; another 4 authorities undertook counts in 1995 before the guidance was issued. Further information on rough sleeping in other areas is available from the estimates of the number of people sleeping rough on a single night supplied by local authorities annually since 1996 as part of my Department's Housing Investment Programme (HIP); the most recent figures available relate to June 1998.

The methodology for producing a national estimate of numbers sleeping rough involves aggregating figures for individual local authority districts to generate a total for England. Wherever street counts have been conducted these data are used, and they are supplemented by figures derived from local authority HIP estimates in all other areas. As HIP estimates are provided within bands rather than as single figures (eg 0 to 10, 11 to 20 etc), these are converted into a single figure by assuming that the lowest point within the band is the most representative figure; this assumption is justified by clear DETR experience that local authorities almost invariably overestimate the scale of rough sleeping in their district until they undertake a street count,

The national estimate of 1,850 thus arrived at provides the best possible indication currently available of the scale of rough sleeping. However, the accuracy of the estimate is reliant on the quality of the information reported to DETR by individual local authorities. The Department will continue to seek to improve the quality of information on rough sleeping by encouraging all local authorities to estimate the numbers of rough sleepers in their area; by investigating any claims by local agencies that they have evidence of a local problem that does not show up in the HIP estimates; and by encouraging areas where there is a known rough sleeping problem to undertake street counts at appropriate intervals as shown, depending on the size of the counted local rough sleeping population:

(a) Areas with substantial numbers of rough sleepers (20 or more)—At least two street counts a year;

(b) Areas with significant numbers (between 10 and 19)—At least one street count a year;

(c) Areas with low numbers (under 10) or no rough sleepers—Local authorities to report estimates through the HIP returns, and DETR to ensure that street counts are undertaken in some areas to spot check the validity of estimates, especially in areas which had previously recorded a significant problem.

This approach should provide the basis for discerning trends in the numbers of rough sleepers over time, and thus for measuring the success of action to tackle the problem of rough sleeping. However, DETR will, in conjunction with the voluntary sector, continue to encourage the 32 local authorities who have estimated a significant local rough sleeping population but not yet undertaken a street count to undertake a count to generate more robust information on the scale of the local problem and to improve the quality of the national estimate. DETR will also encourage the 69 local authorities who have neither carried out a count nor provided a HIP estimate to produce better information on the numbers of people sleeping rough in their area.

We will in future publish estimates of the total number of people sleeping rough in England twice a year, showing the position each June and December. To help put this information in context, we will also monitor the number of new rough sleepers coming onto the streets over time, and record the achievements of Government-funded activity in terms of work by voluntary sector agencies to prevent rough sleeping and help people to move off the streets.

Planning

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he proposes to issue new guidance to local authorities on the training of councillors involved in planning decisions. [85053]

Mr. Caborn: In partnership with the Local Government Association, the Improvement and Development Agency and the Royal Town Planning Institute, I have today issued a leaflet to all councillors in England, giving guidance on the training which they should be undertaking in planning issues. Planning is a crucial local authority function involving the consideration and balancing of complex issues. It has a central and positive role to play in delivering services to local communities. However, it can also raise sensitive propriety issues. It is vital, therefore, that those carrying out this important task are properly equipped to do so.

The proposed syllabus identifies the key topics on which training should be given. We have also emphasised the importance of councillors being given a continuing programme of planning training to keep their knowledge up to date. The leaflet is being issued as part of my Modernising Planning Initiative to help improve the effectiveness of local authority planning services. It is also intended to help councils implement the recommendation of the Third Report of the Committee on Standards in Public Life (Cm 3702–1) that "All members of an authority's planning committee (or equivalent) should receive training in the planning system ... ".

We have, however, gone further than this. All elected members will have contact with planning and we have therefore given guidance on the training needs of all councillors depending on their particular role.

Copies of the leaflet have been placed in the House Libraries.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Iraq

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the Government's policy on supervision of aid to Iraq; and what steps the Government have taken at the United Nations to pursue its policy. [84411]

Clare Short: The UN oil-for-food programme is the largest source of humanitarian assistance for the Iraqi people. It was established in 1996 under UN Security Council Resolution 986, and is implemented largely by the Government of Iraq under the supervision of the UN Office of Iraq Programme (OIP). It is much less effective than it could be if the Government of Iraq wished to provide effective humanitarian assistance to the people of Iraq. The UK maintains regular contact with the OIP to monitor progress on the oil-for-food programme. We have proposed a number of practical improvements to the programme, many of which have already been accepted by the UN Humanitarian Panel. We have included our proposals in a draft Resolution, which is now before the Security Council for its consideration.

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will estimate the amount of international aid dispatched to Iraq in the last five years; and if she will make a statement on the method of its distribution. [84412]

Clare Short: From 1993–1997, (the last years for which figures are available) international donors (bilateral and multilateral) provided an estimated £918 million in humanitarian assistance to Iraq. This figure does not include the UN oil-for-food programme, which provides the majority of humanitarian supplies to Iraq, and is funded through the sale of Iraqi oil. International donors usually distribute their aid through UN organisations, such as UNICEF and FAO, the European Commission Humanitarian Organisation (ECHO), and the International Committee of the Red Cross, and Non-Governmental Organisations such as CARE International, and Premiere Urgence. The Iraqi authorities permit only seven NGOs to operate in Baghdad-controlled Iraq.

Mr. Fitzpatrick: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the impact of United Nations sanctions on people in Iraq. [84410]

Clare Short: There has been a marked decline in living standards in Iraq since the Gulf War. The economy has stagnated, public health and education services have declined and infrastructure (water and sanitation, electricity) has seriously deteriorated. Food and medicines have always been exempted from sanctions, but it was only in 1996 that the Government of Iraq agreed to implement the oil-for-food programme. This has provided invaluable humanitarian relief, but has been less effective than it could be because the Government of Iraq have not implemented the programme effectively. The UK is currently working to achieve an improvement in the operation of the programme.

Montserrat

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans her Department has to provide assistance for information technology in schools in Montserrat; and if she will make a statement. [84364]

Clare Short: The three year public sector investment programme, agreed with the Government of Montserrat (GoM) as part of the Country Policy Plan signed in January this year, includes a project to rehabilitate existing school facilities. The actual detail of this project is still being prepared by the GoM. I will write to the right hon. Member when their plans are finalised.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Government of Montserrat about the cost and constructing time of the new Government headquarters temporary buildings; and if she will make a statement. [84361]

Mr. Foulkes: The original concept for the new Government Headquarters (GHQ) had been for a basic, only temporary, facility. This was planned in the belief that the Government of Montserrat (GoM) would be able to re-establish itself in Plymouth. However, the subsequent escalation of volcanic activity meant that this would not be possible, at least in the foreseeable future. Therefore, the GHQ needed to be constructed in a more permanent fashion and with more extensive facilities than originally envisaged—thus increasing the cost. An audit, earlier this year, found that most of the increases in cost were unavoidable. I wrote on 15 March to the Chairman of the International Development Committee about the audit and copied my letter and the report to the Library of the House. I will send copies to the right hon. Gentleman. My officials have had on-going discussions with the GoM to ensure that the additional work is completed in the shortest possible time, commensurate with keeping the increased costs to a minimum.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money her Department has spent on consultancy work in connection with Montserrat in each of the last two years; and how much has been budgeted for the current year. [84363]

Clare Short: We spent approximately £2.7 million on consultants from the Montserrat programme in 1997/98 and £1.8 million in 1998/99. We have budgeted £1.8 million for the current year.

Sir Alastair Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Government of Montserrat about mortgages on properties in the exclusion zone; and if she will make a statement. [84362]

Clare Short: We have agreed that the Government of Montserrat can reschedule mortgage payments owed to them on properties in the exclusion zone, on a case by case basis, reflecting the ability of each borrower to meet the repayment schedule.

Glaucoma

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the incidence of glaucoma in developing countries; what assessment she has made of the cost of treating the condition; and if she will make a statement. [84628]

Clare Short: No estimate for glaucoma incidence alone is available, and as treatments for the condition vary widely there is no reliable cost estimate per case. The World Health Organisation (WHO) estimates that glaucoma, cataracts and trachoma account for more than 70 per cent. of the 36 million cases of blindness in the world. Nine out of ten of these cases are in the developing world. We have committed £400,000 to the WHO's Social Change and Mental Health work under which "Vision 2020—the Right to Sight" initiative falls, and which aims to eliminate avoidable blindness by the year 2020.

Women (Higher Education)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support Her Majesty's Government provide to encourage access by women to higher education in developing countries. [84430]

Clare Short: We make clear in our White Paper in November 1997 that we are strongly committed to the international goals of universal primary education by 2015 and gender equity in primary and secondary education by 2005. Our education programme focuses on these priorities. They reflect strong international evidence that investment in the education of girls is the single, most effective way to reduce poverty. The Department for International Development (DFID) is committed to supporting governments who give priority to the education of girls within their education systems.

Clearly, as more countries achieve universal primary education there will be greater demand for secondary and higher education. We will work with governments to help find ways to meet this demand. We provide support at higher education level through scholarship schemes and academic links. Our academic links programme has earmarked funds to encourage participation by women and all links are organised to ensure that they are properly represented.

Our support for the Commonwealth of Learning's efforts to develop ways of delivering education through distance and open learning systems will also facilitate increasing access by women in developing countries to higher education.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rate Collection Agency

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Rate Collection Agency in 1999–2000. [84929]

Marjorie Mowlam: For 1999–2000, the following performance targets have been set for the RCA.

Collection and Recovery of Rates

To collect 97.55 per cent. of the gross domestic collectable rate, (excluding late assessments) by 31 March 2000.

To collect 98.80 per cent. of the gross non-domestic collectable rate (excluding late assessments) by 31 March 2000.

To achieve a reduction of 1 per cent. in the real value of the unit costs of collecting rates per hereditament.

To generate refunds to 98 per cent of ratepayers to entitled within 14 days of credits being identified.

Housing Benefit Administration

To process by 31 March 1999, 96 per cent. of applications for the incoming year received from Housing Benefit recipients before 15 March 2000.

To achieve a reduction of 1 per cent. in the real value of unit costs or processing Housing Benefit cases.

To assess 97 per cent. of Housing Benefit claims free of error.

Child Support Agency

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she plans to publish details of the targets for the Child Support Agency; and if she will make a statement. [84930]

Mr. McFall: The Child Support Agency will publish its 1999–2000 Strategic and Business Plan today. Copies will be placed in the Library.

The targets that I have set for the Child Support Agency for 1999–2000 are set out:

Case Compliance, to measure the proportion of cases where the non resident parents are paying child maintenance, a value of 74 per cent.

Cash Compliance, to measure the proportion of the total amount of child maintenance which is due for payment that is actually being paid, a value of 72 per cent.

Accuracy, 80 per cent. value accuracy of all cases checked.

Minimum Service Standards.

clear 68 per cent. of new Maintenance Assessments in 20 weeks;

97 per cent. of payment to be made to PWC within 10 working days;

88 per cent. of review assessments to be made within 12 weeks; reply to 90 per cent. of letters within 10 working days;

see 97 per cent. of clients within 10 minutes of appointment; acknowledge 90 per cent. of complaints within 2 working days; send a full reply within 10 working days in 75 per cent. cases;

80 per cent. of callers answered first time by Client Help Lines;

90 per cent. of customers surveyed on quality call backs (following contact with National Enquiry Line, Client Help Lines and Face-to-Face) to be at least satisfied with the service they have received, and to reduce the number of complaints received compared to current caseload to less than 0.28 per cent.

The targets in the Business Plan present the Agency with a challenging but attainable objective which should lead to improvements both in customer service and in the maintenance flowing between parents.

TREASURY

EU Withholding Tax

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date the current proposal for the introduction of a European-wide withholding tax was first raised at a meeting of a Council of Ministers. [84575]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 18 May 1999]: The Commission's current proposal for a Directive was made on 20 May 1998, following a period of discussions initiated by the Commission at the Verona informal ECOFIN in April 1996. It is a revised version of an earlier draft Directive which was originally published in 1989 and still on the table when this Government came into office.

Share Fishermen

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rules for payment are planned for the introduction of Working Families Tax Credit to share fishermen who may have intermittent work periods due to (a) vessel breakdown, (b) lack of quota and (c) adverse weather. [83633]

Dawn Primarolo: Share fishermen will be entitled to apply for Working Families Tax Credit and will be subject to the same rules as those applying to workers with a pattern of intermittent work. WFTC will be awarded for a fixed 26 week period and once the award commences it will not be affected by changes to income during that period.

Invest to Save Initiative

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made on the Government's Invest to Save Initiative. [83653]

Mr. Milburn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Preseli Pembrokeshire (Ms Lawrence) on 13 January 1999, Official Report, columns 193–95. This lists the projects which were allocated resources from the Invest to Save Budget following the first bidding round.

Guidance has now been issued for a second bidding round, which will provide funding for new projects from 2000. Bids are invited from all public sector bodies and expressions of interest should be submitted to the Treasury by 31 May 1999.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Census Returns

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list (a) the linear metres of storage space occupied by each of the pre-1992 decennial census returns for England and Wales, (b) the actual costs, at current prices, of micro-filming each of the pre-1901 census returns and (c) the average micro-film cost per linear metre, at current prices. [84494]

Mr. Vaz: (a) The space in linear metres occupied by each of the pre-1922 decennial census returns for England and Wales is as follows:

1841: 101

1851: 164

1861: 146

1871: 146

1881: 140

1891: 173

1901: 122

1911: 1,924

1921: 1,375.

(b) It would not be possible to calculate the cost of micro-filming each of the pre-1901 census returns without examining them in detail, which would incur disproportionate cost.

(c) It would not be possible to calculate the average micro-film cost per linear metre without examining them in detail, which would incur disproportionate cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Benefit (Shrewsbury and Atcham)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families have received the increase in child benefit for the eldest child in the Shrewsbury and Atcham constituency; and if he will make a statement. [83922]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Benefit is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, Peter Mathison. I have asked him to reply to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 18 May 1999:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked Peter Mathison to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many families have received the increase in child benefit for the eldest child in the Shrewsbury and Atcham constituency. As Mr. Mathison is away from the office on leave, I am replying.

Unfortunately the information to identify families, by region, who are receiving Child Benefit is not readily available. These figures could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

I would like to take this opportunity to explain the current rates of Child Benefit in force from April 1999. They are £14.40 for the eldest child and £9.60 for each subsequent child. The increase for the eldest child includes the extra £2.50 a week announced in the March 1998 budget, in addition to the April 1999 increase. This is an overall increase of £3.25 for a family with two children.

I am sorry that I could not be of more help on this occasion but I am glad to have had the opportunity to comment.

Share Fishermen

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what rules for payment of Jobseeker's Allowance apply to share fishermen who are temporarily out of work by reason of (a) vessel breakdown (b) lack of quota and (c) adverse weather. [83632]

Angela Eagle: In order to receive contribution-based Jobseeker's Allowance a share fisherman must show that he has not failed to take up a reasonable opportunity of employment as a share fisherman. If he satisfies this condition, Jobseeker's Allowance may be paid. Examples of where this condition would count as satisfied include where the whole fleet has been unable to put to sea because of bad weather, if a share fisherman has fished his quota, or if he is undertaking necessary repairs to his boat.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if agreement has been reached on a standard earnings form for use by the Benefits Agency/Inland Revenue when calculating entitlement to Jobseeker's Allowance/Working Families Tax Credit by share fishermen. [83634]

Angela Eagle: A new form to collect earnings information from share fishermen is currently under development. The form has been developed in consultation with organisations representing the interests of share fishermen. The intention is that the form should be trialled in a few areas before it is used nationally.

Working Families Tax Credit is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will establish arrangements to enable share fishermen to confirm details of Jobseeker's Allowance claims in place of making fresh claims on condition that the repeat Jobseeker's Allowance claim is made within 12 weeks of the original application. [83635]

Angela Eagle: From June, share fishermen claiming Jobseeker's Allowance will be able to use a shorter claim form where there is a break of six weeks or less between claims.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what work is being undertaken in the course of the current pilot schemes examining the introduction of the single work-focused gateway to the special circumstances of share fishermen. [83636]

Angela Eagle: The unique position of share fishermen in the benefit system will continue in the single work-focused gateway pilots. Share fishermen who go through the single work-focused gateway will be given the same help and support as other claimants in their efforts to find work.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make an official visit to Exmouth to meet representatives of the fishing industry to discuss the operation of Jobseeker's Allowance and Working Families Tax Credit to claims made by share fishermen. [83637]

Angela Eagle: It would be helpful if, in the first instance, the hon. Member would ask local representatives from the fishing industry to write to me setting out any issues that they would like to raise about claims for Jobseeker's Allowance from share fishermen.

Working Families Tax Credit is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Support System

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his current estimate of the cost of providing (a) accommodation, (b) support for essential living needs and (c) expenses incurred in connection with (i) a claim for asylum and (ii) an appeal made in relation to it for each asylum seeker receiving support under his proposed asylum support system. [83956]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are not yet in a position to estimate the cost of providing accommodation. We shall shortly be setting up arrangements for the supply of accommodation by local authorities, housing associations and the private sector. The accommodation will be furnished and will be supplied with essential equipment and utensils. Council tax and utility charges will be paid separately. The proposed levels of support for other essential living needs and expenses incurred in connection with a claim for asylum or appeal were set out in the Information Document published on 22 March.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost of establishing the administrative machinery for the proposed Home Office asylum support system. [83960]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The consultants KPMG were engaged in February to consider the size and administrative costs of the administrative machinery for the new Asylum Support Directorate. Their report is being assessed. Administrative costs will cover not only the staff and other resources for the Asylum Support Directorate, but also grants to the voluntary sector for their contribution to the new arrangements.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications for asylum were (i) received and (ii) determined in (a) February, (b) March and (c) April; [83953]

(2) what proportion of asylum applications made (a) before 1 July 1993 and (b) between 1 July 1993 and 31 December 1995 have resulted in the granting of leave to remain under the asylum backlog procedures; [83952]

(3) how many asylum applications were outstanding in (a) each of the last six months for which figures are available and (b) May 1997. [83949]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is not possible to reply to these Questions within the normal period because of the volume of Questions to be answered on immigration and asylum statistics.

I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of clothing allowance he plans to make available to (a) adult and (b) child asylum seekers, whose application has not been processed within six months; and if he will make a statement. [84041]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None. The vouchers and cash which will be given to asylum seekers are designed to meet the cost of essential living needs, including clothing, which are not being provided in kind, such as utilities. However, we are contributing to consider carefully the representations made in the Special Standing Committee on the Immigration and Asylum Bill and elsewhere.

Immigration and Nationality Enquiry Bureau

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many telephone lines there are for the public switchboard at Lunar House; how many telephone calls were received on average each day in the last 12 months; and how many staff man the telephone lines between 9 am and 5 pm. [84102]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are currently 30 lines open into the Immigration and Nationality Enquiry Bureau (INEB).

The average number of calls into the INEB each day for the five months from 7 December (the date on which the new system went live) was 41,462. Figures are not available for the seven preceding months, when the old system operated.

During the month of April, an average of 35 staff each day were logged in to the telephone system and were available to answer telephone calls. The average number of staff in post in the INEB as a whole during April was 73. This figure includes managers and staff engaged in answering written inquiries.

Kosovar Asylum Seekers

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what account will be taken of the confiscation from Kosovar Albanians of documents issued by the former Yugoslav authorities when deciding what penalties to apply to (a) Kosovar Albanians seeking asylum in the UK and (b) carriers who transport Kosovar Albanians to the UK; [84216]

(2) what penalties may be applied to Kosovar Albanians seeking asylum in the UK if they arrive (a) without proper documents and (b) clandestinely. [84215]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government, in line with other European Union member states, are committed to a policy of protecting Kosovar refugees in the Balkan region as far as possible. Where this is not possible, and in response to United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) requests, the United Kingdom has agreed to the evacuation to this country of refugees. No account is taken of whether evacuees under this programme have documents, and liability under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 has been waived for these specific flights.

Kosovans who arrive in this country by their own means will be able to apply for asylum in the normal way. The general policy is to grant refugee status if there is no doubt as to nationality. A person entering clandestinely has committed an offence under section 24 of the Immigration Acts and asylum applications from undocumented applicants may be certified under the provisions of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993. But sanction under either provision would only apply if an asylum application were refused. Carriers who bring undocumented passengers to the United Kingdom other than under the agreed UNHCR evacuation programme are liable to a charge under the Carriers' Liability Act. But where such a person is subsequently recognised as a refugee under the 1951 Convention, it is our normal policy to waive the charge or to refund it if it has been paid.

Prison Service (Absences)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for new measures to reduce levels of sickness absence in the Prison Service (a) in the short-term and (b) in the long-term. [84390]

Mr. George Howarth: The Secretary of State has approved the proposal by the Director General of the Prison Service to set a new Key Performance Indicator (KPI) for reducing sickness absence within the Prison Service as part of the Annual Business Plan of the Service. This requires the Service not to exceed an average of 12.5 working days lost due to sickness in 1999–2000. This target takes account of an expected increase in recorded levels of sick absence due to improved recording practice.

The Prison Service have also published a new attendance strategy containing measures designed to reduce sickness absence within the Service by 20 per cent. by 2001 and by 30 per cent. by 2003 in line with targets set by the Cabinet Office in their inter-departmental strategy for reducing sickness absence across the public sector.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his estimate of the annual cost to his Department of sickness absence in the Prison Service in each of the last five years; [84389]

(2) if he will make a statement on the reasons for changes in levels of sickness absence in the Prison Service over the past five years; [84414]

(3) what assessment his Department has made of levels of sickness absence in the Prison Service in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [84415]

Mr. George Howarth: The National Audit Office published a comprehensive report on managing sickness absence in the Prison Service on 30 April 1999.

This report analysed sickness absence data from the Home Office payroll system and concluded that Prison Service employees took, on average, 12.6 working days sickness absence in 1997–98 and similar rates in the previous three years. The report estimated that the salary and related cost of sickness absence in the Prison Service were between £56 and £62 million per year over this period.

No verified data are yet available for 1998–99.

Public Safety Radio Communications Project

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make it his policy to provide to police authorities funding towards the cost of the implementation of the Public Safety Radio Communications Project from the proceeds of any sale of existing radio frequencies; [84490]

(2) what plans he has to provide capital funding support to police authorities towards the cost of implementing the Public Safety Radio Communications Project; [84489]

(3) what assessment he has made of the commercial value of the radio frequencies currently used by the Police Service and which will become surplus on the implementation of the Public Safety Radio Communications Project. [84488]

Mr. Boateng: The radio spectrum currently used by the police service is not the property of the Home Office. The current plan is that when the Public Safety Radio Communications Project (PSRCP) is fully implemented and the police service has migrated to the new spectrum allocated for this, the existing spectrum will be surrendered to the national pool. It will be for the Department of Trade and Industry to decide on its future use.

Under the Government's spending plans, capital funding for the police is set to remain at £144 million for 3 years until 2001–02. This provides stability after 4 successive years of cuts. The Government have also relaxed the rules on the use of capital receipts from the sale of assets. Police authorities now have freedom to use all proceeds from sales for capital investment.

The scope for additional funding for PSRCP is under consideration.

Education Classes (Prisons)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many education classes were provided each week at each of the London prisons in the last 12 months. [84398]

Mr. George Howarth: Information on the numbers of education classes which were provided each week at each of the London prisons in the last 12 months is not held centrally. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The average number of weekly classes for the 12 months period ending February 1999 for each of the London establishments was:

Prison	Number
Belmarsh	89
Brixton	85
Downview	47
Feltham Young Offender Institution	130
Highdown	90
Holloway	88
Latchmere	4
Pentonville	77
Wandsworth	38
Wormwood Scrubs	63

Elderly Prisoners

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) male and (b) female prisoners in England and Wales are over the age of (i) 90 years, (ii) 80 years and (c) 70 years. [84399]

Mr. George Howarth: The information requested is given in the table.

Population of prisoners[1] aged (i) over 70 years, (ii) over 80 years and (iii) over 90 years in prisons in England and Wales on 30 April 1999[2] by sex

Aged	Males	Females
Over 70 years	122	3
Over 80 years	11	—
Over 90 years	—	—
Total	133	3

[1] Remand and sentenced prisoners
[2] Provisional figures

Sexual Abuse (Compensation)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the (a) largest and (b) smallest amount paid in compensation to victims of sexual abuse and how many payments above £100,000 were made in each of the last three years for which information is available. [84339]

Mr. Boateng: Data are readily available only for claims received on or after 1 April 1996 under the tariff-based criminal injuries compensation scheme effective from that date which, unlike the former common law damages based scheme it superseded, is supported by a comprehensive computer system. The data on cases involving sexual abuse are as follows:

	Largest award	Smallest award
1996–97	27,500	1,000
1997–98	27,500	500
1998–99	22,500	750

In those three years the numbers of cases where Payments exceeded £100,000 were 139,115 and 130 respectively. Most such payments were in respect of claims made under the common law damages based scheme effective for claims submitted up to and including 31 March 1996. It is not possible to ascertain readily whether any of these concern sexual abuse cases.

Arson

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for tackling arson; and if he will make a statement. [84882]

Mr. George Howarth: As part of the Government's commitment to delivering safer communities, the Home Office is publishing today the outcome of a study undertaken to review arrangements for tackling arson. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

The report, "Safer Communities—Towards Effective Arson Control", was commissioned because of concern that the number of arson fires had grown considerably in recent years while prosecutions and cautions for the offence had fallen. The outcome of the study has shown that although some local examples of good practice exist, much more needs to be done to tackle deliberately started fires. I want this report to mark the first step in the process to rectify that situation.

The report makes 22 recommendations for putting in place more effective arson control arrangements. A great deal of emphasis in the study is placed on greater liaison and co-operation, so I want to hear the views of all those who can contribute to tackling arson. We will therefore be consulting a wide range of interested parties over the next few months on how to take these proposals forward.

Trial Committals

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the procedure for determining the mode of trial in either-way cases; and if he will make a statement. [84884]

Mr. Straw: The Royal Commission on Criminal Justice, and more recently the Narey Review of Delay in the Criminal Justice System, recommended that defendants should not be able to choose to be tried by a jury in either-way cases which magistrates have indicated that they would be content to hear.

Having considered this recommendation and the responses to the consultation paper I issued last year on election for trial, I am announcing today that I will be bringing forward legislation when parliamentary time allows to abolish the ability of defendants to elect for jury trial in either-way cases (where the cases are triable either on indictment at the Crown Court or summarily at the magistrates' court).

The Government readily acknowledge that jury trial is preferable for certain sorts of either-way case. The question is whether it should be available at the choice of the defendant, or restricted to cases which objectively warrant it. In the same way that defendants do not have a choice of which magistrate, or which judge and jury, hears their case, we believe that defendants should not be able to choose a criminal justice jurisdiction where their case is tried. England and Wales is almost alone in allowing defendants a choice of court. In most jurisdictions, it is a matter for the court. In Scotland, it is at the election of the prosecution.

The majority of cases in which the defendant elects for Crown Court trial result eventually in guilty pleas, but only after greater inconvenience and worry to victims and witnesses, and at considerable extra cost. This Government's proposals will end the practice that many rightly regard as a manipulation of the criminal justice system by defendants demanding Crown Court trial for no good reason other than to delay proceedings.

But there will be safeguards. In determining where the case should be tried, magistrates' will be required to have regard not only to any defence representations, but also to such factors as the gravity of the offence, the complexity of the case and the effect of conviction (as legislation already requires) and the likely sentence on the defendants livelihood and reputation. Defendants will also be given an interlocutory right of appeal to the Crown Court against the Magistrates' decision on mode of trial.

Identity Cards

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish a focus group consultative arrangement on the issue of national identity cards. [83663]

Mr. George Howarth: We have no present plans to establish a focus group; but we are continuing to consider the issues involved in identity cards.

HEALTH

Audiology Services

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will set out his Department's expenditure on (a) NHS audiology services and (b) the NHS provision of hearing aids for (i) adults and (ii) children, for each of the last five years; [84302]

(2) how much his Department plans to spend on (a) NHS audiology services and (b) the provision of hearing aids by the NHS for (i) adults and (ii) children, in the current year. [84303]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect figures nationally for expenditure on National Health Service audiology services or of the cost of providing hearing aids. However, around half a million hearing aids per year are purchased from the NHS Supplies Authority at a cost of £16 million. In addition audiology departments also purchase some hearing aids from commercial suppliers.

Learning Disabilities

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for a White Paper on guidance and funding for people with learning disabilities; and if he will make a statement. [84247]

Mr. Hutton: Our White Paper "Modernising Social Services", published in November 1998, set out our strategy for the development of social services for all client groups including people with learning disabilities. They will also benefit from wider developments such as the proposals in our National Health Service White Paper and Public Health Green Paper, and developments elsewhere in Government. We have recently completed a review of learning disability hospital reprovisioning plans and a survey of 21 local authorities and their matching health authorities. The Department has also recently received comments from academic experts on the draft report of an evaluation of the cost and outcomes of different types of residential provision for people with learning disabilities. We will shortly be considering what, if any, further action needs to be taken in the light of this work and of the advice we receive from the Learning Disability Advisory Group set up last November.

Cancer

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice and guidance is disseminated by his Department to the public on which lifestyle changes can improve their chances of avoiding cancer. [84236]

Ms Jowell: The Department provides advice to the public, in leaflets and through health education campaigns, on a number of lifestyle changes that can improve the chances of avoiding cancer. The areas covered include smoking, diet and nutrition, alcohol, physical activity, sexual behaviour and excessive sun exposure.

The health strategy Green Paper "Our Healthier Nation" proposed a national contract on cancer that specified action that can be taken at national, local and individual level to reduce the incidence of cancer. The contract reiterated advice on lifestyle changes. The corresponding White Paper will be published later this year.

The Department also provides funding for promotional material used within the United Kingdom for the "Europe Against Cancer" programme. A different cancer-related theme is chosen each year. The theme for 1998 was "Cancer in Men", and this year's theme is "Smoking Cessation in Young People Aged 16–19 Years".

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce a national screening programme for bowel cancer; and if he will make a statement. [84244]

Mr. Hutton: The National Screening Committee, which advises United Kingdom Health Ministers about policy on screening, has recommended that evaluative pilots for bowel cancer screening be established to provide information about the public acceptability, feasibility and service implications of a national screening programme.

On 2 March, the Government announced the two pilot sites in Coventry and Warwickshire and Tayside, Grampian and Fife, which will start later this year and run for two years. The data from the pilots will inform decisions about whether to introduce a national bowel cancer screening programme.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has to improve survival rates for cancer patients; and if he will make a statement. [84245]

Mr. Hutton: The work programme for the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has yet to be agreed.

There are several health topics in which NICE is currently being invited to take an interest and a number of new and existing health technologies will be considered for the NICE's work programme.

Donor Register

Mr. Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the annual running costs are of the donor register; [84306]

(2) what the cost was of setting up the donor register; [84307]

(3) how many transplants have been carried out from patients on the donor register (a) in the last 12 months and (b) in total. [84308]

Mr. Hutton: Expenditure in 1998–99 for the running costs of the donor register amounted to £197,118. The first year cost of setting up the donor register was £298,294. The number of transplants carried out from people registered on the Organ Donor Register were (a) from May 1998 to April 1999, 186 solid organs and 218 corneas and (b) since the register started in 1994 486 solid organs and 679 corneas.

PRIME MINISTER

Kosovar Refugees

Q19. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on places in Northern Ireland for Kosovo refugees. [83687]

The Prime Minister: The Refugee Council and its partner agencies are working closely with the Home Office and local government associations to identify sites for further reception centres across the United Kingdom. We are looking at parts of the United Kingdom, and hope that places will be found in Northern Ireland.

Engagements

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 19 May. [83682]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Wednesday 19 May. [84328]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I will have further such meetings later today.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal (Interviews)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how often trainees on the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds are required to attend an interview with their personal adviser. [84396]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The number and frequency of interviews given to young people vary according to their individual needs and the stage they are at in the New Deal. The majority of young people are interviewed fortnightly during the New Deal Gateway.

Class Sizes

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for schools in the Devon Local Education Authority the change in the average size of classes, taught by one teacher, between January 1998 and January 1999 for pupils in (a) nursery classes, (b) Key Stage Two and (c) secondary schools. [84645]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on class sizes for individual schools is not published centrally. The available information for Devon Local Education Authority area is shown in the following table.

The Government have pledged to reduce infant class sizes to 30 or below by September 2001 at the latest, and we are on course to meet that pledge.

Average class size of one teacher classes—Devon local authority area

	[1]1998	[1]1999

New Deal (Schools)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much money is currently being held in reserve by his Department under the New Deal for schools (phase 3) following the allocation of awards to local education authorities; and if he will make a statement on his policy towards the use of this money. [84558]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Following the NDS3 announcement of grant allocations on 30 March, a total of £12,269,810 is currently being held in reserve.

The reserve represents a combination of provisional commitment of grant still to be distributed to those Authorities which did not receive a complete allocation on 30 March; and grant earmarked for specific projects which are awaiting decisions on Statutory Proposals or, as in the case of Public Private Partnership projects, Central Government approval.

There is no unallocated Reserve. It is not envisaged that much, if any, allocated or reserved grant will be returned to the Department for re-allocation during the year.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list in respect of each local education authority in England, (a) the amount bid for under the New Deal for Schools (phase 3), (b) the amount awarded by his Department and (c) the amount awarded expressed as a percentage of the bid. [84556]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is shown on the following table:

Special Schools

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the changes made by his Department since 2 May 1997 to the rules on allocating capital approvals for special school re-organisation projects. [84557]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There have been no changes. Proposals to alter, establish or discontinue special schools are subject to a statutory process, and we give priority within available capital resources to projects to implement approved proposals. The Department is currently considering responses to a recent consultation paper on its Schools Capital Strategy.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Teacher Training Agency

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the report of the Prior Options Quinquennial Review of the Teacher Training Agency announced on 3 February will be published. [84971]

Mr. Blunkett: The Report of the Prior Options Quinquennial Review of the Teacher Training Agency (TTA) is published today.

The Report concludes that there is no case at present for abolition or privatisation of the TTA. There will continue to be a need for the core functions of the TTA. But the TTA's responsibilities should be redrawn to take account of the General Teaching Councils (GTCs) and the leadership college, and the need to bring some elements of the Green Paper agenda closer to the Department for Education and Employment (DfEE).

The Report argues that the TTA's current remit is too wide, and that the Agency should concentrate substantially on the two priorities it had when it was established in 1994 (teacher supply and recruitment and initial teacher training). Both areas present key challenges and the TTA will need to devote all of its efforts to meeting the Government's policy objectives in these areas.

Ensuring that there are enough high quality candidates to meet the future needs of schools is crucial to the achievement of the Government's standards agenda. The Report recommends that tackling teacher supply and recruitment should be the TTA's top priority in the next phase of its work. The profile of this work will be significantly boosted, including through the employment of in-house marketing expertise and by taking over the Recruitment Strategy Managers' programme from the Department.

Increasing both the rigour and the flexibility of initial teacher training provision remains vital in order to ensure that each new generation of teachers is properly prepared. The Government wish to build on the start the TTA has made on some elements of the ITT agenda set out in the Green Paper. ITT funding and quality remains core business for the TTA. And it should continue with advisory and developmental work in the area of induction.

Following the formation of the GTCs and the leadership college, my Department will need to provide a coherent and strategic view across teaching issues. A clear division of roles and responsibilities is also needed between the TTA and the GTCs.

Headship/leadership functions should become the responsibility of the National College for School Leadership in due course, with the DfEE taking lead responsibility for work on headship training as a transitional measure.

The GTC for England should have an advisory role across the piece, but no funding functions at this stage.

My Department will now take the lead in policy development to establish a coherent and strategic programme for continuing professional development. The TTA will retain operational responsibility for the NOF-funded ICT training programme.

My Department will continue to take a strategic overview of research, and the TTA will continue to support the Government's drive for a research-based profession. But the TTA will commission research only in areas within its responsibilities. The GTC and the leadership college will maintain research capability reflecting their responsibilities.

The composition of the TTA Board will need to be changed to reflect the renewed emphasis on teacher recruitment, in particular, and the need for more of an operational rather than policy focus. Teachers need to by more strongly represented.

I have agreed with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales that any final decisions about future arrangements in Wales should be delayed until the National Assembly for Wales is fully established and ready to consider the issue. The TTA Unit in Wales might be placed in the Welsh Office Education Department now. Teacher recruitment in Wales, which is not part of the Unit's responsibility, is currently handled as part of an integrated England and Wales programme by the TTA in London. To minimise disruption, this should remain the case until decisions can be taken by the National Assembly for Wales. Similarly, no change is proposed for the responsibility of the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales' for funding and accreditation of initial teacher training.

These conclusions take account of a substantial consultation exercise, In broad terms, the TTA are commended by consultees for their work on developing the link between funding and quality, improving standards in teacher training provision, promotion of teaching as a profession, and for implementing the Leadership Programme for Serving Heads. General criticism is expressed in the Report in relation to some aspects of the TTA's funding and accreditation approach, and over the failure to meet the Department's supply and recruitment targets because of continuing under-recruitment by some ITT providers. There were also some general concerns about the TTA's effectiveness, management and organisation, and how it relates to its partners and stakeholders.

I have today written to Clive Booth, TTA Chair, to inform him that I have accepted the Report's recommendations in full.

Copies of the Report will be placed in the Library.

School Meals

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of school children in (a) Staffordshire and (b) Hertfordshire (i) received and (ii) were eligible to receive free school dinners in each of the last 10 years. [84329]

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the implications for owners and occupiers of listed buildings used for trading purposes of the decision to implement fully the Disability Discrimination Act 1995; what the total cost to business will be and over what timescale; and if he will make a statement. [84426]

Ms Hodge: When fully implemented, the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 will require service providers to make adjustments, where reasonable, so that their services are accessible to disabled people. These requirements are being introduced in two phases. They will apply to service providers in listed buildings.

From 1 October, service providers will have to take reasonable steps to change practices, policies or procedures which make it impossible or unreasonably difficult for disabled people to use a service; to provide auxiliary aids or services which would make it easier for, or enable, disabled people to use a service; and to provide the service by a reasonable alternative method where a physical feature makes it impossible or unreasonably difficult for disabled people to use the service. From 2004, service providers will have to take reasonable steps to remove, alter, or provide reasonable means of avoiding physical features that make it impossible or unreasonably difficult for disabled people to use a service.

Planning Policy Guidance Note (PPG 15) issued by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions makes it clear that > "it is important in principle that disabled people should have dignified easy access to and within historic buildings", and that with a proper approach

> "it should normally be possible to plan suitable access for disabled people without compromising a building's special interest".

English Heritage's booklet "Easy Access to Historic Properties" is designed to help those who own, manage, or are professionally concerned with historic properties to strike a balance between conservation and access.

The Disability Discrimination Act, in common with the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 and the Race Relations Act 1976, cannot require anything to be done that would contravene another piece of legislation. Where a service provider must get statutory consent to a particular alteration, including listed building or scheduled monument consent, and that consent is not given, the Disability Discrimination Act will not have been contravened. However, a service provider would still need to take whatever other steps under the Act were reasonable to provide the service.

At the end of June, we shall be publishing a new Code of Practice which explains the duties coming into force in October as well as the current rights under the Disability Discrimination Act, and which gives examples of good practice. In due course, a public consultation exercise will be held in respect of a revised Code explaining the duties which are due to come into force in 2004.

The Government's assessment of the costs, and benefits, of implementing the later rights in Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act are contained in the Regulatory Impact Assessment, copies of which are in the Library. It is also available on the disability website: www.disability.gov.uk.

Drugs

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on co-ordinating initiatives on drugs in schools. [83651]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department is committed to delivering the education strands of the Government's 10 year UK anti-drugs strategy, and has issued guidance to schools and the youth service on the effective delivery of drug education. In particular, it offers teachers and headteachers advice on some key areas in the delivery of drug education, encouraging them to take note of best practice and develop their own detailed programmes and policies of drug education which take account of their own pupils' needs and of local circumstances. A copy of the guidance, entitled "Protecting Young People; Good practice in drug education in schools and the youth service" is in the Library.

The DfEE is making support for drug education available to local education authorities, to assist primary and secondary schools and the youth service to deliver effective drug education. Support is available, through the Standards Fund programme, for the next three years, starting in 1999–2000. £7.5 million is available each year, following the Comprehensive Spending Review.

SCOTLAND

Inward Investment

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the work he has done to secure (a) Korean and (b) Japanese inward investment into the United Kingdom. [81101]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 16 April 1999]: Locate in Scotland promotes Scotland's advantages as a business location, working in partnership with the Local Enterprise Companies, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and other bodies in both the public and private sectors. Scotland has attracted strong flows of inward investment in recent years, and inward investment projects from Korea and Japan over the last 5 years have involved 30 projects with planned investment of over £3.2 billion and over 5,000 new/safeguarded jobs.

As from 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amounts the Government have spent on (a) opinion polling, (b) focus groups and (c) advertising in Scotland or related to Scottish Office responsibilities since it came to office. [80051]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 13 April 1999]: The details are:

(a) Nil

(b) £145,000

(c) £6,074,600.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of assessed parental income above which a student becomes eligible for (i) full and (ii) part payment of tuition fees; what plans he has to increase these threshold levels in line with inflation; what estimate he has of the number of students who will become eligible for paying in full or in part their tuition fee if the threshold is not increased in line with inflation; and if he will make a statement. [82656]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 29 April 1999]: For academic session 1998–99 parents with a residual income (gross income less certain allowable deductions) greater than £27,000 are expected to contribute the full amount towards their children's tuition fees. Parents whose residual income is between £16,945 and £27,000 are expected to make some contribution towards tuition fees, based on a sliding scale. Parents with a residual income of less than £16,944 make no contribution.

In line with previous practice relating to maintenance grants, the income threshold levels have been increased for academic session 1999–2000 by reference to the Retail Prices Index. The increase of 2.5 per cent. was announced on 15 February 1999, Official Report, column 464.

As from 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

School Funding

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the current level of per capita funding for students is in the Borders Region (a) in primary schools, (b) in secondary schools up to the age of 16 years and (c) for those aged between 16 and 18 years. [84174]

Mr. Macdonald: Per pupil expenditure by Scottish Borders Council in 1996–97, the latest financial year for which information is available, was £1,896 in primary schools, and £3,039 in secondary schools. The figures, which are derived from local authority financial returns, do not include the cost of home to school transport, school meals, education authority central administration costs and loan charges. The returns do not identify expenditure according to the age of pupils.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Census Returns

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the decennial population returns for Scotland have been closed to public inspection for (a) 100 years, (b) 80 years or (c) permanently. [84495]

Mr. Macdonald: The 1841–91 census returns are open to the public. The 1901 and later census returns are closed for 100 years. No census returns are kept closed for 80 years, nor are any closed permanently.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the linear metres of storage space occupied by each of the pre-1992 decennial census returns for Scotland, (b) the actual costs, at current prices, of microfilming each of the pre-1901 census returns and (c) the average microfilm cost per linear metre, at current prices. [84496]

Mr. Macdonald: The 1841–91 census returns for Scotland which are open to the public occupy approximately the following amounts of shelving in accommodation belonging to the Registrar General for Scotland. For more details of the storage space occupied by the 1901 and later censuses, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the right hon. Member for North-West Cambridgeshire (Sir B. Mawhinney) on 13 May 1999, Official Report, column 191.

[2] Volumes

The open censuses have all been microfilmed and there are no plans to refilm. Information on the actual costs of filming—which took place over a period of years starting in the 1950s—cannot now be assembled.

As a very approximate guide, the estimated cost at 1999 prices of microfilming paper volumes of census returns such as would take up one linear metre of shelving might be of the order of £400 to £500.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the text of the (a) non-statutory assurances of confidentiality and (b) 100-year extended closure given by the Registrar General on the householders' forms for the 20th century censuses of population for Scotland. [84497]

Mr. Macdonald: (a) The text appearing on the various census returns is as follows:

1901

The Return is required for carrying out the provisions of the Census Act. The contents of the Schedules will be treated as confidential; they will be published in General Abstracts only, and strict care will be taken that the Returns are not used for the gratification of curiosity, or for other purposes than those of the Census.

1911

The contents of the Schedule will be treated as strictly confidential.

1921

Strictly Confidential (marked at top of Householder's Schedule).

1931

Strictly Confidential (marked at top of Householder's Schedule).

1951

The contents of the schedule are strictly confidential.

1961

The contents of the schedule are strictly confidential.

1966

The information you give on the form will be treated as confidential and used only for compiling statistics. No information about named individuals will be passed by the Census Office to any other Government Department or any other authority. If anyone employed on the census improperly discloses information you provide, he will be liable to prosecution.

Where information is supplied to you—for example by a visitor or anyone not belonging to the family—you must not disclose or use it for any purpose other than filling in this form. (If you do, you will be liable to a fine of up to £10. There is also a penalty of up to £10 for refusing to fill in the form or refusing to give you information to enable you to fill it in, or for giving false information).

The information you give on the form will be treated as Confidential and used only for compiling statistics. No information about named individuals will be passed by the Census Office to any other Government Department or any other authority or person. If anyone employed in taking the census improperly discloses information you provide, he will be liable to prosecution. Similarly you must not disclose information which anyone (for example, a visitor or boarder) gives you to enable you to complete the form.

1981

The form is used only for compiling statistics and when you have completed it in accordance with the instructions it will be treated as Confidential and no information about named individuals will be passed by the Census Office to any other Government Department or any other authority or person. If anyone employed in taking the census improperly discloses information you provide, he will be liable to prosecution. Similarly you must not disclose information which anyone (for example, a visitor or boarder) gives you to enable you to complete the form.

1991

Your answers will be treated in strict confidence and used only to produce statistics. Names and addresses will not be put into the computer; only the postcode will be entered. The forms will be kept securely within my Office and treated as confidential for 100 years.

Anyone using or disclosing Census information improperly will be liable to prosecution. For example, it would be improper for you to pass on to someone else information which you had been given in confidence by a visitor to enable you to complete the Census form.

(b) The interpretation of strict confidentiality as requiring lengthy closure of the census returns was not printed on the census forms themselves before 1991, but is part of the Registrar General's policy agreed in 1974 by the then Secretary of State for Scotland and announced in Parliament (Hansard, Official Report Vol 874, no. 46, Written Answer cols 272–3). This confirmed that Scottish census returns for 1901 or later years would not be made available until 100 years after the census to which they relate, and that only in exceptional circumstances could closed census returns be accessed. These public access provisions were affirmed by the present Government in the White Paper "The 2001 Census of Population" (Cm. 4253), published on 4 March 1999. The closure period is intended to safeguard the confidentiality of the personal information collected in the census, and successive Governments have honoured an undertaking that the information would remain confidential. Protection of the credibility of the undertaking is crucial to maintaining the quality of the information collected.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Genetically Modified Salmon

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 20 April 1999, Official Report, column 525, for what reason the three-year land-based trial project involving genetically modified salmon has been terminated early. [84185]

Mr. Macdonald [holding answer 18 May 1999]: The trial project was terminated early by the company involved for commercial reasons.

As from 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

WALES

NHS Waiting Lists

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on NHS waiting lists for (a) hip replacements, (b) cataract operations and (c) breast screening for each health authority in Wales for 1996, 1997 and 1998. [84511]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Waiting lists for hip replacements and cataract operations are not held centrally. Aggregate figures are available for the numbers of people who had been waiting over 18 months for in-patient or day case admission for the following group of operations—hip and knee replacements and cataract removals. The numbers of patients waiting for an operation in this group at 31 December 1996, 1997 and 1998 are given in the following table.

Number of patients waiting over 18 months for hip and knee replacement and cataract removal operations

Gwent	5	4	42
Bro Taf	0	12	249
Dyfed Powys	0	78	36
North Wales	2	4	14
Morgannwg	0	16	12
All Welsh health authorities	7	114	353

Bro Taf Health Authority, in particular, is concerned about, and is addressing, the problems of long waiters. Additional measures are being taken to increase capacity at the new UHW and Llandough NHS Trust and to offer patients treatment in other local hospitals.

There are no waiting lists for breast screening services which are provided by Breast Test Wales on a rolling three yearly invitation to well women aged 50 to 64 and by self-appointment for well women aged 65 and over. Following the transfer of functions, this will be a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Agriculture Secretary

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the Farmers' Union of Wales and the NFU about the appointment of the Agriculture Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales. [84737]

Mr. Michael: I have received no such representations.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Integrated Administration and Control System Map

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many map errors were discovered when performing IACS map checks; and what was the net potential loss to his Department if the errors had not been corrected. [73292]

Mr. Rooker: Map checks only form a small component of the total number of detailed validation checks on Area Aid Applications carried out under IACS, and it is not possible to separate out exactly how many officials were involved. Map checks have been carried out on all 2,174,843 parcels entered on IACS Area Aid Applications in England between 1995 and 1998, and discrepancies in field numbers and areas have been discovered in 352,941 of these. However, some 73 per cent. of the discrepancies found were of a clerical nature which would have had no effect on any claims made. No separate information is available on the savings resulting from map checks in terms of the adjustment made to the value of claims, but they do not as a rule have a major impact. On the other hand, if the checks had not been carried out there would have been significant risk of disallowance of exchequer expenditure for reimbursement out of the European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund. It is not possible to quantify the net potential loss involved as it is the responsibility of the Commission to decide the amount of disallowance for each individual case. The amount is calculated by determining the risk (real or potential) to Community funds.

Overgrazing

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number and location of incidents where overgrazing was confirmed by the Ministry in each year between 1990 and 1998. [83479]

Mr. Rooker: No cases of overgrazing were confirmed between 1990 and 1993. The following table gives the information requested for the period from 1994 to 1998. It does not cover work on the separate but related issue of environmental damage caused by the use of unsuitable methods to provide supplementary feed to livestock. Reports of suspected overgrazing are investigated by the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency on behalf of the Ministry using a two-stage assessment process.

Year	Number of cases where overgrazing confirmed after Stage 2 assessment	Location of confirmed cases
1994	3	Crosby Ravensworth (Cumbria), Long Mynd (Shropshire) and Ingleborough (North Yorkshire)
1995	1	Birkbeck (Cumbria)
1996	3	Reeth Low Moor, Kearton Pasture (both North Yorkshire) and Clee Hills (Shropshire)
1997	4	Brackenber (Cumbria), Newton Fell (Lancashire), Heath Mynd (Shropshire) and Matley Moor (Derbyshire)
1998	4	Askham/Helton, Barton (both Cumbria), Ugborough and Harford (both Devon)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidents of overgrazing were (a) reported and (b) investigated by the Ministry in each year between 1990 and 1998. [83480]

Mr. Rooker: The material requested is not readily available and could be provided quickly only at disproportionate cost. The Ministry is, however, taking steps to collate this information and I will write to my hon. Friend in due course with a full reply.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hill livestock compensatory allowance and sheep annual premium payments were withheld or reduced as a result of overgrazing by recipients in each year between 1990 and 1998. [83476]

Mr. Rooker: There have been no cases where payments of Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance or Sheep Annual Premium have been withheld because of overgrazing. In cases where overgrazing is confirmed, subsidy payments are reduced or withheld only if the producers concerned do not take appropriate steps to address the problem. So far it has not been necessary to apply these sanctions.

Non-genetically Modified Soya Beans

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what reports his Department has received concerning the efforts of the state Government of Rio Grande do Sol to guarantee non-genetically modified soya bean production throughout their state; and what plans his Department has to give assistance. [84503]

Mr. Rooker: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary and I met the Secretary of Agriculture for the Brazilian State of Rio Grande do Sol on 13 May 1999 at his request to hear about the ability of his State to supply non-GM soya to UK customers.

We offered to add details of Brazilian companies to the MAFF list of non-GM soya suppliers published on the Department's website, so that those who wished to purchase such material can be aware of this source.

Flax

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what support his Department is giving to the growing of flax as a substitute fibre for glass fibre panels in motor vehicles. [84321]

Mr. Rooker: The technical feasibility of using flax in motor vehicle panels was demonstrated in research funded by the Ministry to assess the industrial potential of fibres from UK grown crops. The use of crop derived raw materials is promoted at workshops, seminars and agricultural shows, and through the dedicated Website of the Ministry's Alternative Crops Unit.

Animal Slaughter (Inspection Charges)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans the Government have to contribute towards the new charges for veterinary inspection on the slaughter of animals; and if he will make a statement. [84565]

Mr. Rooker: The Government have no plans to contribute towards the costs of those hygiene/welfare inspections conducted at licensed fresh meat premises in accordance with harmonised EU meat hygiene rules. We are obliged by EU law to recover the costs of such inspections from the industry and are not permitted to subsidise such costs. However, the Government's study of the impact of all proposed charges in the slaughtering sector, announced on 21 April, will also look at EU legislation and the way in which inspections are carried out so as to ensure that, when charges are set, they are as low as possible consistent with maintaining public safety and honouring our obligations under EU law.

In the meantime, the Government are bearing the cost of enforcement of specified risk material controls for a further year. Nevertheless, we remain of the view that recovering these costs from the industry is right in principle.

CABINET OFFICE

Access to Information

12. Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what discussions he has had with the Home Department on changes to the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. [83652]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department intends to publish the draft Freedom of Information Bill shortly. In the interim, he has no plans to amend the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Public Appointments

13. Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to extend the range of public appointments covered by the Public Appointments Commissioner. [83654]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The Government extended the remit of the Commissioner for Public Appointments last autumn. I have no plans to extend the Commissioner's remit further.

Public Sector Ombudsmen

15. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the progress of the review of public sector Ombudsmen in England. [83656]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Wide consultation has now started. Views have been invited from those representing the public, government and others with an interest in the work of the Ombudsmen. The review is working with the Select Committee on Public Administration to canvass Members' views.

Biotechnology

16. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office pursuant to his oral answer of 21 April 1999, Official Report, column 896 on biotechnology, if he will make a statement on the research sponsored by the Government into cross-pollination from genetically modified crops. [83657]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The Government are currently funding studies into cross-pollination between oilseed rape and other species. The results of the work will be made available once the research is completed.

Anti-drugs Co-ordinator

17. Helen Jones: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the work of the UK Anti-drugs Co-ordinator. [83658]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: The UK Anti-drugs Co-ordinator's first report and national plan will be published shortly.

Modernising Government

18. Ms Moran: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what measures he plans to put in place to ensure that targets for the use of new technology announced in the Modernising Government White Paper are directed towards collecting views from the public on the quality of public services. [83659]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Finding out what people want and expect from public services is an important part of the Government's approach to Modernising Government. Through research on electronic service delivery and from the People's Panel, we have begun that process. We will work closely with the public services in central and local government to ensure that services are developed in accordance with what citizens want.

Better Regulation Task Force

19. Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many meetings he has had with the Chairman of the Better Regulation Task Force this year. [83660]

Mr. Kilfoyle: My right hon. Friend had five meetings with the Chairman of the Better Regulation Task Force.

One-stop Shops

20. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to support one-stop shops for access to both local and national government services. [83661]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The "Modernising Government" White Paper, launched on 30 March, contains a number of initiatives to encourage joint working between central and local government, including one-stop shops. There will be a drive to eliminate obstacles to joined-up working, including a more co-ordinated approach to property management, and a second round of the Invest to Save Budget to fund new projects that involve partnership working.

Civil Servants (Ethnic Minorities)

21. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress he has made in recruiting and retaining black and Asian civil servants in higher grades. [83662]

Mr. Kilfoyle: Black and Asian Civil Servants make up 5.7 per cent. of the Civil Service overall and 1.6 per cent. of the Senior Civil Service. The Government are committed to redressing under-representation in the higher grades and we are actively working to recruit and retain ethnic minorities at all levels in the Civil Service.

We have recently launched with Civil Service Trade Unions, a joint Charter to address under-representation of ethnic minorities at senior levels.

We have also set targets that by the year 2004–05, 3.2 per cent. of the Senior Civil Service will be from ethnic minority backgrounds.

Special Advisers

22. Mr. Evans: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the total budget of all Departments for Special Advisers (a) in the current year and (b) in 1996–97. [83664]

Mr. Kilfoyle: The pay bill for Special Advisers in 1999–2000 is estimated at £3.9 million. In 1996–97, when the Government employed 38 Advisers against the current 69, the pay bill was £1.8 million.

Red Boxes

23. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to promote the use of electronic red boxes for ministers. [83665]

Mr. Kilfoyle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 16 March 1999, Official Report, column 651.

Public Funds

24. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress he has made in investigating the case for a code of conduct on the use of public funds for the purpose of opinion research. [83666]

Mr. Kilfoyle: My officials are looking at ways of bringing together the various existing sources of advice and expertise on Government public opinion research, in consultation with colleagues in other departments.

Government Buildings, Marsham Street

25. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proportion of the office space at the old Department of the Environment buildings at Marsham street is empty; and for how long such space has been empty. [83667]

Mr. Kilfoyle: 2 Marsham Street has been completely empty since 30 April 1998. Vacation occurred progressively over the previous two years as the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions relocated to new accommodation.

Drug Misuse

26. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what forecast he has made of the date by which there will be a reduction in illegal drug use. [83668]

Dr. Jack Cunningham: Details will be published shortly in the Co-ordinator's first annual report and national plan.

Annual Report

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what independent auditing he plans of the Government's annual report. [83655]

Mr. Kilfoyle: This year's Annual Report will be prepared in the same way as last year's, as set out in my reply to the hon. Gentleman on 13 January 1999, Official Report, columns 226–27.

Written Answers to Questions

PRIME MINISTER

Kosovo

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to establish a Committee of Privy Counsellors to inquire into the circumstances of British involvement in the conflict in Serbia. [83832]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 May 1999]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I have given to the right hon. Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) today, column 401.

Mr. Hague: To ask the Prime Minister if he will appoint a Committee of Privy Councillors to review the way in which the responsibilities of the Government in relation to British policy towards Kosovo were discharged in the period leading up to the start of the NATO action on 24 March, taking account of all such factors in previous years as are relevant, and to report; and if he will make a statement. [84887]

The Prime Minister: I see no need.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set up a Cabinet Committee on the provision of cancer treatment in the UK; and if he will make a statement. [84235]

The Prime Minister: The Government is firmly committed to improving the provision of cancer treatment in the UK and has made it one of its highest priorities. All people, wherever they live, should have access to high quality cancer services. This was the aim of the Calman/Hine report "A Policy Framework for commissioning Cancer Services". However, when the Calman/Hine principles were adopted in 1995, no machinery to monitor progress was established. We are now rectifying that omission.

We have established a National Cancer Forum with a remit of acting as the focus for maintaining the strategic oversight of the Calman/Hine cancer services implementation programme, and to advise Ministers on specialised issues related to cancer.

Other UK countries are represented on the National Cancer Forum and have similar strategies and initiatives to improve cancer services, and Ministers take a keen interest in progress.

In recognition of the importance of cancer to the Government's agenda, we are also holding a high level cancer seminar today at 10 Downing Street. Those attending will cover the spectrum from prevention, screening, treatment, research, voluntary organisations, patient perspective and NHS implementation. The purpose of the seminar is to review where the UK's performance stands in comparison to other countries, to consider the action we have already taken and are taking, to improve performance and identify further action to be taken in pursuit of our objectives. Our intention is to look across the complete pathway of the disease, from research to hospice care and from prevention to the application of the latest treatments.

I do not believe a Cabinet Committee would improve the Government's ability to address this important issue.

European Union

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister if it is his policy to assist in the development of a single economy and a single political unity within the European Union. [84212]

The Prime Minister: No. As I said in my speech in Aachen last week, this Government has made huge strides in improving Britain's relations with Europe. We will engage with Europe to push forward on the economic reform agenda, making ourselves more competitive, developing a European defence capability and a co-ordinated approach to foreign policy issues. I believe we need to integrate when necessary and decentralise where possible.

Bilderberg Group

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hereford (Mr. Keetch) of 7 May 1999, Official Report, columns 476–77, on the Bilderberg Group, what official (i) transport and (ii) funds have been used to facilitate attendance at Bilderberg meetings of members of his Government; which members have attended meetings; what reports they have made on the meetings; and what subsequent communication they have had with others attending on subjects discussed at the meetings. [84213]

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, only one member of this Government—the Defence Secretary—has attended a meeting of the Bilderberg Group. He provided a detailed account of his attendance in answers to the hon. Members for Ludlow (Mr. Gill) on 23 July 1998, Official Report, column 609, and for Hereford (Mr. Keetch) on 20 July 1998, Official Report, column 434.

MI6

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what methods are used to identify and recruit MI6 personnel; and if he will make a statement. [84630]

The Prime Minister: The Secret Intelligence Service recruits a wide range of staff, including specialists, graduates and school leavers. Before an offer of appointment is confirmed, candidates are vetted to the highest level of security clearance, known as Developed Vetting. The Service adopts, as far as is practicable, the civil service code of practice on recruitment, to ensure that the procedures used are as open and as fair as possible. Recruitment policies are kept under constant review and a number of improvements have been made over the past three years to ensure that they remain effective and that a wide range of candidates is able to apply.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister how many civilians have been killed as a result of the use of (a) British and (b) NATO weapons in operation Allied Force against Yugoslavia. [84644]

The Prime Minister: As I said in the House last week, we do everything we can to avoid civilian casualties and minimise damage to civilian property. The cases of injury and death among civilians which have nevertheless occurred by accident have been acknowledged by NATO and are deeply regretted; they are a regrettable consequence of having to use force to stop the violence which Milosevic has unleashed against the people of Kosovo. They stand in contrast to the deliberate murders and brutalities of the Milosevic regime. Verification of civilian casualties is not possible as access to sites is controlled by the Milosevic regime. Alleged evidence of fatalities claimed to arise from allied action should therefore always be treated with great caution.

War Widows' Pensions

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 12 May 1999, Official Report, column 315, if he will make a statement on the progress of his review into the way in which war widows pensions relate to housing benefit. [84665]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 May 1999]: The mandatory disregards for War Disablement and War Widows' Pensions that already exist in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit recognise the special nature of these pensions, and ensure that the pensioners receive preferential treatment. For example, a war pensioner can have between £10 and £181 a week of his pension disregarded on a statutory basis.

We will keep this under review, but further extending existing disregards is not a main priority: A full disregard of War Disablement and War Widows' Pension in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit would cost in the region of an additional £70 million a year.

Rural Representation

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 12 May 1999, Official Report, column 318, what was the basis for his statement relating to rural representation in the House. [84666]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 18 May 1999]: The Boundary Commission defines as county constituencies those that are "primarily rural". 170 county constituencies are held by Labour, compared with 135 by the Conservatives and 32 by the Liberal Democrats.

Cabinet Meetings

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister on what basis Cabinet meetings are held in his absence. [84768]

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave her in the House on Wednesday 19 May 1999, Official Report, column 1060.

Secretary of State for Wales

Mr. Evans: To ask the Prime Minister when he plans to announce his decision on the separation of the functions of the Secretary of State for Wales and the First Secretary. [84796]

The Prime Minister: The functions of the Secretary of State for Wales which will be transferred to the National Assembly for Wales on 1 July are listed in the National Assembly for Wales (Transfer of Functions) Order 1999. The functions of the First Secretary of the National Assembly for Wales include those which are conferred by the Government of Wales Act 1998 and related legislation, but are otherwise a matter for the Assembly.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Prime Minister when he intends to publish the Government's response to the Intelligence and Security Committee's report on Sierra Leone. [85205]

The Prime Minister: The Government has carefully considered the findings in the Intelligence and Security Committee's Report on the intelligence aspects of the counter-coup in Sierra Leone. The Government's response to the report is being published today.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorist Activities

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when, where and by what means (a) Judge William Doyle, (b) Mr. Edgar Graham, (c) Lord Justice Gibson and his wife, (d) Resident Magistrate W. Staunton and (e) Resident Magistrate Martin McBirney were murdered; which terrorist organisation was responsible; how many persons have been brought before the courts for that crime; and what sentences were imposed. [81166]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 April 1999]: The information requested is as follows:

Judge William Doyle: At approximately 12.55 pm on 16 January 1983, Judge Doyle was shot in Derryvolgie Avenue, Belfast, having just left Mass at St. Brigid's Church. An elderly lady passenger in the vehicle was seriously injured. The murder was claimed by the Irish Republican Army. to date no person has been made amenable.

Mr. Edgar Graham: At approximately 10.50 am on 7 December 1983, at University Square, Belfast, Mr. Graham was shot dead. The murder was claimed by the Irish Republican Army.

RUC investigations resulted in one person being convicted of making property available and withholding information and sentenced to 2 years imprisonment suspended for 3 years. Another person, convicted of withholding information, was sentenced to 18 months imprisonment suspended for 2 years.

A number of other persons were arrested and interviewed in relation to this murder but released without charge.

Lord Justice Sir Maurice Gibson and Lady Cecily Gibson: At approximately 8.40 am on 25 April 1987, an explosion occurred on the Dublin Road at Killeen, Newry. Lord Justice Gibson and his wife were fatally injured. They had been returning home from a short holiday in England and had travelled overnight on the car ferry from Liverpool to Dublin. Explosives had been placed in a vehicle parked at the roadside and were detonated as the Gibson's car passed. The murders have been attributed to the Irish Republican Army but despite extensive inquiries no one to date has been made amenable.

William John Staunton RM: At approximately 8.50 am on 11 October 1972, Mr. Staunton stopped his car outside St. Dominic's Convent Grammar School, Falls Road, Belfast. As his daughter and some school friends alighted from the vehicle to enter the school, a motor cycle drew up alongside and the pillion passenger shot Mr. Staunton. He was taken to the Royal Victoria Hospital where he underwent emergency surgery. He never regained consciousness and died at 9.55 pm on Thursday 25 January 1973.

The murder was attributed to the Irish Republican Army. Two persons were arrested, interviewed and released without charge. To date no one has been made amenable.

Robert Martin McBirney QC, RM: At approximately 8.20 am on 16 September 1974, Mr. McBirney was shot in his home at 172 Belmont Road, Belfast. A man was seen to get out of a car and walk to the rear of the McBirney home. The man was then observed leaving and getting back into the car which had two other occupants. The car was located some 500 yards from the scene of the murder. Its occupants were seen to drive off in another vehicle. The car used to convey the gunmen to and from the scene had been hi-jacked on the morning of the murder. It was attributed to the Irish Republican Army.

Police investigations linked one person to the murder who was also identified as being the gunman. He was subsequently charged and convicted of murder and received a life sentence.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when, where and by what means Resident Magistrate Mr. Tom Travers and his wife were injured and their daughter murdered; which terrorist organisation was responsible; how many persons have been brought before the courts for that crime; and what sentences were imposed. [81167]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 April 1999]: At approximately 1 pm on 8 April 1984, Mr. Thomas Travers RM, his wife and their daughter Mary were walking to their home having just attended Mass at St. Brigid's Church in Derryvolgie Avenue when they were attacked by two gunmen. As a result Mary Travers was fatally wounded and Thomas Travers was seriously wounded. Mrs. Travers escaped injury. The attack was attributed to the Irish Republican Army.

Shortly after the incident police arrested a young woman in the Wellington Park area of the city. She was found to have two handguns in her possession. Both guns were later linked to the attack on the Travers family. She was subsequently convicted of the murder of Mary Travers and the attempted murder of Thomas Travers and received a life sentence.

A second person was arrested some seven weeks later and was identified by Mr. Travers as being one of the gunmen. However, he was acquitted of all charges.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when, where, and by what means Judge Rory Conaghan was murdered; which terrorist organisation was responsible; how many persons have been brought before the courts for that crime; and what sentences were imposed. [81245]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 16 April 1999]: At approximately 8.30 am on 16 September 1974, a person, posing as a postman, rang the doorbell of Judge Conaghan's home at 17 Beechlands, Malone Road, Belfast. The door was answered by Judge Conaghan. He was shot and fatally wounded. The gunman made off and was seen to get into a car which was driven by another person. The car was later abandoned in Windsor Avenue, Belfast. Witnesses observed that two males and a girl were seen to leave the car. The vehicle had been taken from its owner in the Dermott Hill Road, Belfast earlier that day by a person claiming to be from the Irish Republican Army.

To date, no one has been made amenable for Judge Conaghan's murder.

Belfast Brook Pregnancy Advisory Clinic

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will list the amount of Government grants given to the Belfast Brook Pregnancy Advisory Clinic for each year since 1990 (a) directly and (b) through health boards and trusts. [84409]

Mr. McFall: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Directly: nil

(b) Through boards and trusts:

Year	£
1991–92	30,000
1992–93	31,500
1993–94	31,500
1994–95	45,172
1995–96	49,847
1996–97	67,468
1997–98	72,340
1998–99	69,096

Sports Funding

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much public funding has been given to (a) the Irish Rugby Football Union, (b) the Irish Football Association, (c) the Northern Ireland Cricket Association and (d) the Irish Hockey Union in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [84323]

Mr. McFall: Responsibility for funding sports organisations rests with the Sports Council of Northern Ireland, who have advised me that the total amount of public funding from normal funding and the Lottery for the Irish Rugby Football Union (IRFU), the Irish Football Association (IFA), the Northern Ireland Cricket Association (NICA) and the Irish Hockey Union (IHU) is as follows:

	IRFU	IFA	NICA	IHU
1998–99	10,073.85	53,548.67	41,384.02	36,671.13
1997–98	23,544.45	47,719.56	25,866.20	19,177.42
1996–97	5,829.75	60,115.03	24,799.46	31,623.09
1995–96	3,631.35	[1]40,856.03	24,357.75	47,829.14
1994–95	6,973.70	15,148.44	23,865.75	31,730.94

Census Returns

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if she will publish the text of the (a) non-statutory assurances of confidentiality and

(b) 100-year extended closure given by the Registrar General on the householders' forms for the 20th century censuses of population for Northern Ireland. [84491]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The assurances on confidentiality listed on household forms for the 20th century censuses of population for Northern Ireland are as follows:

1928 and 1937:

All particulars given in the Return will be regarded as strictly confidential and will be issued only to prepare general census summaries.

1951:

All particulars given in this Return will be regarded as strictly confidential.

1961:

The contents of this Return are strictly confidential.

1971:

The information you give on the form will be treated as "Confidential" and used only for compiling statistics. No information about named individuals will be passed by the Census Office to any other Government Department or any other Authority or person.

1981:

The information which you give on the form will be treated as "Strictly Confidential" and will be used only for compiling statistics. No names and addresses will be fed into the computer and no information about named individuals will be passed by the Census Office to any other Government Department or to any other Authority or person.

1991:

Your answers will be treated in strict confidence and used only to produce statistics. No names and addresses will be put into the computer; only the postcode will be entered. The forms will be kept securely and treated as confidential. No information about named individuals will be passed by the Census Office to any other Government Department or to any other authority or person.

Note:

The Censuses of 1901 and 1911 were taken on an all Ireland basis. The original census records are held in Dublin.

The Census Act (Northern Ireland, 1969 requires that information obtained from Northern Ireland censuses is to be used for census purposes only and that census records are to be kept closed.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to section 123 of the White Paper on the 2001 Census, when she plans to bring forward proposals for an end to the permanent closure to public inspection of Northern Ireland census returns. [84499]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Census White Paper (cm 4253) indicated that consideration would be given to availing of a suitable legislative opportunity to introduce to Northern Ireland similar provisions to those in Great Britain on the closure of historic census records. To date, no suitable opportunity has arisen, but the position is kept under continuous review.

Carryduff Primary School

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans she has to grant Carryduff Primary School integrated status; and if she will make a statement. [84570]

Mr. McFall: The Department of Education is aware of local interest in the establishment of an integrated primary school in the Carryduff area, but I understand that developments are at a very early stage. The transformation of Carryduff Primary School to controlled integrated status is a matter for the school's Board of Governors and the South Eastern Education and Library Board to consider in the first instance. If the school decides to seek integrated status this would involve a ballot of parents and the publication of a statutory development proposal by the Education and Library Board.

Military Complaints Procedures

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when she intends to lay before Parliament Mr. Jim McDonald's annual report as Independent Assessor of Military Complaints Procedures in Northern Ireland. [85206]

Marjorie Mowlam: Mr. McDonald's report is being published today and copies are being placed in the Library.

I note that Mr. McDonald has said that the complaints procedures are given proper attention by the Army and are being operated fairly, I note also that there has been a marked decrease in the overall number of complaints received.

The Report provides valuable reassurances to Government and the public that the Army's complaints procedures stand scrutiny.

Prison Service

Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Northern Ireland Prison Service intends to publish its 1999–2002 Corporate and Business Plan; and what performance targets have been set for 1999–2000. [85207]

Marjorie Mowlam: The Northern Ireland Prison Service's Corporate and Business Plan for 1999–2002 was published today. The following key performance targets have been set for 1999–2000:

1. To ensure 100 per cent. security for prisoners in high and top risk categories.
2. To ensure at least 99.5 per cent. security for prisoners in medium and low risk categories.
3. To ensure that the number of significant breaches of order and control does not exceed 7.1 per 100 prisoners.
4. To introduce a system of booked visits to a prison establishment by march 2000.
5. To increase the target number of hours of constructive activity undertaken each week by prisoners by 3 per cent. from 22.85 hours to 23.5 hours.
6. To offer sentence planning to all eligible prisoners and to achieve a 50 per cent. uptake.
7. To achieve an average of 5 days training and development per member of staff.
8. To ensure that the average cost per prisoner place does not exceed £83,426[1]

[1] This figure is higher than in 1998–99, as the number of staffed prisoner places has reduced to 1,597 as a result of the closure of 2 Blocks at the Maze. The number may alter again during 1999–2000 in the light of developments. The target net operating costs for 1999–2000 are 3.4 per cent. lower in real terms than the target net operating costs for 1998–99, excluding the exceptional redundancy costs in both years.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Death Penalty (Commonwealth Countries)

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Council, pursuant to her answer of 19 April 1999, Official Report, column 467, on the death penalty in Commonwealth countries for how long each of the appeals and applications for appeal in Trinidad and Tobago have been outstanding; and when each person was sentenced to death. [84683]

Mrs. Beckett: The seven appeals from Trinidad and Tobago referred to in my answer of 19 April were registered in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the following dates:

P.C. Appeal number	Registration date
(1) 29 of 1998	11 May 1998
(2) 32 of 1998	12 May 1998
(3) 40 of 1998	28 May 1998
(4) 63 of 1998	30 September 1998
(5) 73 of 1998	12 November 1998
(6) 75 of 1998	10 December 1998
(7) 4 of 1999	12 February 1999

The first three listed have since been heard and judgment is awaited.

The 10 petitions for leave to appeal referred to in the answer of 19 April were lodged with the Judicial Committee Registry on the following dates:

Petitions
1	15 July 1997
2	8 October 1997
3	19 February 1998
4	3 June 1998
5	16 February 1999
6	8 March 1999
7	8 March 1999
8	25 March 1999
9	30 March 1999
10	31 March 1999

Five of these petitions have now been heard. Two have been granted, two have been dismissed and one has been adjourned to await the determination of another case. The sentence of death in each of the above appeals and petitions was passed on various dates between 12 February 1996 and 29 May 1998.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

ICL Pathway Project

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post offices remain to be computerised under the ICL Pathway Project. [84253]

Mr. Ian McCartney [holding answer 14 May 1999]: At the end of March 1999, the Post Office network comprised 18,775 offices. To date, 204 offices have been automated under the ICL Pathway Project.

Fireworks

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will discuss with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions trends in harassment and nuisance arising from the misuse of fireworks; and if he will make an assessment of the risks to consumer safety arising from such misuse. [84691]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has no responsibility for the harassment and nuisance issues arising from fireworks.

Firework incidents that occur in the street during the November firework season and require treatment by A&E departments are recorded in the DTI's census of firework injuries, which is conducted over a four-week period covering the run-up to 5 November and a few days afterwards. The summary report of firework injuries treated during the 1998 firework season—a copy of which is in the Library of the House—shows that there was a 12 per cent. drop, from 256 in 1997 to 226 in 1998, in hooligan-related injuries.

The Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1997, among other things, introduced controls on the supply of certain fireworks, including some types that are most often misused. These controls, together with a targeted safety campaign, played a significant part in reducing the number of firework injuries and incidents of misuse during the last firework season.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements are in place to ensure that imported fireworks placed on the market in the United Kingdom have received authorisation and categorisation by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions, [84692]

Mr. Meale: I have been asked to reply.

It is a requirement in law that any commercial explosive, including fireworks be classified by the Health and Safety Executive before it is imported into the UK. It is also a requirement under section 40(9) of the Explosives Act 1875 for explosives to be authorised. The conditions for authorisation have been published by the HSE. In the case of fireworks, authorisation is conditional on compliance with the requirements of British Standard 7114:1988. This is also a requirement under the Firework (Safety) Regulations 1997 which are enforced by Local Authority Trading Standards officers.

If satisfied with an application for classification, the HSE issues a Competent Authority Document assigning the fireworks to an appropriate Hazard Classification and United Nations Serial Number. The details of each classified firework are held on a database and published as a list from time to time. The Competent Authority Document also acts to authorise the fireworks but this is subject to the fireworks meeting the relevant conditions for authorisation. Any firework not meeting these conditions would be considered not to be Authorised.

The HSE has enforcement powers under the applicable classification regulations and will take appropriate action where unclassified or unauthorised fireworks are found in the UK. Checks for compliance are made as part of the normal duties of the explosives inspectorate such as inspection of explosives factories and magazines, checks of transport activity, liaison and support to local authorities and investigation of incidents and complaints.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the likely trends in the use of fireworks at the time of the millennium celebrations; and what plans he has to promote consumer safety associated with that use. [84690]

Dr. Howells: It is expected that fireworks will feature in Millennium celebrations, but it is not possible to predict patterns of use. DTI officials are currently working on a publicity strategy to address firework safety issues for the 1999 firework season and the Millennium celebrations. Discussions are also taking place with the fireworks industry about the period when fireworks should be sold and other safety issues associated with the use of fireworks over the Millennium.

Utilities (Regulations)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers his Department retains to ensure that the plans of the utilities it regulates for asset replacement are consistent with (a) safety and (b) the national interest. [84766]

Mr. Battle: The Director-General of Electricity Supply and my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State have duties under the Electricity Act to protect the public from dangers arising from the generation, transmission or supply of electricity. The Director-General of Gas Supply and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State have duties under the Gas Act to protect the public from dangers arising from the conveyance of gas through pipes or the use of such gas. Regulations made under these Acts, including the Electricity Supply Regulations, make further provision for these matters.

The Department has no specific powers to regulate the plans of gas, electricity or telecommunications companies for asset replacement. Various aspects of the statutory or regulatory framework within which these industries operate may, however, constrain these plans. In general, the regulatory requirements focus on the outcomes which must be achieved; it is for the companies themselves to consider any implications for their asset replacement policies and act accordingly.

The Gas, Electricity and Telecommunications Acts, other relevant legislation and licence conditions also provide appropriate protection for certain relevant matters for national interest reasons, in particular security of supply and maintenance of supplies or communications in emergencies.

Mines Legislation

Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make an announcement on the outcome of the consultation on the Mines (Working Facilities and Support) Acts 1966 and 1974. [85231]

Mr. Battle: The Government have concluded that no amendments to the legislation are required at present, although we shall monitor the application of these Acts to the individual minerals industries to determine whether any amendments might be desirable in the future.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Dome

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the nations which have (a) agreed and (b) declined to participate in the nation a day theme in the Millennium Dome. [81751]

Janet Anderson: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has invited countries from around the world to put forward their proposals for World Stage 2000. This will provide an opportunity for international participation in the Millennium Experience. A number of positive preliminary inquiries have been received and are the subject of discussion with NMEC. Firm proposals are expected in the next few weeks.

Gwrych Castle

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Wales about the condition of Gwrych Castle; and if he will make a statement. [84736]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 19 May 1999]: None. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is responsible for built heritage matters in Wales. This is a matter for which National Assembly of Wales will be responsible after devolution.

SCOTLAND

East Lothian Local Plan

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the (a) duration and (b) cost of the inquiry into objections to the East Lothian Local Plan; if he will compensate East Lothian Council for the costs of the inquiry; and if he will make it his policy to require objectors with financial interests in proposed developments to contribute to the costs of inquiries. [84088]

Mr. Macdonald: The duration of the East Lothian Local Plan Inquiry is estimated to be 17 weeks, with less than 2 weeks to run.

It is long established practice for parties to local inquiries to meet their own costs, except where unreasonable behaviour by another party justifies an award of expenses. Accordingly, the Secretary of State has no plans to compensate the Council for their costs.

From 1 July 1999, this will be a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Entry Clearance

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people were waiting in each of the queues for settlement entry clearance at each of the British posts in the Asian subcontinent at the latest available date. [84655]

Mr. Hoon: The statistics requested are as follows. Figures are for the end of April 1999.

Post	Applicants	Q1 [1]	Q2 [2]	Q3 [3]	Q4 [4]
Bombay	633	0	427	110	96
Calcutta	1	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a
Colombo	56	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a
Dhaka	1,039	31	687	14	307
Islamabad	4,171	93	3,651	258	169
Karachi	114	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a
Madras	30	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a
New Delhi	709	6	467	199	37

[1] Right of Abode claimants; dependent relatives over 65; special compassionate cases.
[2] Spouses, children under 18.
[3] Fiance(e)s, other settlement categories.
[4] Re-applicants.
Note:
Calcutta, Colombo, Karachi and Madras do not operate separate queues.

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the income from entry clearance fees in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1995–96 at (i) each British post in the Asian subcontinent, (ii) Lagos, (iii) Abuja, (iv) Accra, (v) Manila, (vi) Moscow and (vii) Bogota; and what is the estimated entry clearance fee income at each of those posts for (1) 1998–99 and (2) 1999–2000. [84662]

Mr. Hoon: Income for the entry clearance posts in question for the three years since 1996–97 is as follows:

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Abuja	301,397	382,986	497,693
Accra	831,432	877,599	1,101,338
Bogota	50,588	763,799	862,794
Bombay	2,644,376	3,128,548	3,330,583
Calcutta	380,253	412,918	412,869
Dhaka	1,459,555	1,657,039	1,606,508
Islamabad	2,635,300	3,483,264	4,317,212
Karachi	1,155,776	1,266,296	1,406,598
Lagos	2,108,116	1,816,027	2,071,149
Madras	765,364	954,617	1,091,499
Manila	916,781	920,567	882,930
Moscow	2,624,607	3,261,819	2,650,806
New Delhi	2,366,637	2,838,608	3,022,050

Details of income from entry clearance fees for the financial year 1995–96 are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Based on previous trends, we would expect to see an increase in worldwide demand for visas in 1999–2000 of around 3 per cent. We are currently forecasting an increase in global income of about 2.6 per cent. for that year to £67.9 million. Because of the differences in application profiles we do not make estimate of income for individual posts.

UN Special Rapporteur (Human Rights and States of Emergency)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the most recent communications he has (a) sent to and (b) received from the UN special rapporteur with responsibility for human rights and states of emergency. [84781]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: There is no record of any communication either to or from the UN Special Rapporteur with responsibility for human rights and states of emergency since this Government came to power in May 1997.

Treaty of Amsterdam

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the Treaty of Amsterdam to come into force. [82714]

Ms Quin [pursuant to her reply, 28 April 1999, c. 180]: An administrative error led to a mistake in my earlier answer to the hon. Member of 28 April. The correct answer is as follows.

The process of ratification of the Treaty of Amsterdam was completed on 30 March, when France deposited its instruments of ratification with the Italian Government.

The Treaty entered into force on 1 May 1999, in accordance with Article 14(2) of the Treaty of Amsterdam.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Grammar Schools

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of grammar schools have attained beacon school status. [84869]

Ms Estelle Morris: Five grammar schools (3 per cent.) have now been awarded Beacon school status.

Catering Job Vacancies

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his Department's estimate of current vacancies in the catering sector in (a) the North West of England and (b) Sefton. [84416]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Office for National Statistics publishes a seasonally unadjusted quarterly count of vacancies notified to Employment Service Jobcentres broken down by 1992 Standard Industrial Classification (SIC92) category—it combines catering and hotels.

(a) Focusing on Jobcentres in the North West Government Office Region:

in the 12 months ending April 1999, there were around 40,600 notified vacancies in the hotel and catering industry—representing approximately 15 per cent. of notified vacancies.

in April 1999, there were around 4,400 unfilled vacancies in the hotels and catering industry.

(b) Focusing on Jobcentres in the Sefton metropolitan district:

in the 12 months ending April 1999, there were around 1,900 notified vacancies in the hotel and catering industry—representing approximately 14 per cent. of notified vacancies.

in April 1999, there were around 200 unfilled vacancies in the hotels and catering industry.

Not all vacancies are, however, notified to Employment Service Jobcentres.

Class Sizes (Isle of Wight)

Dr. Brand: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list for schools in the Isle of Wight Local Education Authority the change in the average size of classes, taught by one teacher, between January 1998 and January 1999 for pupils in (a) nursery classes, (b) Key Stage Two and (c) secondary schools. [84718]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on class sizes for individual schools is not published centrally. The available information for Isle of Wight Local Education Authority area is shown in the table.

The Government have pledged to reduce infant class sizes to 30 or below by September 2001 at the latest, and we are on course to meet that pledge.

Average class size of one teacher classes, Isle of Wight local education authority area

January each year	1998	1999
Nursery classes	36.7	27.0
Key Stage One	25.7	23.8
Key Stage Two	27.6	28.3
Overall Primary	26.5	25.6
Secondary	22.4	22.4

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Fuel Duty Escalator

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 April 1999, Official Report, column 299, what methodology will be used to assess the impact of the fuel duty escalator on transport emissions and when an accurate assessment of impact will be prepared. [81619]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We draw on a number of forecasting techniques to estimate the impact of the fuel duty escalator on emissions. These techniques principally focus on the long-term, since the fuel duty escalator is a long-term policy. Our forecasting methods are kept under review, and adjustments are made as and when improved techniques or new data become available.

To some degree all these methods rely on statistical analysis of historic data, and we suspect that we will need a number of further years' traffic and emissions data before we can make a definitive short-term assessment of the impact of fuel duty increases since 1996. Even then, such an assessment will remain reliant on forecasts of what would have happened had the increases not been implemented, and will not pick up the full effects of the policy which will only become apparent over the longer term. Work in this area continues, and we will make available short-term estimates to complement the long-term estimates we have already published, once these can be provided with an acceptable degree of reliability.

National Land Use Database

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he plans to publish the National Land Use Data Base. [84365]

Mr. Caborn: I am today publishing the first results of the National Land Use Database (NLUD). This shows that there are around 33,000 hectares of previously developed vacant and derelict land in England of which about a third could be recycled for housing. Another 23,000 hectares are currently in productive use but are planned or expected to become available for redevelopment. Together, this is capable of accommodating more than 710,000 dwellings.

The Government's target is that 60 per cent. of additional homes should be built on previously developed land or should utilise existing buildings. We have always said that this target is tough but achievable. Latest figures show that we had reached 56 per cent. by 1996.

The results of NLUD are a snap-shot in time and provide only part of the information about the position in reaching the target. The stock of land and buildings available for recycling is continually being added to, as well as being developed for housing and other purposes, and these changes have to be fully taken into account. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has therefore asked the Urban Task Force to review the future availability of recycled land and buildings, taking account of the NLUD data. The Task Force expects to present its report at the end of next month.

Everybody has to have the opportunity of a decent home in which to live. New houses have to be built but in a sustainable way which helps put new life into our towns and cities, makes best use of land and does not squander the precious resource of our English countryside. Policies to achieve these objectives were set out in our revised Planning Policy Guidance note 3: Housing, which was issued for consultation at the end of March.

Today's publication represents the first step towards a comprehensive National Land Use Database which my Department is developing in partnership with local government, English Partnerships and Ordnance Survey.

The statistical bulletin released today gives national and regional results for different types of land, with information about planned uses and assessments of suitability for housing. Some results are also being made available for individual local planning authorities.

This information will be valuable to all those concerned with planning and urban regeneration, including the regional planning conferences—who will be setting regional targets for the re-use of previously developed land for new housing, English Partnerships—who are doing further work on key sites, and the Regional Development Agencies and local authorities who have a key role in supporting the development of previously used sites.

I want to thank local authorities for their splendid efforts in helping us assembly the new database. The data will be useful to them as well as us in seeking to make the very best use of recycled land. The intention now is to build on this work by working with them to develop a system to keep the information up to date, and to expand the scope of the database to encompass all land uses.

Fireworks

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many cases of nuisance caused by misuse of fireworks were reported to environmental service departments between January 1998 and January 1999. [84695]

Mr. Meale: Information on the number of cases reported to environmental service departments is not collected centrally.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications for authorisation and categorisation of fireworks to be imported to the United Kingdom there have been each year since 1996; how many were (a) approved and (b) denied; and what were the categories involved in each case. [84696]

Mr. Meale: The applications received by the HSE for the classification and authorisation of fireworks since 1996 are as follows:

Year	Number of Applications
1996	13
1997	54
1998	42
1999	14

No applications were refused. The fireworks covered by these applications were in any of the four British Standards categories.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the contribution which switching wherever practical to (a) energy-efficient light bulbs and (b) semi-conductor (gallium nitride) illumination in traffic lights, would make toward meeting the UK's obligations under the Kyoto Accord. [84549]

Mr. Meale: We have made no overall assessment of potential energy savings from improved traffic lights but we are aware of the developing technology in this area which could yield savings in the longer term. In particular, my Department participates in an International Energy Agency technology procurement agreement which includes a project to bring forward semi-conductor (Light Emitting Diode) traffic light technology. The first UK site trial was started last summer. Savings in both energy and replacement costs of as much as 60 per cent. are predicted but no firm figures are yet available. The trial was actively encouraged by the Highways Agency who formed a partnership, to promote this technology, with Bristol City Council and the manufacturer.

Since then the traffic light developed from that trial has been approved against the national specification. Several local authorities have already installed the new signals. There is at present only the one company involved but the recent approval is encouraging several others, who are now actively engaged in the approval process.

Airport Capacity

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received on runway capacity at airports in the South of England; and if he will make a statement. [84561]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We receive a steady flow of correspondence from various organisations and members of the public, directly or indirectly relating to runway capacity at airports in the South of England. In its Eighth Report on Regional Air Services, published on 27 July 1998, the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Committee of the House of Commons, stated that > "The Government must address the question of capacity in the South-East as a matter of urgency".

On 11 March 1999, Official Report, columns 360–61, we announced our decision to set in hand a study of airports issues in the South-East of England and the East of England. This study will consider future policies for these airports within the framework of the Government's sustainable development principles. The study will examine a wide range of options and, in accordance with the new approach to appraisal set out in the New Deal for Transport White Paper, will appraise their economic, environmental and social implications. The study will consider both terminal and runway capacity. Following completion of the study, there will be public consultation on options arising from this work. The results of the airport studies will be incorporated in a White Paper on UK airports policy looking some 30 years ahead. The White Paper will also reflect the Government's decisions in response to the Inspector's report on the Heathrow Terminal 5 Inquiry.

Roads (Aggregates)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of the aggregates and other material from redundant roads is recycled and used in new roads. [84686]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no comprehensive statistical source from which this percentage can be calculated. A 1995–96 OECD Survey on recycling of road by-products reported in "Recycling Strategies for Road Works" (OECD 1997) found that in the UK 90 per cent. of reclaimed asphalt and 75 per cent. of concrete derived from old road pavements were recycled, but not necessarily for use in roads.

Concessionary Travel

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress towards introducing a national concessionary travel scheme for pensioners. [84860]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We will bring forward legislation as soon as Parliamentary time permits to provide for the minimum half-fare scheme for pensioners which we have already proposed. It is open to individual local authorities to introduce such a scheme on their own initiative, before legislation is introduced, for example if at present they provide a less generous scheme, or no scheme at all.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the locations of new landfill sites currently under planning consideration to receive household and organic waste. [84431]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning applications for landfill sites to receive household and organic waste are normally dealt with by the local planning authority. The Secretary of State will become aware of such an application only if it is referred to him as a departure from the development plan, if he has called it in for his own determination, or is considering doing so, or if it is subject to an appeal. There are, at present, 12 landfill proposals which fall within the above categories. These are:

1. Brogborough Tip, Brogborough, Bedfordshire;
2. Bell House Landfill Site, Colchester, Essex;
3. Alton Road Site, Waverley, Surrey;
4. Lamberhurst Farm Site, Lamberhurst, Kent;
5. Tiptree Farm, Sittingbourne, Kent;
6. High Lane Void, Silverdale, Staffordshire;
7. Hadley Quarry, Ketley, Shropshire;
8. Buck Park Quarry, Bradford;
9. Thurcroft Site, Thurcroft, Rotherham;
10. Houghton Quarry, Houghton-le-Spring, Sunderland;
11. Broadoak Site, Hamsterley, Northumberland;
12. Round "O" Quarry, Skelmersdale.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will list by local authority the local targets and current achievement for recycling of household waste; [84432]

(2) if he will list those local authorities which run waste plastic collection and recycling schemes. [84514]

Mr. Meale: The Department does not require local authorities to set targets for recycling. Data from the municipal waste survey for the year 1997–98 are currently being validated against previous years' data. I hope to be able to let my hon. Friend have a full reply to his question on Friday 4 June.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures are in place for monitoring the accuracy of local authorities' waste recycling figures . [84433]

Mr. Meale: Data for each local authority collected from the Department's annual municipal waste survey are compared with previous years' figures, and with data from other comparable authorities.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action the Government are taking to encourage the recycling of plastics. [84434]

Mr. Meale: The Government have established a Market Development Group to consider the measures that could be taken to enhance the markets for recycled materials, including plastics, and to develop proposals to help overcome any barriers. The Group is considering a range of measures to improve stability and demand in the markets for recyclate, including the development of new markets and the use of economic instruments. The report of the Group will be published for consultation at the same time as the draft waste strategy.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how much plastic waste has been imported into the UK each year since 1994. [84435]

Mr. Meale: Plastic wastes are usually regarded as non-hazardous waste under Council Regulation (EEC) No.259/93 on the supervision and control of shipments of waste within, into and out of the European Community. Imports of such waste for recovery is subject to commercial controls only, and information is not therefore collated by the competent authorities. Nor is the information available on the imports/exports database held by the Department of Trade and Industry, since the entry that covers plastic "waste" also includes a large number of substances which are not waste.

Whilst the Council Regulation requires imports of non-hazardous waste for disposal, and of hazardous wastes for disposal and recovery, to be notified to the competent authorities, information available to the competent authorities indicate that there have been no notified imports of plastic waste over this period.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what is his estimate of the percentages of (a) metals other than aluminium, (b) aluminium, (c) paper, (d) plastics, (e) glass and (f) organic materials recycled in the last year for which figures are available. [84528]

Mr. Meale: The most recent data on recycling rates supplied to the Department for each of the following materials are as follows:

Material	Estimated recycling rate [1] Percentage	Date of estimate
Copper	37	1997
Lead	68	1997
Zinc	19	1997
Aluminium scrap	44	1996
Ferrous scrap	45	1997
Paper	38	1997
Glass	26	1996

[1] Material re-used as a percentage of consumption

With regard to plastics and organic waste, we do not collect data on the amount recycled.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what legislation regulates the siting of television and mobile phone masts; and if he will make a statement. [84871]

Mr. Raynsford: The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 (GPDO) grants a general planning permission for telecommunications masts, including those used for television broadcasting and those for mobile communications, providing the mast is erected by a telecommunications code system operator licensed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under the Telecommunications Act 1984;

the mast does not exceed 15 metres in height;

the mast is not erected in a National Park, area of outstanding natural beauty, conservation area, or the Broads; and the mast is not refused prior approval by the local planning authority within the period allowed under the Order. The authority must be given the opportunity to say whether they wish to approve, within 28 days, details of the mast's siting and appearance. The authority may refuse approval if they consider there to be a serious threat to amenity.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning indicated in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, East and Mexborough (Mr. Ennis), on 16 November 1998, Official Report, columns 343–44, our intention to make a number of changes to the GPDO in respect of telecommunications development. We anticipate that these changes will be made shortly. A full application for planning permission is normally required for any mast which does not enjoy the general planning permission granted under permitted development rights.

HEALTH

Beta Interferon

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when funding for beta interferon will be available in all health districts. [81742]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable) on 13 May 1999, Official Report, column 202.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost of prescription charges to the NHS in the year 1998. [83334]

Mr. Denham: In 1997–98 the cost of dispensed prescriptions written by general practitioners in England was £4,085 million. A further £768 million was paid to dispensing contractors in respect of their prescriptions.

Aricept

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what ethical guidelines are given to Government-supported medical researchers into the Alzheimer's drug Aricept about administering placebos to patients who could benefit from the drug. [84261]

Mr. Hutton: All research involving patients and supported by the Department, the National Health Service or the Medical Research Council is required to obtain ethical approval from the appropriate research ethics committee(s). Scientific review mechanisms also consider ethical aspects of research, including the appropriateness of randomisation and other study designs, and the use of placebos.

Guidance on research ethics is provided in the Department's Guidance for Local Research Ethics Committees and for Mulitcentre Research Ethics Committees, in conjunction with: the Royal College of Physicians' "Guidelines on the Practice of Ethics Committees in Medical Research involving Human Subjects"; and the Medical Research Council's "Guidelines for Good Practice in Clinical Trials". Copies of these will be placed in the Library.

The AD2000 trial of Aricept is being supported through the NHS research and development programme. The protocol allows for patients to be randomly assigned to Aricept or a placebo when there is uncertainty (on the basis of the known effects of Aricept and the characteristics of the patient), as to whether or not Aricept would offer the patient any overall benefit. The trial has been approved by the Regional Multi-Centre Research Ethics committee and the Local Research Ethics Committee for each particular centre at which the trial is being conducted.

Oncologists

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many oncologists are employed per head of population in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) each EU country, (c) Canada, (d) the USA and (e) Japan; and if he will make a statement. [84238]

Mr. Denham: The whole-time equivalent number of Medical Oncology staff per head of 100,000 population in England is 0.44[1].

The whole-time equivalent number of Clinical Oncology staff (Radiotherapists) per head of 100,000 population in England is 1.15[1].

Numbers for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland respectively. Numbers for European Union countries, Canada, the United States of America and Japan are not available centrally.

PFI (Hospitals)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on what date the NHS Capital Prioritisation Group completed its assessment of the hospital development schemes currently seeking prioritisation for PFI funding; [84273]

(2) for what reasons the announcements of the schemes to be implemented following the assessment by the NHS Capital Prioritisation Group of the proposals submitted has not yet been made; [84272]

(3) on what date the NHS Capital Prioritisation Group's assessment of the hospital development schemes currently seeking prioritisation for PFI funding was made available to Ministers at his Department; [84271]

(4) when the announcement as to which of the hospital development schemes currently seeking investment prioritisation have been successful will be made. [84276]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service Capital Prioritisation Advisory Group completed its assessment of the 10 schemes currently seeking prioritisation on 4 December 1998. Its report was passed to Ministers on 17 December.

An announcement will be made when Ministers have completed their consideration of all the proposals and fully assessed the implications for the NHS.

NHS Direct and Walk-in Clinics

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what means continuity of patients' notes will be kept between (a) NHS Direct and GPs and (b) walk-in clinics and GPs. [84374]

Mr. Denham: Walk-in centres will be expected to have links with local general practitioners' practices to ensure continuity of care for patients. For NHS Direct, national guidance will be issued in due course.

Lung Cancer Deaths (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women died from lung cancer in the Greater London area in 1998. [84402]

Mr. Hutton: Deaths from lung cancer (ICD9 162[1]) in Greater London in 1998 are as follows:

2,239 males

1,378 females.

[1] These are deaths that were registered in 1998 and certified with an underlying cause of death coded to 162 using the International Classification of Diseases Ninth Revision.

These figures were supplied by the Office for National Statistics.

Breast Screening Units (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the breast screening units in hospitals which serve the Greater London area. [84403]

Mr. Hutton: The breast screening units serving the greater London area are shown in the table.

Screening unit name	Physical location	Health authority populations served
Barking, Havering and Brentwood	Victoria Centre, Romford	Barking and Havering (and part South Essex)
Central and East London	St. Bartholomews Hospital	Camden and Islington East London and The City
Enfield and Haringey	North Middlesex Hospital	Enfield and Haringey
North of London	Edgware Hospital	Barnet Brent and Harrow
Whipps Cross	Whipps Cross Hospital	Redbridge and Waltham Forest
West of London	Charing Cross Hospital	Ealing Hammersmith and Hounslow Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster Hillingdon
South East London	Kings Healthcare Trust	Lambeth, Southwark and Lewisham Bexley and Greenwich Bromley
South West London	St. Georges Trust	Merton, Sutton, and Wandsworth Croydon Kingston and Richmond

Note:
The unit at Epping, in Eastern Region also currently serves part of the Redbridge and Waltham Forest population

Free Sight Tests

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people over the age of 60 years have had free sight tests since January. [84400]

Mr. Denham: On the basis of activity levels in past years, we estimate that, in each of the months January to March 1999, people aged 60 and over will have received 0.35 million sight tests, of which just under half will have been National Health Service tests. The first statistics to show the impact of our decision to make everyone aged 60 and over eligible for free NHS sight tests with effect from 1 April 1999 will be available next February.

Overtime Payments (Millennium Period)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funding his Department has made available to cover the costs of overtime payments to National Health Service staff over the millennium celebration period; [84392]

(2) what is his Department's estimate of the extra cost to the National Health Service of overtime payments to staff over the millennium celebration period. [84391]

Mr. Denham: It is for National Health Service trusts to decide individual staffing requirements for the millennium period, including any overtime they think necessary, to ensure effective patient services are in place. Enhanced payments are available for most staff groups who work on bank holidays. As a result of the Comprehensive Spending Review, funding for the NHS has risen to just under £40 billion in 1999–2000, a real terms increase of 5.1 per cent. over the previous year.

Surgical Instruments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) deaths, (b) amputations and (c) other complications have been caused by surgical instruments or part of such remaining in patients following a surgical operation in each of the last three years. [84404]

Mr. Denham: The table shows hospital inpatient activity for the financial years 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 where a foreign body has accidentally been left in a body cavity or operation wound following a procedure.

	Finished consultant episodes	Deaths
1995–96	841	4
1996–97[1]	756	11
1997–98[1]	749	8

Research Ethics Committees

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the compatibility of the operations of multi-centre Research Ethics Committees with the EU Clinical Trials Directive. [84347]

Ms Jowell: The European Union Clinical Trials Directive is still under negotiation and the text may change. It is therefore not possible to reach a final view of its compatibility with the operations of Research Ethics Committees in the United Kingdom.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average time taken for ethics committee approval of research and clinical trial proposals in (a) the year before and (b) the period since the introduction of multi-centre research ethics committees. [84345]

Ms Jowell: The time taken for ethics approval of research and clinical trials is not data which was systematically collected before the introduction of multi-centre research ethics committees. An evaluation of the first full year of operation of multi-centre research ethics committees is currently being analysed and will be available later this year.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what review the Government have undertaken of the operation of local and multi-centre research ethics committees since their introduction; and what proposals he has to amend their method of operation. [84346]

Ms Jowell: Multi-Centre Research Ethics were introduced in 1997. Based on evolving experience with the operation of Multi-Centre Research Ethics Committees, and the relationship between their work and that of Local Research Ethics Committees, the Department of Health is currently conducting a review of policy and practice with the intention of issuing revised guidance later this year.

Correspondence

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons a reply was not received by the hon. Member for Solihull to his letter of 18 January on behalf of his constitutent Mrs. Penny Anderson until 5 May (ref POH (2) 5422/22). [84352]

Mr. Denham: I apologise to the hon. Member for the delay in replying. I wanted to ensure that we gave a full and informative response which included details of this year's National Health Service pay settlement. Ministers received a large volume of correspondence on this subject and it took longer than we would have wished to reply to it all.

Primary Care

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for encouraging private sector involvement in the provision of primary care services. [84640]

Mr. Denham: Some primary care pilots include a National Health Service trust as a provider of patient services. Otherwise, general medical services and general dental services are provided by independent, self-employed contractors to the NHS. General ophthalmic services and pharmaceutical services are also provided by independent contractors, including single-handed practices, and local and national chains of opticians and chemists.

Hospital Telephone Inquiry Line

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of hospital telephone inquiry numbers are free phone numbers. [84720]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service trusts may wish to set up telephone inquiry numbers for a variety of reasons and it is up to them to decide whether to use freephone numbers. An individual inquiry line will be set up to meet the needs of a particular set of local circumstances that may be relatively short-lived; the numbers will therefore fluctuate. NHS trusts are not required to notify the Department when they set up (or discontinue) such a line.

Junior Doctors

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many junior doctors worked more than 58 hours a week in each quarter since 1994. [84764]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally. The New Deal on Junior Doctors' Hours monitors working hours compliance on a six-monthly basis according to whether or not junior doctors comply with a range of hours controls, including rest periods. Since 31 December 1994, there has been a requirement that no junior doctor should exceed a maximum average of 56 hours a week actual work. Data collated from regional task forces' reports is as follows:

Monitoring date	Number of juniors' posts	Non-complying posts over 56 hours	Percentage non-compliance
September 1994	27,184	11,347	41.3
February 1995	27,669	8,268	29.9
September 1995	27,994	8,908	31.8
March 1996	27,970	6,579	23.5
September 1996	28,342	6,121	21.6
March 1997	29,482	6,485	21.9
September 1997	29,572	5,764	19.5
March 1998	29,976	4,999	16.7
September 1998	29,584	4,793	16.2

Incontinence Services

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to health authorities and local authorities on their responsibilities regarding incontinence aids and advice to residents in residential care and nursing homes. [84536]

Mr. Hutton: Guidance on the provision of incontinence aids is contained in Health Service Guidance (92)50: Local authority contracts for residential and nursing home care: NHS related aspects.

This circular sets out the continuing responsibility of the National Health Service in the provision of community health services to residents in local authority and independent residential care homes on the same basis as to people in their own homes. The circular also says that Local Authorities, since April 1993, are responsible for purchasing items as incontinence aids for residents they place in nursing homes. This guidance was reiterated in HSG(95)8, "NHS responsibilities for meeting continuing health care needs".

Safety Syringes

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he has issued to health authorities relating to the use of safety syringes; what assessment he has made of the extent of the current use of safety syringes by health trusts; and if he will make a statement. [84537]

Ms Jowell: At present, the use of safety syringes is not widespread within the healthcare sector, due to the limited range of sizes and types available. Consequently, the Department has not issued any guidelines to health trusts on the use of these devices, nor has it carried out any assessments on their current usage.

The Department has issued guidance on the safe use and disposal of sharp instruments, including needles and syringes. Professional organisations and trusts have also issued local guidance.

Glenthorne Centre

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals are under consideration for the future management of the Glenthorne Centre, Erdington. [84785]

Mr. Hutton: The Glenthorne Youth Treatment Centre is managed by the Department and there are no current plans to change this.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place a copy of the job evaluation and grading scheme report on operational and unit staff at the Glenthorne Centre, Erdington, in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [84784]

Mr. Hutton: An independent job evaluation review of the staffing posts at the Glenthorne Youth Treatment Centre was undertaken last year for internal departmental management purposes. The findings of the report are still under consideration and no decision has yet been taken about publication.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the research he has carried out into the possible effects of radiation emitted from television and mobile telephone masts on public health; what were the findings of that research; and if he will make a statement. [84870]

Ms Jowell: In 1996, the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) evaluated an epidemiological study by the Small Area Health Statistics Unit. This study, undertaken on behalf of this and five other Government Departments, investigated the incidence of leukaemia near 20 high power TV/FM radio transmitters in Great Britain. The study found that living close to a transmitter was not associated with an increased risk of leukaemia. In their statement (copies of which are available in the Library) COMARE reiterated their previous advice that there is no firm evidence of a carcinogenic hazard from exposure to electromagnetic fields (EMF) from television and radio mast emissions.

The Department is currently contributing to the World Health Organisation International Electromagnetic Fields Project, which includes health effects of electromagnetic fields and is funding studies investigating possible biological effects from EMF generally. A three-year study in the United Kingdom of occupational exposure to radiofrequency fields, including those from TV and radio transmitters, was launched in November 1998. The Department is supporting this study.

I have recently announced a working group to assess the current state of research into the health implications of mobile telephones usage. The chairman, members, terms of reference and time scale for reporting will be announced shortly.

IVF Treatment

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his holding answer of 8 December and his further holding answer of 1 March, when he expects to provide a substantive answer to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury. [84873]

Ms Jowell: The Government has pledged to tackle unacceptable levels of geographical variations in access to National Health Service infertility treatment and has set in train a programme of work to achieve that aim.

A Department of Health survey of current health authority infertility service provision will take place shortly and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists (RCOG) will complete their third, and final, set of evidence based clinical guidelines on infertility in the autumn.

The Department's survey will enable the cost implications of any policy changes to be estimated. It is important to wait for the RCOG guidelines to be completed and considered by the Department as they will indicate the circumstances in which infertility treatment can be most clinically effective.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of pensioners whose income made them not eligible for income support prior to April 1999 but who are now eligible to claim the minimum income guarantee in (a) Wythenshawe and Sale East, (b) Manchester, (c) Trafford and (d) the United Kingdom. [84331]

Mr. Timms: The number of pensioner benefit units that will become entitled to Income Support in Great Britain as a result of the increase in the Income Support rates in April this year is estimated to be 65,000. This figure cannot be apportioned with any reliability to constituency or local authority areas because the sample size is not large enough. Information relating to the numbers of pensioners in receipt of Income Support as of November 1998 (the latest date for which the data is available) is in the table.

Income Support pensioners at November 1998

	Pensioner benefit units
Wythenshawe and Sale East Parliamentary Constituency	4,000
Manchester Local Authority District	17,000
Trafford Local Authority District	6,000
Great Britain	1,417,000

Notes:

1. "Pensioner benefit unit" means a single person aged 60 or over, or a couple where one or both members is aged 60 or over.
2. The estimates exclude pensioners in residential care and nursing homes.
3. Figures in the table are rounded to the nearest thousand cases, and are subject to a degree of sampling error.
4. Parliamentary Constituency data relates to constituency boundaries as at 1 May 1997. Local Authority data relates to boundaries as at 31 December 1998.

Lone Parents

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents have obtained jobs through the New Deal for Lone Parents in the unit of delivery area covering the Vale of York. [84555]

Angela Eagle: The New Deal for Lone Parents was launched nationally on 26 October 1998 and offers a whole range of services including training, childcare and access to Employment Service (ES) programmes, which help support lone parents on the route to work.

In the North Yorkshire district, which covers the Vale of York, 71 lone parents moved into jobs between 26 October 1998 and 26 March 1999.

Note:

North Yorkshire district covers areas served by ES Jobcentres in York offices; Harrogate; Northallerton; Richmond; Ryedale; Scarborough; Selby and Whitby.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many local authorities (a) do and (b) do not disregard the whole amount of war widows' pensions and war disablement pensions for the purpose of housing benefit; [84559]

(2) if he will estimate the additional cost to (a) central Government and (b) local authorities, if every local authority disregarded the whole amount of war widows' pensions and war disablement pensions for the purposes of housing benefit. [84560]

Angela Eagle: The additional cost to central Government of a full disregard, on a statutory basis, of War Widows Pension and War Disablement Pension in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit is estimated to be in the region of £70 million a year.

Information on discretionary local schemes for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

TREASURY

Gold Reserves

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tons of gold from the national reserves have been sold since May 1997. [84285]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 May 1999]: The only sales of gold since May 1997 have been gold sovereigns and other gold coins in response to demand amounting to some 52,500 ounces.

Foreign Currency Reserves

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the United Kingdom's foreign currency reserves are currently held in euros. [84282]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 May 1999]: The size and composition of the UK's reserves is set out in Table 2 in the Quarterly Report on the United Kingdom Official Holdings of Foreign Currency and Gold for the period October to December 1998, published by the Treasury and Bank of England on 2 March 1999.

Business Link

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the (a) role in informing business of EMU, (b) the budget and (c) publications of Business Link. [83927]

Ms Hewitt: Business Link partnerships—and their equivalents in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland—have a key role to play in making sure that small and medium-sized firms in the UK are equipped to meet the challenges resulting from the introduction of the euro in 11 European countries earlier this year. Business Links will bring their own experience and knowledge of local conditions to bear on this role, but are supported by the Euro Preparations Unit of the Treasury through training, publications, specialist guidance and advice.

EU Budget

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which activities are covered in EU budget lines listed under the heading (a) Social Contacts Between Staff, (b) Early Childhood Centre and other Crèches and (c) Entertainment and Representation Expenses; what were the total costs expected under the last budget for these headings; and if he will make a statement. [82477]

Ms Hewitt: The appropriations entered under these headings in the 1999 budget of each EU institution, including a guide to the range of activities covered by each individual budget item, is given in the "Official Journal of the European Communities", L39, Volume 42, 12 February 1999, which is available in the Library of the House.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average price for a private medical insurance premium for each of the last five years. [84658]

Ms Hewitt: The Association of British Insurers' statistics on UK Private Medical Insurance indicate that the average price of an annual insurance premium, for each of the last five years, has been as follows:

Year	£
1993	257
1994	268
1995	267
1996	287
1997	307

Statistics for 1998 have not yet been published.

ECOFIN

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the agenda of the ECOFIN Council of 25 May. [84684]

Ms Hewitt: The current draft agenda for the 25 May ECOFIN Council is as follows:

1. Approval of the provisional agenda;
2. Approval of the list of "A" items;
3. Preparation of Cologne European Council
   - (a) Broad Economic Policy Guidelines
   - (b) European Employment Pact
   - (c) Report on the Single Market for Financial Services

Fuel Costs (Public Sector)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total expenditure on gas and electricity by the public sector for each of the last three years for which figures are available. [84309]

Ms Hewitt: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. David Chaytor, dated 20 May 1999:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on total expenditure on gas and electricity by the public sector.

The ONS does not publish information for Public Sector expenditure on gas and electricity. It does however publish information for such expenditure by General Government, which is the Public Sector excluding Public Corporations.

This information is published in 'United Kingdom Input-Output supply and Use Balances, 1992–96', and is on each year's table 5. The product numbers are 85 for Electricity Production and Distribution and 86 for Gas Distribution. General Government expenditure on these products is shown in the 'Total Intermediate' column.

The data are consistent with the 1998 edition of 'United Kingdom National Accounts' (The Blue Book).

Both publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

Monetary Policy Committee

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans any changes to the remit for the Monetary Policy Committee. [85208]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I have written to the Governor of the Bank of England confirming that the remit for the Monetary Policy Committee will remain unchanged. A copy of my letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

34. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases the Serious Fraud Office has prosecuted in the current year to date. [83881]

The Attorney-General: In the 12 months up to 7 May 1999, the Serious Fraud Office prosecuted 17 cases involving 35 defendants. Of the 35 defendants, 28 were convicted or pleaded guilty.

Civil Procedures

35. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Attorney-General what steps the Treasury Solicitor has taken to ensure that his Department takes full advantage of the new civil procedures. [83882]

The Attorney-General: The Treasury Solicitor has ensured the availability of extensive training in the Civil Procedure Reforms, both to case officers involved in litigation and to those in his client departments responsible for pre-litigation conduct and for provision of instructions. The culture introduced by the reforms is wholly consistent with the aims of the Government Legal Service for litigation to be resolved speedily wherever possible and for Alternative Dispute Resolution techniques to be used in appropriate cases. The Treasury Solicitor and his staff welcome the opportunity provided by the new Rules to devote to litigation resources proportionate to the importance of the issues raised.

Case Loads

36. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Attorney-General what is the current case load of (a) the Serious Fraud Office and (b) the equivalent sections of the Crown Prosecution Service. [83884]

The Attorney-General: The Serious Fraud Office currently has a caseload of 66 serious or complex fraud cases. In the year 1998–99, of 38 defendants whose cases were brought to trial, 31 were convicted and seven acquitted. The Crown Prosecution Service does not have a directly equivalent section. The majority of the more serious fraud cases handled by the CPS are handled by the Casework Directorate at CPS headquarters. The Casework Directorate currently has a caseload of 212 such cases.

Racial Hatred (Prosecutions)

37. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the number of prosecutions there have been for incitement to racial hatred in each year since 1995. [83885]

The Attorney-General: Since 1995, 30 consents have been granted for prosecutions of incitement to racial hatred under Part III of the Public Order Act 1986. I am arranging for a breakdown to be placed in the Library.

Police Complaints

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General what is the target set by the Crown Prosecution Service for the length of time to consider a report laid before it by the Police Complaints Authority and to make a decision on whether to bring criminal charges; how many reports of the PCA the Crown Prosecution Service has considered in each of the past five years; what was the average length of time taken to consider a PCA report in each year; on how many occasions consideration of a PCA report has taken more than five months in each of the past five years; for what percentage of PCA reports considered by the CPS a decision was taken to bring criminal charges; and what was the average length of time taken to consider a report that (i) resulted in the placing of criminal charges and (ii) did not lead to criminal charges. [84874]

The Attorney-General: The Police Complaints Authority does not submit cases directly to the Crown Prosecution Service. The Police Complaints Authority may supervise a police investigation into a complaint and it is the police force which then submits a file to the Crown Prosecution Service. The Crown Prosecution Service then reviews the case in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors.

The Crown Prosecution Service has agreed with the Police Complaints Authority that the decisions, in all but the most serious and complex cases, will be made within 28 days of the receipt of the file from the police.

There are no readily available co-ordinated statistics for the receipt, timeliness of decision and outcome of decision for cases which have Police Complaints Authority involvement. Such cases are spread across England and Wales. Accordingly, the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Diarmuid O'Neill

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make the report of the Police Complaints Authority investigation into the death of Diarmuid O'Neill available to his family. [84875]

The Attorney-General: The Metropolitan Police conducted an investigation, under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority, into the death of Diarmuid O'Neill. The Police Complaints Authority issued a statutory statement that the investigation had been conducted to its satisfaction. The report produced by the Metropolitan Police investigating officer is confidential.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Probate Registry

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he intends to take to improve the service to people who require to use the offices of the Probate Registry. [84639]

Mr. Vaz: The Probate Registry regularly carries out customer surveys and has a Group Customer Service Officer to co-ordinate its customer service initiatives and deal with day to day inquiries from probate registry users. In particular, the Probate Registry is launching a National Telephone Number on 25 May 1999, which is to be published in all local telephone directories and on all Probate Service leaflets. This should make it easier for people to get through to the Probate Registry on the telephone.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people are employed at the offices of the Probate Registry. [84637]

Mr. Vaz: There are 29 staff in the Probate Department of the Principle Registry of the Family Division.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimates he has made of the average time taken to answer a telephone call at the offices of the Probate Registry. [84636]

Mr. Vaz: This information is not collected. However, the Probate Registry aims to answer incoming telephone calls within the Courts' Charter promise of 30 seconds.

Mrs. Laing: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the cost of the new office of the Probate Registry in High Holborn. [84638]

Mr. Vaz: I am unable to provide a figure for the Probate Registry alone, as the figures available are for the cost of the entire Principal Registry of the Family Division of which the Probate Registry forms part. The annual rent for First Avenue house, High Holborn is £2.3 million and the rates are £524,276. The cost for the furniture and miscellaneous office equipment was £564,768.

DEFENCE

Executive Agencies (Performance Targets)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Medical Training Organisation for the financial year 1999–2000. [85235]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Key Targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the DMTO for the financial year 1999–2000. The targets build on the progress already made by the Agency since it formed in April 1997 and are as follows:

Key Target 1—Academic Success (Quality and Quantity)

To achieve the following academic success rate:

Common Core Course (CCC)—94 per cent.

Specialist Registrars (SpR)—96 per cent.

Pre Registration Nurses (Pre Reg Nurses)—96 per cent.

Key Target 2—Academic Success (Timeliness)

The following per cent. of trainees achieving academic success to be delivered on time agreed with the customer:

CCC—96 per cent. (remainder within 6 weeks)

SpR—96 per cent.

Pre Reg Nurses—98 per cent.

Key Target 3—Individual Medical Services Training

Establish and agree with customers the baseline requirement for external medical services training by 31 march 2000.

Key Target 4—Agreed Annual Training Requirement

To achieve 1.5 per cent. efficiency gain in matching capacity to the Agreed Annual Training Requirement.

Key Target 5—Systems Approach to Training

To ensure comprehensive application of the Systems Approach to Training, to a minimum of 33 per cent. of all appropriate courses.

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Secondary Care Agency for the financial year 1999–2000. [85236]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Key Targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the DSCA for the financial year 1999–2000. The targets build on the progress already made by the Agency since it formed in April 1996 and are as follows:

Key Target 1—The Operational Requirement

From within the personnel resources provided to DSCA by the single Services, to meet 100 per cent. of the requirement of the Commanders in Chief for secondary care trained personnel for operational deployments.

Key Target 2—Outpatient Waiting Times

To ensure that 50 per cent. of Service patients referred to the Agency are offered a first outpatient appointment within 4 weeks of receipt of a referral and 90 per cent. within 13 weeks.

Key Target 3—Inpatient Waiting Times

To ensure that 80 per cent. of Service patients are offered a treatment date which is within 13 weeks of the decision to give inpatient treatment.

Key Target 4—Efficiency

To put in place the systems required to calculate the new efficiency measure defined for the DSCA in financial year 1998–99 and confirm by 31 December 1999 that a baseline value for the reporting year as a whole can be established on which to calculate efficiency targets in subsequent years.

Key Target 5—Quality

The DSCA will carry out the NHS requirements for progress in clinical governance in the current year and, by 31 December 1999, will deliver specific reports on performance in the patients' understanding of treatment, the monitoring of complaints and the incidence of adverse occurrences.

Key Target 6—Military Training

To ensure that 80 per cent. of all DSCA personnel whose medical category permits, are released to receive their respective Service's annual mandatory military training.

Key Target 7—Personnel for Exercises

To ensure that 80 per cent. of DSCA based personnel nominated to established posts in their Service's operational core requirement are released to attend appropriate exercises.

Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency for the financial year 1999–2000. [85237]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The following Key Targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency for 1999–2000:

Key Target 1:

To deliver personnel to the trained strength (or to other training organisations) within 5 per cent. variance from the tasked requirement.

Key Target 2:

To obtain 95 per cent. satisfactory assessments from the employers of NRTA trainees.

Key Target 3:

To maintain success rates of 95 per cent. in Career Training and 97 per cent. in examined Pre-joining training.

Key Target 4:

To reduce the variance between RNR Trained Strength and Trained Requirement to 39 per cent.

Key Target 5:

To retain tasked capacity while operating NRTA within its 1999–2000 cash allocation.

Key Target 6:

To achieve net benefits of £8.1 million in Financial Year 1999–2000 from the partnering arrangement with Flagship Training Ltd.

Mr. Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Dental Agency for the financial year 1999–2000. [85275]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Key Targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the DDA for financial year 1999–2000. The targets build on the progress already made by the Agency since it formed in March 1996 and are as follows:

Key Target 1: The Operational Requirement

From within available personnel resources, achieve 100 per cent. of required professionally and militarily trained personnel, at the specified readiness required for deployment in support of the National Contingency Force.

Key Target 2: Overall Dental Fitness

For each Service, maintain the agreed fitness target of 75 per cent. of all Service personnel to be fit for deployment or such targets as may be decided by mutual agreement with the Agency's customers.

Key Target 3: Treatment Needs

To show a zero increase in the Treatment Needs Index.

Key Target 4: Dental Fitness Category D

To limit the number of personnel in dental fitness Category D4 (those personnel who have not received a dental inspection and charting for 12 months or more) to 14 per cent. of the total Service population.

Key Target 5: Training

To achieve a success rate for Vocational Dental Practitioner, Dental Hygienist and Basic Dental Support Specialist (DSS) training of 90 per cent. within the normal duration of each course.

Mine Countermeasures Vessels

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of the time scale for the mine countermeasures vessels upgrading to (a) Royal Navy capabilities and (b) the long-term cost of the upgrade. [84506]

Mr. Spellar: The revised time scale for the sonar upgrade to the HUNT class mine countermeasures vessels will delay the planned improvement of the vessels minehunting performance. Although the delay will have an impact on operational capabilities, we assess that it is manageable in the context of current commitments. The Department's assessment of the impact of the delay on the long-term cost of the upgrade constitutes internal discussion and advice to Ministers, and the disclosure of such advice could prejudice the competitive position of the Department in negotiations with contractors and reveal commercially confidential data. I am therefore withholding this information under exemptions 2, 7 and 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

NATO Task Forces

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (i) 16 and (ii) 17 year olds are currently deployed in (a) NATO task forces in the Adriatic, (b) Bosnia, (c) Macedonia and (d) Albania. [84719]

Mr. George Robertson: As at 18 May, the latest date for which figures are available, there were no Naval Service personnel aged 16 and 24 Naval Service personnel aged 17 deployed in NATO task forces in the Adriatic. As at 1 April 1999, there were no Army personnel aged 16 and 27 Army personnel aged 17 deployed in the Former Yugoslavia.

No RAF personnel under age 18 were deployed in any of the areas concerned.

Submarines (Firth of Clyde)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 April 1999, Official Report, column 251, if the proposed changes to the current Submarine/Fishing Vessel Interaction Code of Practice are with the Scottish Fishermens Federation and the Clyde Fishermens Federation for ratification as well as with the National Federation of Fishermens Organisations; and if he will place a copy of the proposals in the Library. [84712]

Mr. George Robertson: The proposed changes to the Submarine/Fishing Vessel Interaction Code of Practice were drawn up following discussion with the Secretary to the Clyde Fishermens Association, who was also acting on behalf of the Scottish Fishermens Federation. These changes are now with the National Federation for ratification. A copy of the revised Code of Practice will be placed in the Library once consultation with the associations concerned is concluded.

Captain Robert Nairac

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what protection was provided to Ms Oonagh Flynn following the death of Captain Robert Nairac; [84776]

(2) what is the present whereabouts of videotape and cassette tape given to intelligence service agents by Ms Oonagh Flynn purporting to record Captain Robert Nairac's interrogation and death; [84778]

(3) if he will set out the service career of Captain Robert Nairac, and list his assignments on each of his tours of duty in Northern Ireland; [84774]

(4) what were the conclusions of the internal investigation of the circumstances of Captain Robert Nairac's death; what was his date of death as recorded on the death certificate; and what was his date of death as recorded at the Irish inquest; [84775]

(5) if the four men who were reported by the Irish police to the Irish Coroner's inquest to have identified themselves as members of the British Intelligence services, and to have removed the corpse of Captain Robert Nairac from the car park of the Ravensdale House Inn, were on duty at the time. [84777]

Mr. Doug Henderson: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

WALES

Council Houses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the funds currently held by each local authority from the sale of council houses; and if he will make a statement [84291]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The information requested is given in the following table.

Receipts from the sale of council houses held at 31 March 1998

£ million

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of council houses to be built in the years 1999 to 2003; and if he will make a statement. [84295]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There are no estimates of this figure. Local Authorities' plans for the period 1999–2002 will be set out in their Housing Strategies and Operational Plans, the latest versions of which are expected to be submitted by the end of May.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Housing Associations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he gives to housing associations about their letting policies, with particular reference to the share of tenancies awarded to people who live in the area of the development; and if he will make a statement. [84292]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Housing associations which are registered with the Welsh Office are required to comply with "Regulatory Requirements". This publication includes mandatory standards on lettings policies and other aspects of access to housing.

"Regulatory Requirements" stipulates that housing associations must not impose residency qualifications more onerous than those imposed by the relevant local authority.

Housing associations are expected to adopt their own points-based scheme for the comparative assessment of the housing needs of applicants and to make allocations in accordance with that scheme. Additionally, 50 per cent. of lettings should be made available to nominations made by the local authority.

The Welsh Office recognises that in some areas housing associations will wish to give priority to people living in the area through the points scheme, as a means of reflecting the need to maintain social support.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Brown-field Sites

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that his target for house building on brown- field sites is met; and if he will make a statement. [84357]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: There are no targets for house building on brown-field sites in Wales. Planning policy guidance on maximising the use of reclaimable land for housing development is set out in the first revision of "Planning Guidance (Wales) Planning Policy" which was published on 7 April. In future, planning guidance on the use of brown-field sites in Wales will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Green-field Sites

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce new planning policy guidance on housing for the protection of green-field sites. [84563]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Planning policy guidance on the protection of green-field sites from housing development is set out in the first revision of "Planning Guidance (Wales) Planning Policy" which was published on 7 April. The introduction of future planning policy guidance will be a matter for the National Assembly.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Non-genetically Modified Soya Beans

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what reports her Department has received concerning the efforts of the state Government of Rio Grande do Sul to guarantee non-genetically modified soya bean production throughout their state; and what plans his Department has to give assistance. [84502]

Mr. Foulkes: No one from this Department has been in contact with the Brazilian delegation that met with my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, on 13 May 1999.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend on 19 May 1999, Official Report, column 395.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Reoffending

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the appointment of a joint prisons/probation panel to accredit the design and delivery of work with offenders designed to reduce reoffending. [85232]

Mr. Straw: Sir Duncan Nichol has been appointed as Chair of the Panel. The members of the Panel are in the process of being appointed and their names will be announced in June. The Panel will start work by the autumn.

British Board of Film Classification

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the British Board of Film Classification's Annual report for 1998 will be published; and if he will make a statement. [85233]

Mr. Straw: I have today placed in the Library copies of the Annual Report of the British Board of Film Classification for 1998, which gives details of the Board's financial accounts and activities for the year ended 31 December 1998.

I welcome the Board's timely publication of its Annual Report.

Schengen Acquis

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the United Kingdom's application to participate in the Schengen acquis. [85234]

Mr. Straw: I have today written to Herr. Schily, German Minister of the Interior and President of the Justice and Home Affairs Council, with the United Kingdom's formal application to participate in certain areas of the Schengen acquis as provided for by Article 4 of the Schengen Protocol. The application reflects my reply given to the right hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 12 March 1999, Official Report, columns 380–82. The text of the application has been placed in the Library and the draft Council Decision on our application will be submitted for Parliamentary scrutiny.

Sergeant Virdi

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 April 1999, Official Report, columns 488–89, for what reasons a POLSA team was instructed to search Sergeant Gurpal Virdi's house. [84654]

Kate Hoey: The Metropolitan Police Commissioner tells me that POLSA teams are specially trained in search techniques and in evidence gathering, and that such a team was used in the search of Sergeant Virdi's home because of the nature of the evidence that was being sought.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will agree to meet hon. Members to discuss the general issues raised by the case of Sergeant Gurpal Virdi. [84653]

Kate Hoey: I will, of course, in principle be willing to meet hon. Members to discuss general issues which they see arising from this case. As disciplinary proceedings have now been brought against Sergeant Virdi, and as the Home Secretary is appellate authority for police disciplinary matters, I would not, however, be able to discuss the Sergeant's case, certainly not before the disciplinary matters are concluded.

Police Station Safes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often safes in police stations are checked and their contents noted. [84651]

Mr. Boateng: This is an operational matter for chief officers, but standard practice would be to check the contents of the station safe at each change of shift.

CID (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many black and Asian Metropolitan Police officers have (a) applied to and (b) been accepted into the CID in each of the past four years. [84652]

Kate Hoey: The Metropolitan Police Commissioner tells me that information is not available in the form requested. Information about the total numbers of ethnic minority officers in the Metropolitan Police Criminal Investigation Department is as follows:

	Year to end March
	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999
Detective Superintendent	—	—	1	—	1
Chief Inspector	1	1	1	2	2
Inspector	1	1	2	1	3
Sergeant	9	10	12	12	13
Constable	49	54	60	77	78
Total	60	66	76	92	97

POLSA Teams

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what dates the homes of Metropolitan Police officers have been searched by POLSA teams since 1 May; and if he will list the reasons in each case. [84650]

Kate Hoey: The Metropolitan Police Commissioner tells me that no POLSA team has been used for this purpose between 1 May and 19 May 1999 inclusive.

HM Inspector of Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the recommendations made by Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons in his report for 1998 have now been carried out. [84649]

Mr. George Howarth: The Annual Report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons is not, by tradition, a forum for laying out recommendations, and therefore differs from his thematic and individual establishment reports. Any recommendations are, therefore, informal and do not automatically require a Prison Service response.

The Chief Inspector produces his Annual Report to draw attention to what he sees as the key issues affecting the Prison Service. Ministers and officials pay close attention to the views and suggestions contained in the Annual Report.

Landmines

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about breaches of the Landmines Act 1998; and if he will make a statement. [84625]

Mr. Boateng: I have received no representations about breaches of the Landmines Act 1998. Responsibility for administering the Act lies with the Department of Trade and Industry. Responsibility for enforcement action under the Act lies with Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the police.

Private Prosecutions

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the procedure for authorisation of private prosecutions. [83883]

Mr. Boateng: Private prosecutions require authorisation only where the offence in question is subject to a consent provision. The Law Commission's Report on Consents to Prosecution, which was published in October 1998, made recommendations for rationalising such provisions, which are now being considered.

Police Vehicles

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are currently in place which are intended to reduce the need for high-speed vehicle chases involving the police and car thieves; and if he will make a statement. [R] [84553]

Mr. Boateng: This is an operational matter for the Police Service. There is a nationally agreed Association of Chief Police Officer's (ACPO) Pursuit Code of Practice and work is going forward to implement recommendations from the recent ACPO report on police pursuit driver training. It is already policy to consider continuously the consequences of a pursuit and whether to break it off. Operational measures to avoid pursuits or curtail them include the use of helicopters, the early deployment of tyre deflation devices across the carriageway and tactical containment in which a number of police vehicles box in the target vehicle and bring it safely to a halt.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will encourage chief constables to install black box recorders in police vehicles. [84626]

Mr. Boateng: This is an operational matter and it is for chief officers of police to decide whether to fit recording equipment. I understand that the Metropolitan Police Service has decided to fit such a device in many vehicles as a management tool to promote their economical and proper use. If any of these were to be involved in an accident, the equipment would be able to provide independent evidence of the vehicle's speed. I am sure that other forces will be taking a close interest in the Metropolitan Police approach.

Stolen Vehicles

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by each police constabulary, the number of motor vehicles stolen in (i) 1998, (ii) 1997 and (iii) 1996. [R] [84547]

Mr. Boateng: Overall figures for 1998 are not yet available. The information for 1996 and 1997 has been published in table 2.14 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales 1997", a copy of which is in the Library.

Northern Ireland (State of Emergency)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the legal authority is for the declared state of emergency relating to the affairs of Northern Ireland; if he reviewed the continuance of the state of emergency as part of his deliberations on the renewal of the provisions of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989; and what are the most recent communications he has (i) sent to and (ii) received from the UN special rapporteur with responsibility for human rights and states of emergency. [84780]

Mr. Straw: Article 15 of The European Convention on Human Rights enables any High Contracting Party in the circumstances laid down in the Article to take measures derogating from its obligations under the Convention to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation. Under Article 15, the Government have derogated from Article 5(3) of the Convention in respect of powers of detention under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989. Before coming to a decision in 1999 on renewal of that Act, I took into account all related matters, including the recommendation of the Act's Reviewer, John Rowe QC, who concluded in his report on the operation of the Act in 1998 that there is a continuing need for the statute for a further year. There is no record of any communication either to or from the United Nations special rapporteur with responsibility for human rights and states of emergency since I became Home Secretary in 1997.

Ms Oonagh Flynn

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the findings of the 1984 police investigation into the break in at the home of Ms Oonagh Flynn. [84779]

Mr. Boateng: It has not been possible to trace any record of this incident on the information available. The police records would not necessarily have been retained, in any case, for this length of time.

Criminal Cases Review Committee

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases the Criminal Cases Review Committee is currently dealing with; what is the average length of time spent by the Criminal Cases Review Committee on each case; how many people are employed by the Criminal Cases Review Committee; and if he will make a statement. [84872]

Mr. Boateng: I understand that, at the end of April, 1,176 cases were awaiting review by the Criminal Cases Review Commission and 444 cases were under active review. I also understand that for cases completed in April (other than those which the Commission determined did not meet the eligibility criteria laid down by the Criminal Appeal Act 1995), the average length of time taken, from receipt of the application to reaching a decision on the case, was 332 working days. The Commission has 14 members, some of whom work part-time, and it currently employs 60 staff.

North Yorkshire Police

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on (a) police manpower, (b) ethnic minority recruitment to the police and (c) recruitment of women to the police, in North Yorkshire. [84551]

Mr. Boateng: We have not received any representations about police manpower or about the recruitment of ethnic minority or women police officers in North Yorkshire Police. We have received representations about North Yorkshire's funding settlement for 1999–2000 from the Treasurer of the North Yorkshire Police Authority, from the hon. Member for the Vale of York and the hon. Member for Harrogate (Mr. Willis), which we have answered, but these made no specific reference to police numbers.

K4 Committee

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the business conducted at the K4 committee at its meeting in Brussels on 29 and 30 April; under what title that committee will continue to operate; and with what terms of reference and duties. [84657]

Mr. Straw: The agenda for the final meeting of the K4 Committee on 29–30 April covered 25 separate items. The most significant of those concerned implementing rules for Eurodac, re-admission agreements after the entry into force of the Amsterdam Treaty, displaced persons from Kosovo, Europol's budget, a United Kingdom proposal for a programme of work on mutual recognition of criminal court decisions and preparation of the Justice and Home Affairs (JHA) Council meeting on 27–28 May.

The United Kingdom paper on mutual recognition was given a generally warm welcome as an important contribution to the special European Council meeting on JHA matters to be held at Tampere in October. Confirmation was given that Europol should be in a position formally to take up its activities before the end of the Germany Presidency.

With the entry into force of the Amsterdam Treaty on 1 May, the K4 Committee was replaced by a new co-ordinating committee, with broadly similar functions, established under Article 36 of the Treaty on European Union (TEU). The new committee's terms of reference are set out in Article 36, and are limited to police (including customs) and judicial co-operation in criminal matters.

Matters relating to visas, asylum, immigration and certain other policies related to free movement of persons, now transferred to the First Pillar of the TEU, will in future be overseen by a new Strategic Committee on Immigration, Frontiers and Asylum, set up initially for a five-year transitional period and tasked to issue strategic guidelines in matters relating to immigration, frontiers and asylum; to deal with questions arising from Articles 62–64 of the Treaty Establishing the European Community (TEU); and to give substantive input to Coreper's discussions.

European Parliamentary Elections

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson) of 8 March 1999, Official Report, columns 33–34, on elections to the European Parliament, if the number of votes cast for each group of candidates in each parliamentary constituency will be made known to counting agents, or any candidates present, when they are forwarded to the respective regional returning and calculating officers; and what arrangements will be made for recounts in each parliamentary divisional count where a recount after the completion of an initial calculation has been granted. [84687]

Mr. George Howarth: The counting of votes cast in the European Parliamentary elections will be conducted at the Parliamentary constituency level, though where the same person is the acting returning officer for two or more Parliamentary constituencies, these constituencies may be combined for polling and counting purposes.

Each registered political party and individual candidate will be entitled to be represented at each local count and to ask the local returning officer for a recount before the local result is transmitted to the regional returning officer. For this purpose, those entitled to be present will need to be informed of the provisional local result.

Once the local returning officer has transmitted the local result to the regional returning officer, there can be no further recount.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Industrial Fisheries

10. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has taken to protect wildlife from industrial fisheries. [83857]

Mr. Morley: I am pressing the Commission to propose a closure of the industrial fishery for sand eels off the UK's East Coast between April and August to benefit those seabirds dependent on the stock during the breeding period.

Organic Production Techniques

11. Ms Jenny Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what support his Department is giving to research into organic production techniques in 1999–2000. [83858]

Mr. Morley: We will be spending over £2 million on organic R&D in 1999–2000, increased from just under £1 million in 1997–98.

Fishing Industry

12. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the fishing industry about the marketing of their products. [83859]

Mr. Morley: I most recently spoke to the industry about fish marketing at the Annual General Meeting of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations (NFFO) on 8 May, when I stressed the need for them to improve quality and value added and to make the best use of the fish they catch.

Date-based Export Scheme

13. Mr. Andy King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made with the implementation of the date-based export scheme. [83860]

Mr. Rooker: The European Commission inspected our operational arrangement for the date-based export scheme in the week 12 to 16 April. The Commission are now preparing a report of their inspection which will be presented to their Standing Veterinary Committee.

Farm Incomes

14. Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what long-term trends have been identified in his Department's study of farm incomes and farm support payments. [83861]

Mr. Nick Brown: In the short term there may be a small negative impact on aggregate incomes as the industry adjusts to the recent reforms to the CAP. The industry's long-term future is best secured by a policy of reduced reliance on production related support which the UK continues to press for.

16. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of falling farm incomes on the rural economy. [83863]

Mr. Nick Brown: The rural economy is best served by a competitive and efficient agriculture industry. Agenda 2000 represents a step in the right direction in achieving this. The scope to strengthen the environmental and rural development components of the CAP is particularly welcome.

Genetically Modified Food

15. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to ensure purchasers of pre-cooked foods are able to know whether they contain genetically modified ingredients. [83862]

Mr. Rooker: EC Regulation 1139/98, which came into force on 1 September 1998, requires all foods sold to the final consumer, including pre-cooked foods, to be labelled where they contain genetically modified (GM) ingredients produced from GM soya and maize. In a move in which the UK leads the way in Europe, the controls will also apply to restaurants, cafes, bakers and delicatessens.

Common Fisheries Policy

17. Mr. Flight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about changes to the British quota before the reform of the common fisheries policy in 2002. [83864]

Mr. Morley: No changes are expected in the arrangements for establishing national quota shares of total allowable catches. They are based on the principle of relative stability, which we expect to continue after 2002.

Hormone-treated Beef

18. Mr. Walter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy on permitting hormone-treated beef from the United States into the UK. [83865]

Mr. Rooker: The import from third countries of meat and meat products derived from animals treated with hormonal growth promoters has been banned within the European Community since 1988. The UK, like all other Member States, has fully implemented the ban and will continue to do so until the situation changes.

Genetically Modified Organisms

19. Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on liaison arrangements between his Ministry and the Department for the Environment, Transport and the Regions with regard to genetically modified organisms. [83866]

Mr. Rooker: The statutory controls under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992, as amended, require that before GMOs can be released into the environment, the Secretary of State for the Environment must issue a consent. UK Agriculture Ministers act jointly with the Secretary of State where they have an interest. Both Departments also work closely together on all non-statutory matters relating to the potential impact of GMOs on the environment.

Imports (USA)

20. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions are placed on the import of agricultural products from the USA. [83867]

Mr. Rooker: Imports of agricultural products from the USA—as from any third country—into the European Union may be restricted by import tariff duties and the application of measures to protect food safety and animal and plant health.

Organic Farming

21. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department is taking to encourage organic farming. [83868]

Mr. Morley: In 1999–2000, we plan to spend around £6 million in aid to farmers converting to organic agriculture, around £2 million on organic R&D, and over £500,000 in support for the Organic Conversion Information Service.

Food Standards Bill

22. Mr. Levitt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what responses he has received to the consultation on the draft Food Standards Bill. [83869]

28. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many responses he has received to the consultation on the draft Food Standards Bill. [83875]

Mr. Rooker: Nine hundred and ninety eight responses were received by the end of the consultation period, in addition to the report from the Food Standards Select Committee. Copies of all the submissions will be placed in the Library of the House today.

Cattle Passports

23. Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average number of cattle passports issued each week by his Department. [83870]

Mr. Rooker: The British Cattle Movement Service (BCMS) has produced an average of 48,684 cattle passports per week since it assumed responsibility for this work on 28 September 1998.

Genetically Modified Crops

24. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has commissioned on cross-pollination in relation to genetically modified crops. [83871]

Mr. Rooker: My Department has commissioned several studies related to pollen transfer under its programme to assess the risks to the agricultural environment from the release of genetically modified organisms.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the legal advice received by his Department relating to the imposition of a general moratorium on genetically modified crops. [84729]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 19 May 1999]: It is a well-established practice not to disclose the legal advice received by Ministers. I do not intend to depart from it.

Advisory Committees

25. Mr. White: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many consumer representatives have been appointed to his Department's advisory committees. [83872]

Mr. Rooker: There are 40 consumer or lay/public interest members of advisory committees advising my Department.

Antibiotic Growth Promoters

26. Dr. Stoate: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to limit the use of antibiotic growth promoters in animals. [83873]

Mr. Rooker: The Government supported a ban on the use of bacitracin zinc, virginiamycin, spiramcyin and tylosin phosphate as antibiotic growth promoters which was adopted by the Council of Agriculture Ministers on 17 December 1998. The implementation of the ban, which takes effect on 1 July 1999, will leave four antibiotic growth promoters authorised for use. We are satisfied that these are not related to any therapeutic antibiotics currently used in human or veterinary medicine. However, we shall continue to keep the issue under review and be advised by our specialist advisory committees.

Fur Farming

27. Maria Eagle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to ban fur farming in the United Kingdom. [83874]

Mr. Morley: The Government remains firmly committed to implementing its pre-election pledge to prohibit fur farming and has therefore supported my hon. Friend's Private Member's Bill on the prohibition of fur farming.

Scallop Licensing

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what legal authority the scallop licensing system is being introduced. [84175]

Mr. Morley: The licensing arrangements for scallop dredging, which came into operation on 19 April 1999, were introduced under the provisions of section 4 of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967 (1967 c.84) (as amended).

Food Safety

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what circumstances Article 36 of the Treaty of Rome can be used to ban the import of food products on grounds of public health and safety. [84713]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

The treaty of Rome allows Member States to apply prohibitions or restrictions on the importation of foodstuffs where there is no relevant harmonised European Community provision for this purpose.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Development Funding (Eastern Europe)

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what development funding the Government have provided to (a) Bulgaria, (b) the Czech Republic, (c) Hungary, (d) Poland, (e) Romania and (f) the Slovak Republic, either directly or through the EU, in the areas of (i) the arts, (ii) the environment, (iii) economic development, (iv) education and training and (v) health, since May 1997. [84682]

Mr. Foulkes: The details of bilateral expenditure in these sectors in 1997–98 and 1998–99 is available only for projects with a commitment of over £100,000. (1998–99 figures are provisional.) Expenditure on such projects in areas (ii) (iii) and (iv) was as follows:

£000

Country	Economic Development	Education and Environment training	Totals
Bulgaria	0	0	166
Poland	483	131	0
Romania	413	0	76

There were no projects with a commitment of over £100,000 in the health sector and no expenditure at all on the arts.

We do not have a breakdown of EC expenditure by sector. In 1997, the latest year for which we have figures, the estimated UK share of EC net official assistance was as follows:

1997 Imputed UK share of EC net official aid [1]

	£ million
Bulgaria	1.38
Czech Republic	5.6
Hungary	7.4
Poland	23.0
Romania	12.3
Slovak Republic	3.6

[1] Official aid is an internationally recognised statistic

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Spending Priorities

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his Department's spending priorities for the remainder of the Comprehensive Spending Review period. [85432]

Mr. Nick Brown: In my written statement to the House on 27 October 1998, Official Report, columns 156–58, I set out the key financial implications of the CSR for MAFF. Since then there have been developments which have necessitated a reassessment of spending priorities in order to accommodate:

(i) additional demands on the Department's budget which were not provided for in the CSR. These include the costs of the BSE inquiry and new policy initiatives like the proposed pet movement scheme; and

(ii) the budgetary consequences of not being able to proceed with the sale of the new Convent Garden Market site. The CSR settlement assumed that we would sell this asset in 2000/01 and our capital allocation was adjusted accordingly. We will not be able to meet that timetable.

For the most part we have been able to accommodate the budgetary impact of these developments by making adjustments to the Department's own internal spending programmes. For example, we have been able to reprofile the expenditure on the new marine research vessel by delaying its construction by a few months. We have also found savings in the Department's capital building programme. And we are accelerating the disposal of unwanted assets in order to maximise receipts during the CSR period.

However, these measures alone are not sufficient to contain the pressures on the Department's budget. In order to keep spending within the limits set by the CSR, I regret that I am having to make the following economies in addition to those set out in my statement of 27 October:

(i) further cuts of £2.0 million in 1999/2000, £2.0 million in 2000/01 and £3.0 million in 2001/02 in the Department's R&D budget. These cuts will put pressure on our research programmes and will require careful prioritisation. We shall be drawing up, and consulting widely on, a new strategy for R&D;

(ii) a refocusing of the Department's land use planning work, which is carried out by the Farming and Rural Conservation Agency, to strengthen relationships with Government Offices, planning authorities and the Regional Development Agencies and integrate agricultural considerations (especially the implementation of the EU Rural Development Regulation) into wider Government policies affecting the rural economy and environment. This will produce annual net savings of about £1.0 million in 2000/01 and 2001/02;

(iii) a reduction of £1.5 million in 2001/02 in the Department's grant-in-aid to the Environment Agency;

(iv) closure of fisheries grant schemes. The schemes in question have been in place a long time: harbour grants since 1955 and marketing/ processing, port facilities and fishing vessel safety equipment grants since the late 1970s/early 1980s. They have served a valuable purpose and many have benefited from them over the years. However, in view of the pressures on the Department's budget the time has come to draw a line under these open-ended schemes. As of today, I am closing the harbour and fishing vessel safety equipment grants schemes to new applicants. There will be no further rounds of awards under the processing and marketing and port facilities grant schemes. In all cases, where commitments to funding have already been entered into they will be honoured.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Dispute

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce a compensation scheme for those British firms which have been affected by the United States trade sanctions authorised by the World Trade Organisation; and if he will make a statement. [83315]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 5 May 1999]: There are no plans for specific measures to support industries that remain on the US Administrations revised retaliation list over the banana dispute. The Government want an early resolution to the dispute and are encouraging the European Commission to come forward quickly with its analysis of options for revising the EU's banana regime. As well as a final settlement, we would also like an interim solution whereby the US retaliation was displaced by a form of compensation as preferred under the rules of the World Trade Organisation.

This would lift the burden from those companies that are being hurt by a dispute that has nothing to do with them. It is also important to stress that there was never any intention of extending the cashmere scheme beyond the date on which the WTO authorised US retaliatory action. There would, therefore, have been no guarantee even for cashmere in respect of orders placed after 12 April.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support he plans to provide to firms in respect of tariffs consequent upon the EU dispute with the USA over bananas. [83128]

Mr. Wilson: There are no plans for specific measures to support industries that remain on the US Administration's revised retaliation list over the banana dispute. The Government want an early resolution to the dispute and is encouraging the European Commission to come forward quickly with its analysis of options for revising the EU's banana regime. As well as a final settlement, we would also like an interim solution whereby the US retaliation was displaced by a form of compensation as preferred under the rules of the World Trade Organisation. This would lift the burden from those companies that are being hurt by a dispute that has nothing to do with them.

Manufacturing Jobs

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of manufacturing jobs lost in the UK in the last year. [84372]

Mr. Byers: I refer the right hon. Member to the figures published by the Office for National Statistics in its "First Release of Labour Market Statistics", which was issued by the ONS on 19 May 1999, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what applications for additional gas-fired power station capacity he expects to determine over the next six months. [84340]

Mr. Byers: All applications will need to go through full consideration. It is not possible to put a time limit on such matters.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what extent ECGD support for the Ilisu Dam will be conditional on compliance with ILO standards and conventions. [84885]

Mr. Wilson: We are considering the conditions on which ECGD support might be made available for this project. No decisions have yet been made.

Hearing Aid Council

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans his Department has to carry out a consultation process on the effectiveness of the current powers of the Hearing Aid Council. [84773]

Dr. Howells: We have no such plans. My Department has regular contact with the Hearing Aid Council to discuss issues of concern and I visited the Council last November.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Probate

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Minister of State, Lord Chancellor's Department on what authority and on what grounds the Central Probate Registry in High Holborn has increased its fees for the examination of wills from 1858. [84724]

Mr. Vaz: The increase in fees is governed by the Non-Contentious Probate fees order (Statutory Instrument 1999/688(L)). The recent increases were introduced in order to ensure that the fee charged accurately reflects the cost of the service provided.

TREASURY

Banking Regulations

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Banking Act 1987 (Exempt Transactions) Regulations 1997 and their effect on retail co-operative societies and other industrial and provident societies. [85313]

Ms Hewitt: As part of the general review of exemptions from financial services legislation, the Treasury has been looking at the exemptions from the Banking Act which:

(i) allow industrial and provident societies (I&Ps) to take deposits from their members in the form of withdrawable share capital (WSC), in circumstances which would otherwise require authorisation by the Financial Services Authority; and

(ii) allow retail co-operatives which are members of the Co-operative Deposit Protection Scheme (CDPS) to take deposits in the form of loans from the public.

The Treasury has decided to continue the exemption for WSC, subject to compliance with a code of practice which will require societies to make it clear to those subscribing for WSC that this is risk capital, where such issues rely on the exemption. The Treasury has today issued a consultation document on the proposal, and will make a further announcement after considering the responses.

Following consultation with representatives of the Co-operative Union, the exemption which allows CDPS members to take deposits in the form of loans from the public will end when the current term of the CDPS comes to an end at the end of March 2000. Societies will repay such loans as they mature.

Office for National Statistics

Ms Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has agreed the business plan for the Office for National Statistics for 1999 to 2002. [85314]

Ms Hewitt: Copies of the plan, giving details of the performance targets I have set for 1999–2000, have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

HEALTH

Health Service Reports

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the reports commissioned by his Department since 1 May 1997 from (a) external bodies and (b) individuals on (i) primary care, (ii) acute hospital care, (iii) accident and emergency provision, (iv) nursing and (v) waiting lists, where applicable giving the date of publication. [79611]

Mr. Dobson: Information about reports commissioned by the Department has been placed in the Library. Information about research funded by the Department or supported through the National Health Service research and development levy is in the National Research Register which is also available in the Library. More detailed information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Osteopathy

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to increase the availability of (a) osteopathy and (b) chiropractic treatment in the NHS. [84728]

Ms Jowell: The availability of osteopathy and chiropractic treatment within the National Health Service, as with any other form of treatment, reflects decisions taken by health authorities, trusts and primary care groups about the clinical and cost effectiveness of such services and the priority to be given to their provision in the light of local health needs. As primary care groups have only recently been established, we shall be studying the use that they make of all forms of complementary medicine.

PRIME MINISTER

Public Consultations

Mr. Gill: To ask the Prime Minister what period of time is recommended in Government guidelines for public consultations. [84900]

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office guidelines state that eight weeks should generally be the minimum response time for all consultation exercises, but whenever possible more should be allowed. Where less than eight weeks is allowed, the consultation document should specify why a longer response time could not have been given (for example, pre-determined statutory periods for consultation, threats to health, the pace of EU negotiations or long-standing existing arrangements). For consultations with clearly defined or specialist groups, shorter consultation periods may suffice, depending on the nature of the subject and the scale of the exercise: this is for departments, agencies and other bodies to judge according to the circumstances.

10 Downing Street

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Prime Minister what estimate he has made of total staff costs for No. 10 Downing Street in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000, indicating separately the costs for (i) private secretaries, (ii) Policy Unit staff, (iii) Press Office staff, (iv) Strategic Communications Unit staff, (v) support staff and (vi) political office staff; and if he will make a statement. [80115]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 April 1999]: The total staff costs for No. 10 Downing street were £3.4 million in 1996–97, £4.1 million in 1997–98 and £4.9 million in 1998–99. Estimated costs for 1999–2000 are £5.3 million. Due to changes in the accounting systems it is not possible to give a breakdown of the 1996–97 figures as requested which means that a meaningful comparison with subsequent years cannot be drawn. The cost of the Political Office does not fall to the Government.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Citizens (Deportation)

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the right of a sovereign country to deport its own citizens from the land of their birth and nationality; and if he will make a statement. [80801]

Mr. Tony Lloyd [holding answer 16 April 1999]: Representations of this nature have been made to the Secretary of State by and on behalf of the Ilois community. This is related to issues arising in the judicial proceedings being brought by the Ilois which will in due course come before the Divisional Court. It is therefore inappropriate for the Government to comment further.

Travel Advice

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how frequently his Department is updating information on travel advice to individual countries on his Department's website; and if more regular updates are planned for countries with (a) a political involvement in and (b) close proximity to the current NATO bombing campaign in the Balkans. [81214]

Mr. Hoon: All travel advice is reviewed routinely on a monthly basis. It is updated more frequently when there is reason to do so. The situation in countries in the general neighbourhood of the current NATO air campaign is being closely monitored, and new travel advice would be issued immediately should it be judged appropriate.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department is giving to tourists planning to visit areas in close proximity to the NATO military actions in the Balkans. [81215]

Mr. Hoon: In view of the current hostilities in the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) (FRY) we are currently advising against all travel to the FRY, Republika Srpska (RS), Albania and all but essential travel to Macedonia. We also advise additional caution with regard to travel in areas bordering FRY.

We are monitoring the situation closely, and updated travel advice will be issued as soon as there is any change in the risks to British nationals in the region.

Non-genetically Modified Soya Beans

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports his Department has received concerning the efforts of the state Government of Rio Grande do Sul to guarantee non-genetically modified soya-bean production throughout their state; and what plans his Department has to give assistance. [84501]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: We have not received any such reports.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (Mr. Rooker) gave on 19 May 1999, Official Report, column 395.

Iran

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects the new British Ambassador to Iran to be appointed; and if he will name him. [84741]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 18 May that Britain and Iran have agreed to upgrade relations by appointing Ambassadors in Tehran and London. Mr. Nick Browne will be British Ambassador in Tehran.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what loans have been made by the British Government to Iran in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [84755]

Mr. Hoon: The British Government made no loans to Iran in the period specified. Short-term ECGD cover has been available since July 1998, but so far this facility has not been used.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Ministers have visited Iran in each of the last three years. [84754]

Mr. Hoon: There have been no ministerial visits to Iran in the last three years. The last UK Minister to travel to Iran was Baroness Chalker, who visited Iraqi Kurdish refugees in north-west Iran in 1991.

Commonwealth Students

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many students currently studying in the UK from Commonwealth countries have received financial assistance from his Department towards the cost of their education studies in the UK in each of the last three years. [84743]

Mr. Hoon: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) provides financial assistance to students from the Commonwealth studying in the UK under two programmes; the Chevening Scholarship Scheme and the Commonwealth Scholarships and Fellowships Plan (CSFP).

In 1996–97, 452 students from the Commonwealth received Chevening awards while 237 received new CSFP awards. In 1997–98 the figures were 214 and 79 respectively and in 1998–99 141 and 72.

The figures for 1996–97 include awards funded by both the FCO and the Overseas Development Administration (ODA). The figures for 1997–98 and 1998–99 are for FCO funded awards only as in 1997 the ODA became a separate Government Department (the Department for International Development (DfID)). DfID continued to provide funding to both schemes for Commonwealth students in 1997–98 (240 Chevening and 239 CSFP awards) and 1998–99 (253 Chevening and 210 CSFP awards). Most Chevening awards are for one year only while many CSFP scholars are on PhD programmes, and study in the UK for up to three years.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has held with the Government of the Republic of Cyprus in connection with its application for membership of the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [84940]

Ms Quin: I visited Cyprus last month to discuss with the Government of Cyprus, and with leaders of the Turkish Cypriot community, the prospects for a settlement and progress with Cyprus' application to join the EU. There is also close and regular contact at official level. My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and I have regular discussions with colleagues from other EU member states on all aspects of the accession process.

EU General Affairs Council

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the agenda for the EU General Affairs Council of 31 May. [85220]

Ms Quin: The provisional agenda for the General Affairs Council on 31 May is:

Horizontal Issues

Preparation of European Council, Cologne, 3–4 Jun

European Security and Defence Identity

Institutional Reforms

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Works of Art (Loans)

Mr. Leslie: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many indemnity undertakings were given by departments under section 16 of the National Heritage Act 1980 for the six-month period ended 31 March; and what was the value of (a) any contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time under that section which remain outstanding as at 31 March, (b) non-statutory Government indemnities in respect of loans handled by the Government Art Collection which remain outstanding as at 31 March and (c) non-statutory undertakings to Her Majesty in respect of loans from the Royal Collection which remain outstanding at 31 March. [85354]

Mr. Chris Smith: The provision for the Government Indemnity Scheme is made by the National Heritage Act 1980. The scheme facilitates public access to loans of works of art and other objects for public display made to museums, galleries and other such institutions by private owners and non-national institutions. It does this by indemnifying lenders against loss or damage to their loan. Loans covered by the scheme must be for public benefit. The scheme also covers loans of such objects for study purposes within borrowing institutions where this would contribute materially to the public's understanding or appreciation of the loan. Examples of this are enhancing interpretation or explanation to the public of objects or bringing into the public domain, the conclusions of any study.

In the six month period ended 31 March 1999, the following undertakings to indemnify were given under section 16 by the relevant Departments for objects on loan to national and non-national institutions:

	Number
Department for Culture, Media and Sport	520
Scottish Office Education and Industry Department	120
Welsh Office Education Department	56
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	16

The value of contingent liabilities in respect of undertakings given at any under section 16 and which remained outstanding as at 31 March 1999 is:

Department for Culture, Media and Sport	2,230,770,568
Scottish Office Education and Industry Department	450,749,492
Welsh Office Education Department	43,847,621
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	10,993,527

The value of non-statutory Government indemnities to cover loans handled by the Government Art Collection and which remained outstanding as at 31 March 1999 is:

Value: £6,975,000.

The value of non-statutory Undertakings given to Her Majesty in respect of loans from the Royal Collection and which remained outstanding as at 31 March 1999 is:

Value: £204,729,113.

Green Transport Plan

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the introduction of a green transport plan for his Department. [82844]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 11 May 1999]: Following last July's Integrated Transport White Paper, which set targets for the introduction of green transport plans for Government Departments, we are working to complete a plan covering all our buildings. That plan will be published shortly and it will be made available to the Environmental Audit Committee and to hon. Members.

Media Relations

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many (a) civil servants and (b) special advisers involved in media relations were employed within his Department at 1 May (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999. [84194]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 18 May 1999]: Detailed information on the numbers of permanent civil servants employed in Departmental Press Offices during the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 was provided in a memorandum dated 16 June 1998 to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report, "The Government Information and Communication Service (HC 770), in July 1998. A copy is in the Library of the House. The number in post at 1 May 1999 is 13.

Special Advisers in this Department have ad hoc contact with the media but none are specifically employed in media relations.

DEFENCE

Targets Agency

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Manning Agency for the financial year 1999–2000. [85301]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Key Targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Naval Manning Agency for the financial year 1999–2000. The targets build upon progress made by the Agency since it formed on 1 July 1996 and are as follows:

Key Target 1

a. The percentage of filled Officer billets to be 94 per cent. or greater.

b. The percentage of filled rating billets to be 90 per cent. or greater.

c. The percentage of filled other rank billets to be 88 per cent. or greater.

Key Target 2

The variation of Strength to Requirement to be between zero and minus 2 per cent.

Key Target 3

a. The percentage of Officers receiving the required Notice of Change to be 60 per cent. or greater.

b. The percentage of ratings receiving the required Notice of Change to be 98 per cent. or greater.

c. The number of occurrences where Minimum Time Ashore criteria are met to be 99 per cent. or greater.

Key Target 4

a. To achieve a 5 per cent. reduction in NMA manpower overheads.

b. To carry out 2 Benchmarking Exercises.

c. To achieve a Customer Confidence Score of 60.

Key Target 5

a. Production of Annual Accrual Accounts to be completed by April 2000.

b. To operate the NMA within its 1999–2000 Net Cash Allocation for Operating Activities (at 1998–99 prices) of £10.883 million, a reduction of 3.1 per cent. after specific, additional in-year commitments have been discounted.

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency for the financial year 1999–2000. [85310]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Chief Executive of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency has been set the following Key Targets for 1999–2000:

Key Target 1

To meet Customer requirements as set out in the DCTA Customer Supplier Agreements (CSAs) to deliver:

95 per cent. or more of products reaching Customers within specified supply chain processing times.

Product defect reports processed and responded to in less than 12 weeks.

A reduction in products not being accepted during the receipts process by 5 per cent.

84 per cent. or more of aggregated underlying availability of material.

Key Target 2

To achieve an average 3 per cent. improvement in Unit Cost of Output.

Key Target 3

To deliver Research and Development Projects To Time within Acceptable Quality Standards and within Budget, in accordance with the DCTA Core Research and Development Proposals 1999.

Key Target 4

To deliver Elements of the Modular Field Catering System (MFCS) and CRUSADER 21 Projects on Time and within Budget.

Key Target 5

To achieve Stock Management Targets as defined in QMG's Re-Provisioning Plan.

Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency for financial year 1999–2000. [85312]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The Chief Executive of the Defence Postal and Courier Services Agency has been set the following Key Targets for 1999–2000:

Key Target 1

To meet the Customers' requirements as specified in Customer Supplier Agreements (CSAs) to deliver:

96.6 per cent. or more of aggregated deliveries of Official Mail and BFPO Private Mail to be within CSA specified times.

98.5 per cent. or more of aggregated deliveries of Courier Mail to be within CSA specified times.

Key Target 2

To achieve an average 3 per cent. improvement in the Unit Cost of Output.

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Medical Supplies Agency for the financial year 1999–2000. [85353]

Mr. Doug Henderson: Key Targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the MSA for financial year 1999–2000. The targets build on the progress already made by the Agency since it formed in March 1996 and are as follows:

Key Target 1—Composite Medical Material

To build, completely and to time and within budget, for all 3 Services, 95 per cent. of the programme for kits, outfits and packs, as defined in endorsed Equipment Tables and as directed by the Director Medical Programme & Plans (D Med P&P).

Key Target 2—The Operational Requirement

To meet 100 per cent. of the Service's requirements for stocked medical material and blood products for operations.

Key Target 3—The Exercise and Training Requirement

To meet 98 per cent. of the Services' requirements for stocked medical material and blood products for exercises and training.

Key Target 4—Response to Demands

To meet 85 per cent. of demands for Category B items (common used items with a unit cost of less than £100 and approved by D Med P&P) within MSA's charter standard (next day delivery of priority demands; 72 hours for routine); and 95 per cent. within one week.

Key Target 5—Stock Issued to Stock Held Ratio

To improve the ratio of stock issued to stock held from 1.72 to 1.75.

Departing Service Personnel

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have left each of the services, quarterly, in each of the last five years. [78779]

Mr. Doug Henderson: The numbers of personnel who have left UK Regular armed forces during the last five years is as follows:

	Naval Service	Army	Royal Air Force	Total
1 January-31 March 1994	947	4,051	1,609	6,607

El Shifa

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent of 22 February, on the El Shifa pharmaceuticals factory in Khartoum, if he will review his decision not to release information made available to Her Majesty's Government by the United States Administration on the matter. [84763]

Mr. George Robertson: I am afraid that I cannot discuss intelligence received in confidence from another Government, as is recognised by exemption 1 of the Code of Practice for Access to Government Information. However, as we stressed at the time, we had the assurance of the United States Government that their decision to resort to military action was based on compelling evidence that the El Shifa factory was connected with chemical weapons development or manufacture.

MOD Police

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what powers are available to Ministry of Defence police (a) to search civilian property, (b) to interrogate civilians and (c) to lay charges against individuals; from what legal authority officers of the MoD police derive their powers; what remedy is open to civilians who believe they have been subject to ill-treatment or abuse by MoD police officers; how many complaints have been made against MoD police in each of the past five years; and what were the results of such complaints. [84783]

Mr. Doug Henderson [holding answer 20 May 1999]: Ministry of Defence Police officers derive their constabulary powers from the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987. MOD Police officers have the same powers as their Home Department Police colleagues to search civilian property, interview civilians and lay charges against individuals, in respect of matters that come within their jurisdiction as defined in the 1987 Act. The MOD Police are subject to comprehensive disciplinary procedures, overseen by the Police Complaints Authority in the case of complaints made by members of the public.

Details of complaints made against MOD Police are shown in the table:

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures he plans to take against the possession of illegally held firearms; and if he will make a statement; [84733]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of illegally held firearms in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [84735]

Mr. Boateng: There is no reliable estimate of the number of illegal firearms in circulation in this country.

Government Departments work closely with the police service and Her Majesty's Customs to prevent and detect the illegal use of firearms.

A sub-committee has been set up by the Association of Chief Police Officers to consider the police response to the criminal use of firearms. The National Intelligence Service is compiling a strategic threat assessment of the firearms situation in England and Wales. An Interdepartmental Committee on Small Arms Policy has been created to ensure the structured co-ordination of all Government Departments concerned with the legal and illegal movement of firearms.

The Firearms Consultative Committee has been asked to consider as part of its current work programme what measures can be taken to reduce the illegal possession and use of firearms. Work is also continuing at international level to address the problems of the illicit manufacture and trafficking of firearms, notably through a Protocol to the proposed United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organised Crime.

Hunting

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the occasions on which he or representatives from his Department have met representatives from (i) the Countryside Alliance, (ii) the Master of Foxhounds Association and (iii) the British Field Sports Society since May 1997 indicating in each case (a) the reason for the meeting, (b) where and when it took place and (c) its duration. [84717]

Mr. Straw: I met the Master of the Foxhounds Association on 9 June 1998 in a meeting with him and others to discuss the policing of hunts. The meeting was held in the House of Commons and lasted approximately 30 minutes.

No meetings have taken place between officials from this Department and the Countryside Alliance, Master of Foxhounds Association and The British Field Sports Society.

Protection from Harassment Act 1997

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place under each section of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997; how many and what percentage of prosecutions have resulted in a conviction; how many cautions have been issued in relation to each section of the Act; and if he will make a statement. [84734]

Mr. Boateng: The available data from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database, for 1997 and provisionally for the period January to September 1998, are given in the table.

Number of persons cautioned, proceeded against at magistrates' courts and convicted at all courts for offences under the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 [1], England and Wales, 1997 and January to September 1998 [2]

Young Offenders

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young (a) men and (b) women up to the age of 21 years were sentenced to periods of imprisonment in England and Wales during each of the last five years. [84681]

Mr. Boateng: Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database is given in the table.

Crime and Disorder Audits

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further analysis he intends to (a) make and (b) publish of the crime and disorder audits. [84771]

Mr. Boateng: Over the next few months we will—in liaison with the Audit Commission and Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary—be analysing the audits and strategies produced by local crime and disorder reduction partnerships. We will issue reports on key issues, for example, the consultation process and target setting. The main aim will be to provide the partnerships with advice on good practice so as to help them become more effective.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he intends to give to ensure that future crime and disorder audits contribute to the Government's road casualty reduction strategy. [84772]

Mr. Boateng: The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 does not specify what categories of crime and disorder must be included in the audit and strategy which local partnerships must produce. However, existing Home Office guidance to partnerships makes clear that strategic priorities must be based on the local audit findings and consultation with the community. Therefore, where this process has identified road safety as a priority, we would expect it to be addressed in the strategy.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which issues were most often identified by local authorities and police forces in their crime and disorder audits. [84769]

Mr. Boateng: We have not yet completed an analysis of the audits and strategies produced by the local crime and disorder reduction partnerships. A number of reports will be issued by the Home Office on various aspects of the partnerships' work over the next few months. Early indications are that burglary, car crime, drug and alcohol-related crime, and youth crime are among the issues most frequently mentioned in strategies as priorities to be tackled.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what percentage of crime and disorder audits enforcement of road traffic offences has been identified as a priority [84770]

Mr. Boateng: We have not yet completed an analysis of the audits and strategies produced by the local crime and disorder reduction partnerships. Early indications are that a relatively small number of partnerships have made road safety a priority issue.

Cleveland Police

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 April 1999,

Official Report, column 77, on the Cleveland police, when he expects to be able to publish the legal costs of Cleveland police in the libel case relating to sexual harassment against three Cleveland police officers; and if he will make a statement. [84881]

Mr. Boateng: I am unable to give a timescale as to when the total legal costs of the action will be known since this is the subject of comprehensive negotiations being conducted by the Force insurers.

Immigration and Asylum Bill

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received (a) in support of and (b) opposing the provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Bill from (i) civil rights groups, (ii) refugee organisations and (iii) the churches, indicating the provisions of the Bill referred to in each case. [84530]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Special Standing Committee on the Bill received oral and written evidence from a wide range of civil rights groups, refugee organisations and church groups. This evidence has been printed in the Official Report, Special Standing Committee, Immigration and Asylum Bill (Other Memoranda and Letters submitted to the Committee). Ministers and officials in the Home Office have had correspondence from, and meetings with, a number of such organisations about provisions in the Bill.

Electoral Procedures

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what period of consultation he plans, and with whom, following the publication of the report of his working group on electoral procedures. [84966]

Mr. George Howarth: My Working Party on Electoral Procedures will report in the late summer. My right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary will decide what, if any, further consultation may be necessary once he has had the opportunity to examine its recommendations.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which of his responsibilities in respect of genetically modified organisms will be devolved to (a) the Scottish Parliament and (b) the National Assembly for Wales. [81461]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 20 April 1999]: None. Prior to devolution responsibility for environmental aspects of genetically modified organisms under Part VI of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 in Scotland rested with the Secretary of State for Scotland and in Wales the Secretary of State for Wales. These responsibilities will be devolved to the Scottish Parliament and the National Assembly for Wales respectively.

GM Crops

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 15 April 1999, Official Report, columns 301–02, what are the (a) number and (b) percentage of existing field test sites for genetically modified crops which have been subject to (i) pre-planting environmental audit and (ii) sub-surface impact analysis. [81946]

Mr. Meacher: All applications for consent to release a genetically modified plant must include a pre-planting environmental audit including details of the release site ecosystem including climate and fauna, details of any sexually compatible wild relatives or cultivated plant species present and the proximity of officially recognised biotopes or protected areas. All 373 existing field test sites for genetically modified crops have been subject to such an audit. There is no requirement for applicants to include a sub-surface impact analysis. The farm-scale evaluations will however include a sub-surface impact analysis as detailed in my earlier answer.

Newspaper Delivery

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to introduce legislation to regulate the wholesale newspaper delivery contracting industry. [82195]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We have no plans to regulate the wholesale newspaper delivery industry, but all users of commercial vehicles over 3.5 tonnes are required to have an operator's licence. This ensures the safe and proper use of goods vehicles and the protection of the environment around operating centres.

The Government are keen that local authorities should approach their planning and transportation responsibilities in a well-informed and balanced manner, protecting the interests of local residents while promoting efficient freight distribution in order to support the vitality of the local economy.

Our strategy for Sustainable Distribution, published on 2 March, proposes to develop the concept of "freight quality partnerships", particularly for urban areas. This will involve local authorities, the distribution industry and the local community working together in the development of a partnership agreement. The partnerships will provide a mechanism through which can be developed an understanding of local distribution issues and the associated concerns. Through the agreement, practical, constructive best practice solutions can be introduced which reconcile the need for the efficient and timely delivery and loading of goods and services with local environmental and social concerns regarding noise, disturbance, vehicle routing and pollution.

Fuel Tax Escalator

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what methodology is used to evaluate the effect on the environment of the fuel tax escalator. [83257]

Ms Glenda Jackson: We draw on a variety of methods to assess the impact on emissions of carbon dioxide and regulated emissions, as well as congestion. Most of these methods rely on models which forecast the behavioural impacts of the fuel duty escalator, and use these to estimate the effect on emissions. The models used include the National Road Traffic Forecasts model, in conjunction with the Vehicle Market Model employed by the Department to assess the impact of different policy instruments on vehicle fuel consumption and emissions.

Motorway Lighting

Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimate he has made of the reduction in the number of accidents which would result from providing lighting on the whole of the motorway system. [84539]

Ms Glenda Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 7 May 1999, Official Report, columns 483–84.

Cycling Policies

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many people in his Department are directly employed promoting cycling policies; and how many were so employed in May 1997. [84721]

Ms Glenda Jackson: Work in support of cycling policies, including research, accounts for the whole of three posts and a substantial part of six others. The equivalent figures for May 1997 were four and six. One research post has been transferred to work on walking and Home Zones.

School Budgets

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions to what extent the costs assumed for the area cost adjustment in school budgets differed from actual costs in the last year for which figures are available. [84765]

Mr. Meale: It is not possible to make the comparison requested. It is the difficulty of determining the actual cost which would be relevant to the area cost adjustment that gives rise to much of the disagreement about that adjustment.

Debt

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) if he will publish a list of English local authorities broken down by classification and ranked by (a) outstanding debt and (b) outstanding debt per head of population; [84863]

(2) if he will publish a list of English local authorities ranked (a) by outstanding debt and (b) by outstanding debt per head of population. [84862]

Mr. Meale: The latest information on levels of debt outstanding for each local authority in England relates to 31 March 1997. I have today placed the information requested in the Library of the House.

High-level Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the report, "High-Level Waste and Spent Fuel Disposal Research Strategy", DETR/RAS/98.006, dated May 1998. [84761]

Mr. Meale: Copies have been placed in the Library.

Westminster Council

Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the implications for the Code of Local Government Conduct of the decision of the Court of Appeal relating to Dame Shirley Porter and Mr. John Magill. [84915]

Ms Armstrong: We have made no such assessments. In March 1999 we published detailed proposals (Cm 4298), including a draft Bill, for Councils to adopt new constitutions and for a new ethical framework for local government. The proposals for the new ethical framework include introducing new statutory codes of conduct together with an enforcement regime involving independent investigation of alleged unethical conduct.

Councillors

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance on the circumstances in which a councillor, applying for a discretionary grant from his or her council, may lobby other councillors to vote in favour of that grant. [84920]

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance on the circumstances in which a councillor applying for a discretionary grant to his or her council may put that matter before a meeting of the council for decision. [84922]

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance on the circumstances in which a councillor who has a personal (a) pecuniary and (b) non-pecuniary interest in a matter before his or her council may put a proposal to the council relating to that matter. [84919]

Ms Armstrong: The National Code of Local Government Conduct, published in April 1990, provides guidance to members of local authorities on their conduct, including on the disclosure of pecuniary and other interests, and on dealings with the council. It makes clear that the statutory requirements on disclosure of interests must be scrupulously observed at all times, and that councillors should never seek or accept preferential treatment in their dealings with the council because of their position as a councillor.

In March 1999 we published detailed proposals (Cm4298), including a draft Bill, for a new ethical framework for local government including introducing new statutory codes of conduct which will be rigorously applied through an enforcement regime involving independent investigation of alleged unethical conduct.

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance on the circumstances in which the leader of a council can be regarded as acting on behalf of that council. [84923]

Ms Armstrong: There are currently no legal powers for a single councillor to act on behalf of their council.

In March 1999 we published detailed proposals (Cm 4298), including a draft Bill, for councils to adopt new constitutions, including decision making structures where an executive mayor or other councillors could act on behalf of the council. In parallel with the new constitutions we are proposing a new ethical framework for local government, which includes each council adopting a statutory code of conduct for councillors reflecting the particular decision making structure of its new constitution.

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance on the circumstances in which political considerations can be the prime motivating factor for a decision taken by members of a local authority. [84921]

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance on the circumstances in which it would be permitted for electoral advantage to be the motivation behind a local authority decision. [84917]

Ms Armstrong: It is the responsibility of each local authority to satisfy itself as to the legality of its actions. Local authorities, like other public bodies, are subject to the requirements of administrative law. They may not act illegally, irrationally or with procedural impropriety, and hence their decisions must be made taking account of only considerations which a Court would judge relevant.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance on the circumstances in which legal advice can act as authority for a course of conduct by a local authority. [84916]

Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will issue guidance on the circumstances, when legal advice has been taken based on incomplete instructions, in which a local authority may act on the basis of that advice. [84918]

Ms Armstrong: It is the responsibility of each council to satisfy itself as to the legality of its actions.

Tree Preservation Orders

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many appeals against refusal by local councils of consent to fell trees under the protection of tree preservation orders have been made since May 1997. [84911]

Mr. Meale: My Department has received 1,174 appeals between 1 May 1997 and 31 March 1999 against local councils' refusals of consent to carry out felling or other works on trees under the protection of tree preservation orders or against their failure to determine such applications.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many decisions by inspectors to allow consent to fell trees under tree preservation orders he has overturned since May 1997. [84912]

Mr. Meale: None. The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions decides himself appeals against local councils' refusal of consent to fell protected trees. Inspectors are involved (a) when the appellant requests a Hearing or Public Inquiry or (b) when the appeal raises technical or arboricultural issues. However, in all cases, the Secretary of State makes the final decision, having regard to the Inspector's advice.

Floods (South Lakeland)

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will provide financial assistance to South Lakeland District Council under the Bellwin scheme for costs incurred following the severe flooding over 5 and 6 January. [85311]

Mr. Meale: I am satisfied that financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme is justified in the case of South Lakeland District Council given the exceptional nature of the floods and the damage caused. A scheme will, therefore, be established under section 155 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Grant will be paid to the authority to cover 85 per cent. of the eligible costs above a threshold which have been incurred by the authority in dealing with the flooding.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many firms with fewer than (a) 250, (b) 100, (c) 50 and (d) 10 employees have received a subsidy for taking on a trainee under the New Deal for Young People; [84928]

(2) how many firms in the engineering sector have (a) taken on one or more trainees and (b) received a subsidy for taking on a trainee, under the New Deal for Young People; [84924]

(3) how many firms in the retail sector have (a) taken on one or more trainees and (b) received a subsidy for taking on a trainee, under the New Deal for Young People; [84927]

(4) how many firms in the leisure sector have (a) taken on one or more trainees and (b) received a subsidy for taking on trainees, under the New Deal for Young People. [84925]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The existing Employment Service systems unfortunately do not allow us to monitor the number of starts on the Employment Option by employer. The Employment Service has commissioned its IT supplier to develop an employer database to provide this information.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 4 May 1999, Official Report, column 369, if he will be using (a) off-flows and (b) an absolute fall in the unemployment count in the target category to measure the Government's progress against the New Deal pledge target of moving 250,000 people from welfare to work. [84566]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Neither on its own is sufficient as a measure of the Government's success in meeting its New Deal target, since that target relates specifically to helping young people into work as well as off welfare. Details of the number of 18 to 24-year-olds taking up jobs from the New Deal are published each month in the "New Deal for Young People and Long-Term Unemployed People Aged 25+ Statistical First Release", prepared by the Government Statistical Service.

New Deal (Advisers)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many advisers who are employed on the New Deal Gateway scheme possess (a) a certificate as a qualified social worker and (b) an equivalent credential; and if he will make a statement. [84967]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Employment Service does not collect information of this nature about its staff.

Rainsford School, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 19 April 1999, Official Report, column 444, when he expects to reach a decision on the appeal made by Rainsford School, Chelmsford, against the direction by Essex County Council to admit a pupil, whose name has been supplied to his Department. [84787]

Ms Estelle Morris: We asked Essex Local Education Authority to provide further details on this pupil and their handling of the direction process, along with full information about alternative local schools, by Monday 15 March. Unfortunately, not all the information was received by this deadline. The LEA has provided the Department with some additional material, but the LEA has been contacted by my officials to obtain the remaining essential facts about the case, before my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State can make a decision. This he hopes to do very soon after this remaining information is received.

Community Schools

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment from what date community schools will be entitled to choose to move to foundation status. [85036]

Ms Estelle Morris: Regulations will enable community schools to publish statutory proposals to move to the foundation category from 1 September 2000.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many NVQ Level 3s have been accredited since 1 September 1998; what is his estimate of the number of small and medium businesses which no longer have their preferred NVQ available to them for modern apprenticeships; and if he will make a statement. [84564]

Mr. Mudie: The total number of Level 3 NVQs accredited by the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority during the period 1 September 1998 to 10 May 1999 is 101.

The information on small and medium firms is not available.

Wirral Metropolitan College

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what response he plans to make to the conclusion of the FEFC Inspection report of Wirral Metropolitan College that the Remuneration Committee had not complied with its terms of reference when it recommended the early retirement package for the outgoing Principal. [84540]

Mr. Mudie: The terms of reference of the remuneration committee of Wirral Metropolitan College seek to ensure that rewards are commensurate with performance. The package for the Principal was agreed in January 1999. In March 1999 the Governors were informed that the FEFC inspection of the college had concluded that there were significant weaknesses in the management of the college. The inspectors considered that the Governors should have been aware of those weaknesses at the time of considering the early retirement of the Principal. The FEFC has been asked by the Department to remind all colleges that, in considering any compensation for early retirement of senior staff, Governors should take into account the performance of the individual concerned.

Parliamentary Democracy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures he has put in place to develop the involvement of young people in the working of parliamentary democracy. [84740]

Mr. Mudie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment published proposals on 13 May for consultation as part of the review of the National Curriculum on a framework for citizenship education in schools. This includes knowledge about the working of parliamentary democracy.

We have this year, in conjunction with the DETR, run the Children's Parliament on the Environment involving 10 and 11-year-old pupils from schools across the country. This has provided all pupils involved with an opportunity to develop an understanding of, and take an active role in, the democratic process.

The Department gives grant to the British Youth Council, a national voluntary youth organisation, for work to promote the informal personal and social education of young people. The British Youth Council holds regular Youth and Parliament days to raise young peoples' awareness of parliamentary and democratic procedures.

WALES

Upland Communities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to assist the economies of the upland communities; and if he will make a statement. [84297]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: Upland communities have distinct needs and face particular challenges. The rural dimension is an important consideration of all polices and programmes affecting these areas.

Specific measures to assist upland communities include the major financial aid package announced by the Government last November which was worth more than £21 million to farmers in Wales. It included approximately £15 million for the 1999 Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances (HLCA) Scheme. This meant an increase of about 55 per cent. across all the HLCA rates. Over 90 per cent. of 1999 claims were paid by the end of April.

On 6 April, the Secretary of State for Wales launched a consultation paper on how HLCAs should be reformed in the wake of the agreement on Common Agriculture Policy reform. The results of that consultation will inform the National Assembly for Wales' consideration of how best to meet the needs of farming communities in the hills and uplands of Wales when responsibility for agriculture and rural affairs is transferred to it on 1 July 1999.

Heroin

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his measures to tackle heroin addiction. [84298]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: The Welsh Drug and Alcohol Strategy, 'Forward Together' aims to prevent the misuse of drugs and alcohol, particularly among younger people; and provide treatment, support and rehabilitation for those misusing drugs and alcohol.

The Department has established the Welsh Drug and Alcohol Unit to provide advice and support to professionals working in the field of drug and alcohol misuse, including those working with heroin users. It has funded the provision and distribution of free, bilingual, prevention resources for every age group in Wales, covering alcohol and a range of drugs, including heroin. In response to the concern over the increasing use of heroin the Department funded the production of a specific heroin prevention resource, 'Brown'.

Through the 'Delivering Care, Meeting Need' initiative the Department is supporting two projects involving supervised self administration of methadone in community pharmacies in Dyfed Powys Health Authority and North Wales Health Authority. These projects should provide support to drug misusers while reducing the leakage of prescribed methadone.

The Department supports residential services to provide treatment and rehabilitation for drug and alcohol misusers. In 1999–2000 £1.5 million is being made available through a new scheme to improve access to treatment in areas of greatest need.

The UK Anti-Drugs Strategy recognises that all drugs are harmful and enforcement against illegal substances will continue. It will focus on those that cause the greatest damage, including heroin and cocaine. This will be reflected in the Welsh Strategy which is being refocused to reflect many of the key elements in the UK Anti-Drugs Strategy.

Following the transfer of functions, this will be a matter for the National Assembly.

Planning

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he has taken to improve planning appeal procedures; and if he will make a statement. [84294]

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Eccles (Mr. Stewart) by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Regions, Regeneration and Planning on 31 March 1999, Official Report, column 762.

Following the transfer of functions, this issue will be a matter for the National Assembly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES (HANSARD) ● 1998-99

CHADWYCK-HEALEY Vol. 331 Index pp1-42 (A-ZIM) 10 - 21 May 1999

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 331

SESSION 1998–99

10th May—21st May 1999

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index to the daily parts and weekly Hansard is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes, and cannot, therefore, be used in conjunction with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Contributions by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Significant rulings and statements are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements'.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, res = resolution, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
